During the World War the British Royal Army Service Corps, operating against the Germans in the wilds of Africa, kept official records of the mileage that various types of automobiles could be relied upon to make without having to be abandoned. These records proved that the Ford model T made by far the greatest mileage per car and that it was the only type of automobile to give satisfactory service in these African campaigns. Improvement of road surfaces and not any advance made by the automobile industry in general has been the principal reason for the Ford model T being superseded in 1929 by the Ford model A, and this type being followed by the Ford model V–8 in 1932, and so on.

While road surfaces guided Mr. Henry Ford, the automobile industry generally was guided by mechanical detail. This caused him to lead in the prevention, rather than the cure of automobile failures, somewhat like the sanitary engineers who, through attention to first considerations, have been more responsible by prevention of disease, than the doctors have been by cures of the sick for the improvement in the general health of civilized communities. It was principally responsible for Mr. Ford's phenomenal success as an automobile manufacturer. He satisfied the chief demand in connection with automobiles, and stubbornly kept on doing so. Those responsible for United States air defense have not yet embarked upon this policy in connection with it, as this country has no real air defense.

The fostering of maximum reproduction with minimum improvement naturally entailed the shutting out from production in the United States for this country's air forces of foreign warplane engines and warplanes under license from their original manufacturers abroad.

WEAKNESS OF THE UNITED STATES WARPLANE ENGINE PROGRESS LIES IN INSUFFICIENT DEVELOPMENT OF AVIATION ENGINE SUPERCHARGERS

Superchargers are used on a rapidly growing number of aviation engines today to increase or boost the power of the latter at high altitudes, particularly for war planes, and to maintain an increased, constant power output from sea level to the maximum boost altitude.

A supercharger forces a super, or additional charge, of fuel into an aviation engine, and thereby boosts or increases its power. Without a supercharger the power of an aviation engine falls off rapidly as an airplane or airship climbs, but with a supercharger not only is the sea-level power output of an aviation engine greatly increased but this increased power is maintained up to the supercharger altitude, which varies for the most part between 12,000 and 20,000 feet at present.

Since a full supercharger maintains for an airplane a much faster rate of climb and speed at high altitude, it is recognized as indispensable for warplanes. But a supercharger is also useful in a moderate form for other types of planes for economical service—some of these planes may be for war purposes also.

There are two principal methods of supercharging used, but the results obtained are the same. Mechanically these two types of superchargers are somewhat similar, the rotating element consisting of an impeller or fan which is driven at high speed through gearing from the engine crankshaft. A flexible friction drive is provided to protect the gearing against damage upon sudden acceleration or acceleration of the engine due to the inertia of the impeller. The gear ratio varies from 1:6 in moderate superchargers to 1:10 in full superchargers, the normal speed of the impeller being from 12,000 revolutions per minute to 32,000 revolutions per minute for different types of aviation engines. Maximum impeller speeds often exceed 25,000 revolutions per minute.

In the United States and Great Britain the accepted practice is to connect the supercharger on the output end of the carburetor so that it sucks the mixture from the carburetor and forces it into the engine. This system is used on the American Curtiss "Conqueror", the British Rolls-Royce "Kestrel" and "Buzzard", and the various radial air-cooled engines. The French Lorraine "Petrel", one of the lightest aviation engines in the world for its power—500 horsepower at 14,850 feet, 1.09 pounds per horsepower—uses a 2-speed supercharger of this type.

Most of the French aviation engines, however, are fitted with a supercharger connected to the input end of the carburetor, which blows air through the carburetor into the engine. The new Delage inverted engine has two positive Roots-type blowers which operate on this principle and which maintain the sea-level power output of the engine up to 16,500 feet. The French Hispano-Suiza engines have blower-type supercharges with automatic air-pressure regulators. The French Farman inverted engine has a 2-speed Farman supercharger of this type controlled by the pilot, which functions up to 6,000 feet and 18,000 feet altitudes.

A moderate supercharger gives increased power to the engine for taking off and maintains power to 2,000 or 3,000 feet altitude. A full supercharger maintains the sea-level rated power of the engine up to at least 12,000 feet altitude—the United States maximum. In Europe and Japan supercharge altitudes for warplanes (with correspondingly increased engine powers) are very much higher, going up to 18,000 feet and 25,000 feet. Thus, European and Japanese warplanes can maintain engine output and corresponding performance from sea level to 25,000 feet, which is vastly superior to the capabilities of United States warplanes. This deficiency is a principal fault in the United States warplanes and makes the whole of the United States air forces of the present time practically useless. It should be remedied in all new warplanes contracted for by the United States; otherwise all the additional expenditures involved by these new warplanes will be wasteful. As such remedy entails redesign and reconstruction of the United States warplane engines, it will take at least 3 to 4 years to carry out if the manufacture in the United States of foreign warplane engines is still excluded; otherwise it will take at least 2 years to accomplish. This means that immediate wholesale manufacture in the United States of new warplanes without imported foreign engines for them will be largely extravagant.

As regards boost control. It is essential to provide against serious damage to a fully supercharged aviation engine which would result from the unrestricted use of full throttle and supercharger at low altitudes. An automatic boost control or gate control is used to prevent such full-throttle opening and is controlled by atmospheric pressure or other means. It automatically opens the throttle sufficiently when climbing to keep the engine operating at normal boost power up to its maximum boost altitude. Above this altitude, of course, the power of the engine decreases up to the ceiling of the plane.

In an emergency, at low altitude, such as an overshot landing in a small field or on an airplane carrier, the momentary use of the full sea-level supercharged power of the engine should be provided for to gain flying speed and altitude which will frequently save a serious crash.

The full sea-level supercharged power of the 600-horsepower British Rolls-Royce Kestrel II S warplane engine is equivalent to 1,200 horsepower, that of the 500-horsepower French Hispano-Suiza 12 Xbrs warplane engine is equivalent to 1,120 horsepower, and of the larger 600-horsepower French Hispano-Suiza 12 Ybrs is equivalent to 1,490 horsepower.

The Rolls-Royce Kestrel II S supercharged warplane engine has an automatic gate control which normally functions up to the maximum boost altitude, but it also has an emergency feature—a pilot can "go through the gate", as with the gear shift of an automobile, for a few moments to have the use of the enormous full sea-level supercharged power of the engine, a most excellent form of life insurance in battle.

In conclusion, it is to be readily seen from this question of supercharging aviation engines that commercial planes are unsatisfactory for war purposes and that warplane pilots have to be specially trained.

The aforesaid very backward position of the United States air forces is principally due to the bankers' control of the American aviation industry, which has naturally fostered maximum production with minimum improvement instead of moderate production with maximum improvement. In case of war at the present time, the United States has only quantity production facilities for obsolete or obsolescent warplane engines and warplanes instead of being able to swing into quantity production of such devices at their maximum point of improvement.

The foregoing deals with the question of supercharging aviation engines in the simplest terms. It does not go into such matters as the three-stage supercharger of the French Farman 8V.I. aviation engine for an ultimate ceiling of 80,000 feet, nor with the use of oxygen and similar subjects.

PRESTONE COOLING FOR WARPLANE ENGINES

Warplane-engine development in the United States has been additionally interfered with by Prestone cooling, a form of liquid cooling of aviation engines.

This mixture, as used for the American Curtiss Conquerer SV-1570-type aviation engine, is ethylene-glycol, with about 5 percent water added to prevent freezing.

Advantages:

First. Saves weight, about 0.2 pound per horsepower, or 120 pounds for 600 horsepower. This, however, amounts to a saving of only 44 pounds on the weight of the corresponding French Hispano-Suiza 12 Xbrs., which develops much more power, i.e., 710 horsepower at an altitude of 13,200 feet.

Second. Saves area of radiator by 35 percent, but the tunnel radiator practically wipes this out.

Disadvantages:

Besides obstructing full supercharging of the engine, these are as follows:

First. Engine must be run at a higher temperature (250° to 180° F.)

Second. Power of engine is limited by higher temperature.

Third. Life of engine is shortened by higher temperature.

Fourth. Life of lubricating oil is shortened by higher temperature.

Fifth. Difficult to cool the pistons properly.

Sixth. Difficult to lubricate engine; oil flow must be increased.

Seventh. Engine clearances must be greater; more wear, more noise.

Eighth. Strength of aluminum alloys may be affected.

Ninth. Coolant has more tendency to leak, requiring special gaskets to withstand the combination of coolant and higher temperature.

Tenth. Special rubber-hose joints in the cooling system are required to withstand the higher temperature.

Eleventh. The radiator must be made stronger, using special solder.

Twelfth. The engine cannot be cooled by water in an emergency.

The aforesaid explains the aversion to this cooling mixture for aviation engines abroad. It has interfered with the development of the liquid-cooled aviation engine in the United States for several years.

The hereinbefore set out at-a-glance tables of the world's leading warplane engines and warplanes show the actual position of the United States air forces in detail. The position revealed by this survey reminds one forcibly of the advice, "Scrap the lot", of the late British Admiral of the Fleet and First Sea Lord, Lord Fisher, to the British Board of Admiralty in connection with unsatisfactory equipment and administration of the British Fleet at the time. Lord Fisher had the strength of character to carry out this policy, and did so.

A UNIFIED AIR FORCE

It would seem that the United States Army Air Corps and Naval Aviation would be benefited greatly by being merged into a single United States air force under a department of aviation presided over by a secretary and two assistant secretaries for aviation. This department of aviation should be divided into an air staff, responsible for the air force, and a civil aviation branch, responsible for civil aviation. The air force should be directed by a chief of the air staff. All of the said officials should constitute together an aviation council, headed by the secretary for aviation, within the department of aviation. This department should be able to sue and be sued in the same way as a citizen of the United States may sue or be sued by a fellow citizen, and therefore be subject to this strict control by law.

As an air force is a mechanized force operating three-dimensionally, the pay of the pilots, flying observers, designers, engineers, and mechanics of the air force should be made to compare favorably with corresponding civil aviation pay. In addition, pilots, their observers, and the mechanics responsible for their machines should receive a cash bonus for each hour of actual flying without accident, but with a suitable cash penalty applying only to such bonus in the case of any accident due to them.

The present practice of inviting competitive manufacturing bids for proprietary aviation devices be abandoned, and replaced by the grant of contracts on solely a net cost (including labor) plus a suitable percentage.

A mobile aircraft inspection section should be formed in such a way that intimacy with contractors is reduced to minimum.

The present policy of buying in quantity airplanes for war purposes, and their engines, be discontinued.

The present policy of maximum reproduction with minimum improvement of warplanes and their engines be dropped as beneficial only to commercial bankers and the like.

All gas-filled airships and amphibian planes for war purposes be jettisoned as of no war value and a sheer waste of the taxpayers' money.

The United States might well acquire the license to manufacture at home certain foreign types of warplane engines and warplanes. Payments for such licenses to be an offset in kind against debt payments owed to the United States by the foreign countries concerned.

The type percentages of warplanes in the present United States Army and Navy Air Force is unsatisfactory, as shown by the following:

Warplanes:	Percent of total
1. Fighters	28.89
2. Observation planes	48.89
3. Other types	22.22

It will be seen from this that the largest part of the equipment in planes of the United States air defense consists of observation planes, known as "joy riders" in England, and I believe called "air-taxis" for officers in this country. The present allotment of planes to war vessels of the United States Battle Fleet is 4 observation planes per cruiser, and 3 observation planes per battleship, which provide excellent taxi facilities.

The type percentages of warplanes should be modified as follows:

Warplanes:	Percent of total
1. Fighters	62.5
2. Observation planes	15.0
3. Other types	22.5

The allotment of planes to the battle fleet should be altered to 3 fighters and 1 observation plane per cruiser and 2 fighters and 1 observation plane per battleship. There is a demand to very greatly increase the number of planes of the Army and Navy Air Corps. If the planes be made really efficient, the number need not be so great. A total of about 2,000 to 2,500 planes should form a substantial air force.

As the United States has some very large and wealthy cities to protect, at least nine, special combat squadrons should be formed and stationed in these cities, these squadrons to be known as the "city defense squadrons." They should consist of one-place fighters, specially made with enclosed cockpit and designed capable of high-altitude, combat-patrol service, with a speed of not less than 240 miles per hour at 25,000 feet and war-service ceiling of 40,000.

ALUMINUM OR STAINLESS STEEL?

The practically universal use of aluminum alloys in the construction of warplanes of the United States Air Forces should be either terminated altogether or very drastically curtailed. This usage of aluminum would appear to benefit only the aluminum interests in this country. The action of sea water—salt water—is not favorable to this material in Navy planes; besides, it is very prone to perishing; also it is merely a superstition that an airplane constructed of aluminum or duraluminum or similar aluminum alloys is necessarily lighter than one constructed of steel. In fact, the aluminum plane works out to be the heavier one because of the weakness of the material.

In foreign countries aluminum is being rapidly dropped as a structural element in warplanes. Great Britain has now switched to stainless-steel structure for navy and other planes, and exhaustive tests of this material in completed warplanes have proved its great superiority over aluminum for lightness, strength, and in every other way. Great Britain already has indestructible stainless-steel seaplane floats and flying-boat hulls tested in actual collisions. Machines constructed of stainless steel require much less ground attention, and so effect a great all-around saving which offsets very favorably any increase of initial cost of production. In the United States are some factories capable of producing excellent stainless steel for warplanes, but they are not encouraged. Great Britain has always been suspicious of aluminum for the construction of airplanes.

MR. WARNER'S POSITION

In the statement made by Mr. Edward P. Warner, editor of Aviation, in the committee hearings, there are several references to the aforesaid at-a-glance tables. In the latter part of 1926 he was responsible for an order by the Navy Department to the Pratt-Whitney Co. of 200 radial air-cooled engines of nominal horsepower, each of 400 horsepower, at a price of $9,250 each. Before this order was obtained by the Pratt-Whitney Co., they had had practically no experience of aviation-engine manufacture. They had made only about three engines, for which they had been paid $15,000 each by the Navy Department. This engine was named the "Wasp", and nothing in it was new or superior, or even equal, to other radial air-cooled engines existing at the time. Thus there was really no experimental work to be done. It was really a question of teaching the Pratt-Whitney Co. to make a very ordinary aviation engine, and at a time when they had practically no factory facilities for aviation engines. If in these circumstances the company was satisfied with $15,000 apiece for three engines, the price of $9,250 each for 200 engines was unconscionably high, and certainly included provision that the United States Government should pay in advance for the teaching of Pratt-Whitney Co. to make aviation engines and to equip them so that they would become an unnecessary competitor with a mediocre article of an older aviation-engine manufacturer in the United States—the Wright Co.

The circumstances make clear a situation in which a company promoter or stock speculator would be provided with a sort of manna from heaven, upon which he could transform very little capital into enormous profits.

In a period of about a couple of years or so the Wasp engine price became reduced to less than $5,000 each, due principally to the fact that nothing was done to supply the Navy Department with a better engine for war purposes than was necessary for an ordinary commercial plane. In other words, the practice was to reproduce both for war purposes and commercial purposes exactly the same engine as many times as possible so as to bring in as large a return as could be obtained for the capital invested.

Thus the figures for warplane engines of the United States set out in the preceding tables are fully confirmed. These figures show no special warplane engine development for the United States.

At the time that the Pratt-Whitney Co. aviation-engine enterprise was so colossally boosted by the Navy Department there existed in Great Britain an aviation engine known as the "Bristol Jupiter", behind which there was a number of years of warplane service experience and which was in all respects a superior engine to the said Pratt-Whitney Wasp. A responsible American firm had laid themselves out to manufacture this engine in the United States, but they were given practically no support to do so.

The Bristol Jupiter engine is manufactured under license in at least six countries outside of England. Incidentally, in 1932 that fine American naval flyer, Capt. Alford Williams, D.F.C., owned a Curtiss Hawk with a Bristol Jupiter engine. All Colonel Lindbergh's great flights have been made with Wright engines.

Mr. Warner says that the British Government paid about the same price as the United States Government for radial engines. This may be so, but the British engines maintained power up to 15,000 feet at the time, whereas the Pratt-Whitney Wasp dropped about 50 horsepower at 4,000 feet at this time.

The Pratt-Whitney should not have been given the said order for 200 engines. It would have served the Navy Department better to have placed an order at the time for only 50 engines, as would be the practice in the strictly supervised foreign countries.

Mr. Warner's qualifications for recommending or approving any warplane engine orders were well illustrated by his own description in the July 1932 issue of Aviation of the Boeing XP-936 pursuit plane of the United States Army Air Corps that its "general appearance suggests something over 220 miles per hour at low altitudes." Just how this shows efficiently in a pursuit ship is very obscure. And what speed would the general appearance suggest at the recognized war-service altitudes of 15,000 feet and 20,000 feet?

It would seem that he was then in sympathy with Maj. Louis K. Hibb's ridiculous theory that the United States air forces should operate by "hedge hopping", published in the Field Artillery Journal in 1933. One reason prompting this being that then American warplanes would blend with the ground and so escape being attacked. No idea of attacking enemy planes here, merely running away from them.

Mr. Warner refers to the French Delage G.V.I.S., 450-horsepower aviation engine as merely a racing-plane engine, and ignores the fact that this engine maintains that power up to the altitude of 16,500 feet which is altogether too high an altitude for racing planes under usual circumstances. As the French air forces consist of many thousands of warplanes, it is quite possible that Mr. Warner has not noticed the Delage engine amongst them to any great degree.

He also refers to the fact that there is more than one liquid used for cooling aviation engines. This is barely noticeable abroad, but in the United States, Prestone cooling is practiced. Although Mr. Warner thinks this system a great tribute to the country, there is shown hereinbefore the exact value of Prestone cooling for warplane engines. He has informed the committee that Mr. MacKenzie-Kennedy is the only person who classes planes by horsepower in the aforesaid tables. This confirms that he has little recollection of them. In the tables referred to, planes are not classed by horsepower, as will be seen from them. The only table that is classed by horsepower is the warplane-engine table which is reasonable. By referring to his magazine, Aviation, for April 1934, we find that Mr. Warner is now using a similar classification for American airplanes, but he refuses to vouch for their accuracy.

He refers to the British Hawker Super-Fury fighter as not yet out of the development stage. It was last year a unit of the Royal Air Force. Mr. Warner's notions with regard to rapid climbing for planes seem to be confined to something to do with crossing the English Channel, but, as the great French war ace, Guynemer, always emphasized, it was exceedingly convenient to possess this facility in air combat. The committee is referred to the book—Guynemer, Knight of the Air—published by Harvard University Press.

Mr. Warner skipped the fact that the Pratt-Whitney Wasp engines are in several models of more or less horsepower, and so he conveys an exaggerated impression of improvement. The United States Army and Navy programs of about 340 and 225 planes for the 6 months ending December 1933 and 18 months ending December 1933, respectively, support the impression that the said Pratt-Whitney 400-horsepower model was being supplied quite recently.

It appears that Mr. Warner very materially champions the Pratt-Whitney concern, both by his statements and his silences. It seems, however, that Pratt-Whitney is merely an incubus on United States air defense. It only duplicates unnecessarily the Wright engine factory. Pratt-Whitney might with benefit to the country be made to manufacture a good foreign water-cooled engine under license obtained by the Nation, as aforesaid.

Aviation trade periodicals still have a limited circulation, and this enhances the value of a consistently big advertiser. Thus, members of the staff of such journals are not called upon abroad for information likely to operate against their advertisers.

The aforesaid is the extension of my remarks on March 6 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (pp. 3864–3869). I have also had other Government experts on aeronautics check the accuracy of these charts of warplane engines and warplanes and they have stated that they are conservative but accurate.

THE PRESIDENT WANTS COMPETITION

I insert in the record at this time statements issued by President Roosevelt March 8 and March 10, 1934, showing his attitude on this question at this time, and particularly calling to the attention of Congress his ideas on this question as follows:

"Any combinations, agreements, or understandings intended to prevent free competitive bidding should be prevented and such action should be a basis for cancelation of contracts."

The President further states:

"Such safeguards should be provided as will prevent the evil practices of excessive salaries, unearned bonuses, and illegitimate personal-expense accounts detrimental to the interests of legitimate stockholders and the public."

The President further emphasizes:

"Real competition between the manufacturing companies will stimulate inventive genius, and should give to our people safer and better equipment, both for commercial and military purposes."

These recommendations should be written into law governing future procurement of aircraft for the Army and Navy. The full text of the President's letters of March 8 and 10 is as follows:

PRESIDENT'S LETTER OF MARCH 8, 1934, ON AIR MAIL

President Roosevelt's letter urging return of the air mail to private carriers, addressed to Chairmen MCKELLAR and MEAD, of the Senate and House Committees on Post Offices and Post Roads, and Senator BLACK, of the Air Mail Investigating Committee, follows:

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Our domestic air-mail contracts have been canceled. The Army Air Corps is temporarily carrying the air mail. I believe we should make new contracts with commercial air carriers as soon as possible to carry the greater part of our air mail.

To protect the public interest and to provide for new contracts on a basis of honest payment for honest service, I suggest new legislation on this subject.

ENCOURAGES INDUSTRY

We must avoid the evils of the past and at the same time encourage the sound development of the aviation industry.

I suggest that new air-mail contracts be let for a period not exceeding 3 years on full, open, and fair competitive bidding, with a limitation of the rate of compensation above which no contract will be awarded.

Any combinations, agreements, or understandings, intended to prevent free competitive bidding should be prevented and such action should be a basis for cancelation of contracts.

In order that the bidding shall be really competitive, I suggest that in determining the specifications for proper equipment, only speed, useful load capacity, and safety factors and safety devices should be considered.

So that all companies desiring to qualify and bid may have an opportunity fully to prepare themselves for actual service, I suggest that after the contract is awarded a period of not longer than 6 months shall be allowed the successful bidder to qualify under the terms of the law and the bid.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION SUPERVISION URGED

It is my judgment that 6 months before expiration of the contracts made under competitive bidding the Interstate Commerce Commission should pass upon the question of public convenience and necessity of air-mail routes, and thereafter fix a maximum rate of air-mail pay on the routes designated, subject, of course, to equipment specifications to be laid down.

I suggest that the proposed law prohibit the award of an air-mail contract to any company having connections with subsidiaries, affiliates, associates, or holding companies, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership, interlocking directorates, interlocking officers, or otherwise, if said subsidiaries, affiliates, associates, or holding companies are engaged, directly or indirectly, in the operation of competitive routes or in the manufacturing of aircraft, or other materials or accessories used generally in the aviation industry.

MAY BAR CONTRACT SALES

No air-mail contract should be sublet or sold to any other contracting company nor should a mail contractor be allowed to merge or consolidate with another company holding an air-mail contract. Obviously, also, no contract should be made with any companies, old or new, any of whose officers were party to the obtaining of former contracts under circumstances which were clearly contrary to good faith and public policy.

Such safeguards should be provided as will prevent the evil practices of excessive salaries, unearned bonuses, and illegitimate personal expense accounts detrimental to the interests of legitimate stockholders and the public.

Public safety calls for pilots of high character and great skill. The occupation is a hazardous one. Therefore, the law should provide for a method to fix maximum flying hours, minimum pay, and a system for retirement or annuity benefits.

WANTS SOUND POLICY

Enactment of legislation along the lines suggested will establish a sound, stable, and permanent air-mail policy. The knowledge that the Interstate Commerce Commission, a judicial body, will hereafter regulate air transportation routes and air-mail pay will remove uncertainty as to routes and mail pay.

Such legislation will relieve air transport companies from paralyzing monopolistic control which has heretofore often influenced them to buy planes and other equipment from associates and affiliates.

Real competition between the manufacturing companies will stimulate inventive genius, and should give to our people safer and better equipment both for commercial and military purposes.

I am sending letters similar to this to Representative MEAD, Chairman House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to Senator BLACK.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S LETTER OF MARCH 10, 1934, ORDERING SECRETARY OF WAR DERN TO CURTAIL ARMY MAIL FLIGHTS

Following is the text of President Roosevelt's letter to Secretary Dern, ordering curtailment of the Army air-mail service:

"On February 9 the Army Air Corps was given the temporary assignment of carrying the air mail and commenced the actual carrying on February 20. This action was taken on the definite assurance given me that the Army Air Corps could carry the mail.

DEATHS MUST STOP

"Since that time 10 Army flyers have lost their lives. I appreciate that only 4 of these were actually flying the mail, but the others were training or were proceeding to the mail route. I appreciate also that almost every part of the country has been visited during this period by fog, snow, and storms and that serious accidents, taking even more lives, have occurred at the same time in passenger and commercial aviation.

"Nevertheless, the continuation of deaths in the Army Air Corps must stop.

"We all know that flying under the best of conditions is a definite hazard, but the ratio of accidents has been far too high during the past 3 weeks.

"Will you, therefore, please issue immediate orders to the Army Air Corps stopping all carrying of air mail, except on such routes, under such weather conditions, and under such equipment and personnel conditions as will insure, as far as the utmost care can provide, against constant recurrence of fatal accidents?

"This exception includes, of course, full authority to change or modify schedules.

"As you know, the period of emergency will end as soon as the necessary legislation has been enacted and new contracts can be obtained. I am writing once more to the chairmen of the House and Senate committees urging speed in the enactment of legislation.

ASKS BETTER TRAINING

"Because military lessons have been taught us during the past few weeks, I request that you consult immediately with the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Commerce in order that additional training may be given to Army air pilots through cooperation with private companies who later on will fly the mails. This should include, of course, training in cross-country flying, in night flying, blind flying, and instrument flying.

"I am sending a copy of this letter to the Postmaster General in order that he may make arrangements with you. He will, of course, modify the instructions given on February 9 to conform with the Army plans."

Following is the text of the President's letter to Senator MCKELLAR and Representative MEAD, Chairmen of the Senate and House Post Office Committees, urging prompt passage of his air-mail program:

"I am enclosing a copy of a letter which I have just sent to the Secretary of War.

"In this letter, I asked that he issue immediately orders to the Army Air Corps stopping all carrying of air mail, except on such routes, under such weather conditions, and under such equipment and personnel conditions as will insure, as far as the utmost human care can provide, against constant recurrence of fatal accidents.

"This is an added reason for the desirability of the enactment of the legislation which I proposed to your committee a few days ago. I hope much that this legislation can be taken up as soon as possible in order that new bids for new contracts for carrying the mail may be invited."

RADIOBROADCASTS ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

I also insert in the RECORD at this time the radiobroadcasts of Mr. Boake Carter of Thursday, March 15, 1934, and Friday, March 16, 1934, over the Columbia Broadcasting System, which accurately give a disinterested viewpoint of the question under consideration:

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1934, 7:45 TO 8 P.M.

"It seems that airy matters about the air are in fashion today, but the whole aviation controversy could not, simply could not, have gone by without a good thrilling spy story cropping up into it somewhere. The gentleman who found the—er—spy—is W. D. MCFARLANE, a scrapping, two-fisted Representative from the Thirteenth Congressional District of Texas, where men are men and women say 'Yes, boss.' The spy is middle-aged, ruddy-faced C. J. H. MacKenzie-Kennedy, ex-major of the British Army.

"A House resolution was introduced by MCFARLANE, requesting that the ruddy-faced major be examined, picked apart, held up for inspection, and probed to see whether he was a big spy, or just a little spy, and whether he wasn't a spy at all. And it grew out of the House Naval Affairs Committee hearing into the naval aviation, a committee of which 'Texas' MCFARLANE was a member and a fighting minority of one. The committee hearing had dragged on for a number of days. Only Navy witnesses appeared, ex-Navy officials and representatives of corporations doing business with the Navy on aviation matters and getting a handsome rake-off through lack of competitive bidding. Few independent witnesses, if any, appeared. At all times two or more Navy officers were present at the hearings, directly assigned there by the Navy Department, and they were helpful in jumping up and down, jack-rabbit fashion, to interject questions here, interrupt a witness' answer there—whenever the testimony began to grow a little too warm for general comfort.

"The fiery MCFARLANE waged a lone and futile battle to get down an accurate picture of the facts—a fact which his Texas constituents might chalk up to his credit as an able Representative of theirs—but he was, as has been said, only a fighting minority of one. It is a picture that compares little favorably when stacked alongside the well-oiled, cooperative manner in which the House Military Affairs Committee pulled the lid off the Army-aviation kettle. But here entered the middle-aged, ruddy-faced British ex-major. He is the inventor of a tail gun for planes, a weapon that may be mounted in the tail of a ship and fired at a pursuing enemy, without running the risk of shooting off the rudder of your own ship. He made no bones about it, but said he was on the scene in the National Capitol to see that the Navy didn't pinch his tail gun without his permission. He also had with him an amazing series of charts, listing every motor, every plane, all the armaments of every fighting plane, comparisons of horsepower, performance, equipment, everything, of every major nation in the world. His charts attracted attention, naturally.

"Experts shut themselves up, studied his charts, broke them down, and emerged to say that his charts, which showed the United States was away behind in military and naval aviation, were correct, but he had been too conservative. Representative MCFARLANE made an effort to introduce the charts at the committee hearing. The gentlemen of the Navy scampered about and went into a huddle. The figures blew all the story they had been so careful to build up through favorable testimony, to smithereens. So what to do? Ah! Call him a spy. Drop the hint here and there. The seeds will grow. Numerous members of the committee bit. Bewildered Mackenzie-Kennedy was dubbed a spy. Over here to steal aviation secrets was he. (Although nobody thought to look at his chart, which showed there wasn't much to steal with Uncle Sam's military ships behind everyone else.)

"For quite a while the ruddy-faced major was taken for a verbal ride. But the wily MCFARLANE—these Scots are canny people—waited until the hullabaloo had subsided and then said, 'Very well; if he's a spy, let's have him up here and go over him with a fine-tooth comb and pick him to pieces.' Just the thing the Navy didn't want. For inevitably, in the fine-tooth combing the ruddy-faced ex-major, the questioning would have swerved round to the chart, which didn't show such complimentary figures to the Navy's air performance. So the committee hastily wound up its investigation one day early, gave the admirals a pat on the back, congratulated them on their aviation progress, and reported that all the charges about collusion on matters of contracts were wrong.

"The following day mild-mannered Comptroller General McCarl produced reports of his office showing, from 1926 to 1930, 90 percent of all Navy aircraft procurement had been let in violation of Aircraft Act of 1926, but as yet nobody has been after Comptroller General for being a big, bad spy, for shooting holes through the Navy's story.

"But Congressman MCFARLANE didn't give up. If his resolution is acted upon, and the ruddy-faced ex-major of the British Army is minutely examined on matters of spying, MCFARLANE will get his story into the record. So there is method, deep method, in his spy resolution. It demonstrates that if the administration is going to overhaul all the military aviation and put it on a sounder base, it should do the same with naval aviation. One lone Congressman, no matter how hard he may scrap, cannot get very far in seeing to it that American principles are protected and the tax dollar spent according to law, not without law."

FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 1934, 7:45 TO 8 P.M.

"Two famous pilots spoke into a battery of microphones at the Senate committee hearing on the administration's bill to return the air mail to private companies and in most instances they agreed that the Army is not equipped to handle the mail job and that the job should be turned back to private airlines. Colonel Lindbergh handled himself in excellent fashion under the questioning of Senators, whose queries were ofttimes tinged with partisanship. When questions of ethics, or hypothetical legal questions, were put to him he sensibly remarked that he was not equipped to answer, or that he was no lawyer. On technical questions and matters of organization, his replies were clear-cut, decisive, and easy to follow. Clarence Chamberlin likewise chalked up a clear-cut record. On the question of whether the contracts should have been canceled, Lindbergh again repeated his statement of it being 'unjust.' Chamberlin contented himself with a mild, 'It was unfortunate that it was necessary', somewhat in contrast to a previous vehement statement defending the administration's action. Pilot Chamberlin also added an accusation that two major airlines did not buy up-to-the-minute equipment. Both agreed the section of the proposed bill which would refuse permission to all companies to bid on new contracts unless they waived all claims in connection with the annulments was unfair. Lindbergh tagged it as 'contrary to the American spirit of liberty.' Chamberlin mentioned the stockholders of present companies and said it wasn't fair to make them the unwitting goats and suggested that if the old companies can reorganize themselves within the requirements of the bill, then they should be given the right to bid. It would seem that both these gentlemen are on sound ground in that argument.

"To leave that clause in the bill would be a backhanded admission by the administration that it had a guilty conscience over the cancelations. Whatever legal rights the companies have insofar as claims for damages they may bring forward is a matter for the law courts to decide. Colonel Lindbergh insisted that contracts should not have been canceled without trial—as he had done all along. Many feel likewise. Others feel the President did the only thing left to do. It seems surely that the Colonel bases his protest almost chiefly on technicalities. Testimony produced showed perfectly clearly that there had been unpleasant abuses. The abuses were made of public funds. The public funds were granted by the Government. Inasmuch as it was more of a public morals and policy question than anything else, it seems there was no course left to the White House other than the one it took.

"Both men agreed that operating companies and manufacturing companies should be separated, and thus head off any further possibilities of operating companies favoring manufacturing affiliates all the time for its equipment. Both men also agreed that it was no place for the Interstate Commerce Commission to supervise air traffic. Their agreement is simple for any layman to understand—for one more, under such conditions, it would be a case of ground men running an air outfit. Both pilots echo one another in saying that a separate commission should be set up to regulate American commercial aviation.

"But Chamberlain went one step farther and said he was against a unified air system, with Army, Navy, and Commerce under the one head. Against that there is the recommendation of Brigadier General Mitchell that there should be a department of aeronautics, combining all Government aviation activities, civil and military. But certainly, the Interstate Commerce Commission has no place in the bill. Both flyers agreed that the Army does different types of work and therefore couldn't handle the mail. That the Air Corps didn't have enough time to prepare. But neither went on beyond that to say that that was no excuse, if the country is to have a properly prepared air-defense system.

"General Mitchell put the whole affair in a nutshell yesterday. 'The Army', he said, 'has equipment that's been designed to operate near an army on the ground. The air mail is meant for cross-country flying. One group has been asked to do the other's job and they're just up in the air. They ought to know how to fly each other's equipment.' Incidentally neither Chamberlin nor Lindbergh think they should—but, comparing the two viewpoints, it would seem that General Mitchell's theory is the more logical. 'For', said the General, 'the Army's been restricted to flying from aerodrome to aerodrome in good weather. If a man can't fly through bad weather, he cannot fly at all in war. The whole game of the future is going to be bad-weather flying, and when attacks are made they'll be done through all weathers.'

"With the Lindbergh and Chamberlin theory, of giving no cross-country experience with commercial flyers, Army pilots will certainly never get any—under the present system of mass troop movement under which it operates. Colonel Lindbergh reviewed the general air picture by saying, commercially, we're far better than Europe. Racing ships, Europe's ahead of us. In air-cooled motors, we're ahead of Europe. With liquid-cooled motors, Europe's ahead of us. In general military flying, he expressed no opinion.

"An answer is provided for any citizen who cares to find out for himself, in a most complete set of charts printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 6, inserted by Congressman MCFARLANE, of Texas. The records—which military experts have studied and verfied as correct—are somewhat pitiful when it comes to our own military aviation. But all in all the chief thing which stood out in today's testimony of these two famous pilot witnesses was that they made some valuable technical recommendations and warnings concerning the administration's bill to return the air mail to private carriers. Their suggestions were 'full of meat', to use the vernacular. The committee would gain much and lose nothing by studying what these two gentlemen had to say and comparing them with what Mitchell had to say yesterday. For it seems to me that the whole question involved now has grown to be something far bigger than just a question of air mail. And that is, What's to be the general air policy of the country from now on? If the air mail's all fixed up nicely and everybody's happy again and military aviation falls back into its old rut, then not a real honest step forward will have been taken. If military aviation is pepped up, and commercial is allowed to fall by the wayside, then the situation's the same.

"The question, paramount above all—the one at which to aim eventually as the ultimate goal, it seems—is to arrive at the point out of all these investigations, where aviation will be set aside, in its own department, under its own men, who understand its problems, and from whence it can continue to go onward and upward to greater efficiency all round. That, of course, is an executive function of the Government and may be the thing the President is aiming for."

EXPERIMENTAL MONEY USED TO DEVELOP COMMERCIAL PLANES AND ENGINES

ALL SUCH IMPROVEMENTS SHOULD BELONG TO THE GOVERNMENT

The Government has paid out hundreds of thousands of dollars since the Aircraft Act of 1926, principally to subsidiaries of the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation and the Curtiss-Wright Corporation, under contract for the development of warplanes and warplane engines. Had the Government officials in the Army and Navy Departments had the Government's interest at heart they would have provided by contract that all such money so expended in experimental contracts on warplanes and warplane engines, that such drawings, designs, plans, patents, and improvements developed through the use of Government money, would remain the exclusive property of the United States Government to be used by them as they saw fit; however, we find that these same Government officials have not protected the rights of the taxpayers of the Government in this regard, but have continued to use the Government money so expended on experimental contracts to develop these planes and engines for private corporations, and these corporations have patented these improvements in their own names and used these exclusive governmental patent monopolies as a basis for securing future business on the improvements made through Government money, and the Army and Navy Departments have continued to use this alibi or excuse as their reason for continued successive purchases made from these different corporations since the Aircraft Act of 1926.

An examination of the statistical data received from the Comptroller's Department will show to what extent this plan of operation has made these departments dependent upon these concerns. A recent illustration might better illustrate the point.

The recent Navy patrol planes that made the flight from San Francisco to Hawaii were built by the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, and these planes now need modernizing, and a proprietary contract (no. 33642) was recently let for modernizing these planes. (A proprietary contract is one let without competitive bidding, because of exclusive patent right.) Under modernizing contract new engine mounts were to be entirely rebuilt, in any event. Almost any type of engine satisfactory in performance could have been installed. Had the matter been left open to competition, but with open competitive bidding, the Government should and would receive better equipment for less money. Certainly the Wright "Cyclone" and the Pratt & Whitney "Hornet" engines of the type under discussion are interchangeable, as shown by the recent Douglass transport planes developed for the P.W.A. These planes were designed to take the Wright "Cyclone" engine but when they were installed they ran too hot, and they were removed and Pratt & Whitney's "Hornet" engines were substituted. These "Hornet" engines worked perfectly, however. Wright immediately got busy and improved the "Cyclones" and had them reinstalled. In this regard it is interesting to note that the Transcontinental & Western Lines are directly connected to Curtiss-Wright Co. through the Hayden-Stone Co.

JUST ONE BIG FAMILY

In Airways and Airports for March 1934, page 325, in the article Cleaning up the United States Air Transport is this comment:

"The net results will be a more economic air transport and, perhaps, the breaking up of the greatest vertical and horizontal 'trust' which now rules American aviation."

The above statement is very significant when we analyze our aviation industry in this country today. The same four holding corporations very largely control the transportation as well as the manufacturing end of this business. Our investigation has dealt primarily with these corporations because of their sale of equipment direct to the Navy Department through their different subsidiaries.

These same corporations through their transportation subsidiaries largely own and control all air-mail lines in the United States as well as the air mails leading out of the United States. I refer at this point to a consolidated statement and chart showing by management groups certain statistics of mail- and passenger-carrying operations including the revenue-miles flown and the revenue per mile flown for the years 1931 and 1932, showing the amounts of money paid by the Government to the transport lines of these same holding corporations furnishing the equipment to the different aviation branches of the Government. (See pp. 7436, 7437, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A study and a comparison of this chart with the first chart inserted in the RECORD, page 4977, showing the different ramifications and connections of the Air Trust, should convince the most skeptical of the exact status of the industry in this country today, and it is particularly noticeable how much of the taxpayers' aviation dollar the "trust" receives—about 75.5 percent.

The chart I am now referring to in the RECORD gives rather a complete picture of the aviation industry, dealing with the aviation dollar. It shows the percentage of the total amount paid to domestic air-mail contractors, foreign air-mail contractors, and contracts for military airplane equipment that went to each group.

It is difficult to consider the military aspects of aviation without also considering the air-mail operations because they are so closely identified and deal with our national defense, and the companies that have provided the air mail service are also furnishing our military equipment. The interlocking of the directors and organizers of the companies forming the aviation trust would, in case of an emergency, place our national defense in the hands of a few masters of big business who have exploited military and air-mail contracts for their own selfish interests and have built up a monopoly within a monopoly, with the knowledge and support of Government employees and officials of three former administrations.

Our aviation industry is definitely headed for General Motors control, as indicated by the chart. The process of gaining this control started during the World War in 1917 when the Aircraft Production Board was controlled by men closely identified with General Motors Corporation. These men are still directing our aviation policy.

This chart indicates the trust is not satisfied with 93 percent of the money paid by the taxpayers of this country for domestic air-mail transportation, 98 percent of the amount paid for foreign air-mail transportation, and 87 percent of the money paid for military equipment, but they also control a large percentage of the airways-lighting equipment, airplane-accessory companies, investment trusts—dealing with aviation securities, airplane and liability insurance, dirigible operations, Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, and the National Aeronautic Association.

The record shows that the aviation monopoly, with its railroad bank connections, has not been for a healthy growth of the industry. In 1929 there were 7,695 airplanes operating in this country, and during that year they flew 104,336,560 miles and carried 2,995,530 passengers, and there were 20,944 people employed in the transportation and flying operations. In 1932 the number of miles flown had been gradually reduced more than one-half, the number of planes was only 1,979, and less than half the number of passengers were carried in all commercial services, and they were employing only one-fifth the number of people.

If it is the purpose of Congress to develop commercial aviation and air-mail operations as a part of our national defense, it certainly should see to it that this trust is broken and individual initiative again given its chance for development. As long as the trust exists, a few men in Wall Street, not representative of the entire Nation, can retard the growth of the industry to the benefit of rail and steamship transportation at will, and exploit the development of such interests in the same selfish manner as they have the aviation industry. The recent development in a streamlined railroad train may be the beginning of such exploitation.

PROPAGANDA

Among the mass of propaganda which has been received by Members of Congress was a recent special air-mail issue of National Aeronautics Magazine sent out by Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. (a General Motors controlled organization). In it appears a general indictment of the administration for cancelation of air-mail contracts because of fraud.

Specific charges were made against Postmaster General James A. Farley in an open letter published in the magazine and signed by Hiram Bingham, president of the National Aeronautical Association.

Before discussing the propaganda thus forced upon this body through the medium of this trust-dominated magazine, I would remind you that the signer of this letter is the same Hiram Bingham who represented the State of Connecticut in the United States Senate; whose conduct, as a Member of the Senate, was censored and condemned by vote of his fellow members. There have been only two other Senators so disgraced in the history of Congress. I refer you to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 4, 1929, for full details.

Mr. Bingham's letter, in view of the circumstances surrounding his public life, should probably not be considered except for the fact that because his name is associated in the magazine with the names of many illustrious persons, which may have some effect on public opinion, and because he makes serious charges against our honorable Postmaster General. He says:

"Your letter contains a number of misleading statements and shows a distressing failure to appreciate the actual situation and also an apparent ignorance of air-mail history.

"* * * Your letter leads me to believe that without proper cause you have caused suffering to thousands of innocent workers and investors.

"* * * The Watres Act was passed because the then Postmaster General of the United States was anxious to develop an efficient air transport system. He was careful to get specific legal warrant from Congress for what he thought it necessary to do. * * *

"You imply in your statement that attendance at the conference was limited to a favored few. You state, specifically, that it was 'confined to those who subsequently obtained the contracts.' That statement shows that you are ignorant of the facts. By listing in your own letter 14 companies, all of them at that time independent of each other, were represented. All except five already had contracts obtained by competitive bidding. * * *

"You did not state in your letter that your predecessor, Postmaster General Brown, was careful to get an interpretation of his newly acquired authority from the Comptroller General. * * *

"* * * You say 'these meetings resulted in a division of all air-mail contracts of the United States.' No one would guess from your letter that substantially 60 percent of the total domestic air-mail operations up to 8 months ago were being carried on routes that existed at the time of those terrible conferences in 1930 and that were still, long after you became Postmaster General, in the hands of the original contractors or their direct successors by purchase. * * *

"* * * You have made no suggestion that there was any wrongdoing prior to November 6, 1929."

In referring to these charges of the Honorable Mr. Bingham it may be well, as he suggests, to examine into the scheme of things "prior to November 6, 1929." There is much evidence in the records to indicate there was a very definite conspiracy to control by monopoly the aviation industry by men closely identified with governmental departments, dating back to the World War in 1917. Col. Edward A. Deeds, Richard F. Hoyt, Charles F. Kettering, Howard E. Coffin, H. E. Talbot, and others directly under their orders, organized the principal aviation enterprises, including the manufacture of airplanes, airplane motors, airplane propellers, airplane accessories, insurance, airports, airport lighting equipment, air transport, air-mail operating, and military-equipment companies, which entailed a very large percent, if not all, of the financing and stock promotions attributed by Mr. Bingham as "sharpers and disreputable characters who took advantage of the romantic appeal of aviation to fleece the public." Mr. Bingham's epithet as applied to these gentlemen can well be understood when we examine the Hughes report, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, page 883.

These men, who have made millions out of the aviation stock manipulation, bonuses, and salaries, have associated with them in the aviation racket all those in Government positions who would tighten their hold on the industry; these include Col. Paul Henderson, former Second Assistant Postmaster General under Harry S. New; Harry S. New himself; William P. MacCracken, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics; Maj. Gen. Mason Patrick, former Chief of Army Air Service; D. K. E. Bruce, formerly in the Diplomatic Service, son of ex-United States Senator, and son-in-law of Andrew Mellon, all under the Coolidge administration; also Roy D. Chapin, Secretary of Commerce in the Hoover administration.

It is easy to understand why, after the former "Postmaster General Walter F. Brown had made up his mind to develop a great national air-transport system", that he "was careful to get specific legal warrant from Congress for what he thought it necessary to do", and also "was careful to get an interpretation from the Comptroller General." I say it is not hard to understand when we consider the companies which have been favored were controlled largely by men who had resigned from Government jobs or who had been in Government positions, some of whom had already been criticized for irregularities in aircraft procurement during the World War as members of the "Aircraft Production Board"; at least one member was recommended for court martial and at least one has been convicted of antitrust violation.

CONSPIRACY IN AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

These circumstances, coupled with the acts of former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, in their chronological order, in awarding contracts and expanding schedules to absorb the annual appropriation for air mail, we submit to the people of this Nation to analyze and determine for themselves whether or not there has been a conspiracy.

1. March 4, 1929. The organization of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware was in process on March 4, 1929, when Walter F. Brown became Postmaster General, and the following day upon his retirement Harry S. New became director and adviser of the company.

2. May 10, 1929. Formation of Inter-Departmental Committee on Airways suggested by President Hoover, to hear and determine questions relating to the extension of the civil airways system of the United States, was announced by Postmaster General Brown. Personnel of the committee: W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General; Earl B. Wadsworth, Superintendent of Air Mail, Post Office Department; Wm. P. MacCracken, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics; F. C. Kingsburg, chief of Airways Division; and Harry H. Blee, chief of Airports Division, Department of Commerce.

3. Aviation Corporation acquired route 1, route 2, route 16, route 20, routes 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, and 30, totaling 4,354 miles of air-mail routes.

4. June 15, 1929. Postmaster General advertised for bids on route 32, from Pasco, Wash., to Spokane, Wash., to Portland, Oreg., to Seattle, Wash., a distance of 490 miles; a clause in the advertisement provided "upon the expiration of service already contracted for or that may be extended under the certificate plan on route CAM-5, the terminal of this route that is now being advertised may be changed to Salt Lake City or such point on the transcontinental route as service of the Northwest is supplied to and from." It was also provided that it might be extended to the Canadian border and that the successful bidder have 6 months to begin service.

5. September 23, 1929. Contract on route 32 was awarded after a delay of over 3 months to Varney Air Lines, Inc., a subsidiary of United Aircraft & Transport Corporation, at 9 cents a pound, including equipment. Route 5 was operated by the same company and the transcontinental route by another subsidiary of the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation.

6. Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, after an extended airplane trip with United Aircraft & Transport officials, called a conference of all operators and notified them that they must work out a yardstick for the revamping of the Air Mail Service. The time limit on all air-mail contracts was expiring and the operators were told that in order to have them renewed they must do what he wanted them to do. To enable the Postmaster General to carry out his plan and get the Watres Act passed it was necessary for him to extend the time limit under the contracts for a temporary 6 months' period. The status of the air-transport service companies on March 4, 1933, is evidence that his will had been carried out as they had been consolidated in the hands of only a few operators.

7. January 14, 1930. Postmaster General Brown startled the industry in announcing in a speech before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce his well-laid scheme for new legislation to enable him to complete his plan.

8. Conferences with air-mail operators prior to passage of Watres Act.

9. April 29, 1930. McNary-Watres Act became law.

10. May 3, 1930. Route certificate issued to Varney Air Lines (United) on route 5, which included route 32, that had been bid in at 9 cents a pound. The rate fixed was 83 cents on certain trips and 98 cents on other trips. (Note: Under terms of the contract operator would only be required to operate 2 months at the 9-cent rate. Contract on route 5 expired October 28, 1929, was extended 6 months to enable the Watres Act to be passed and carry out this deal with the United.)

11. Spoils conference, about May 15, 1930.

12. Adjusted contract held by Aviation Corporation upwardly to the extent of $108,001.87 per annum. This has been greatly increased since the adjustment.

13. Arranged change in Postal Regulations to cut out bidders and to permit the Pennsylvania Railroad to become joint bidder.

14. August 2, 1930. Advertised for bids on routes 33 and 34, and included clauses not provided in the Watres Act, to restrict the bidding to one combination.

15. September 15, 1930. Awarded contract for route 33 to Robertson and Safeway at maximum rate with the knowledge the contract was to go to the Aviation Corporation and that the companies would not bid against each other on routes 33 and 34, advertised the same day. The circumstances surrounding the advertising and award of these two contracts indicate clearly the Postmaster General and the company who obtained the award knew in advance who would get both contracts and the amount that would be bid.

16. September 30, 1930. Awarded (after protest by low bidder) route 34, New York to Los Angeles, to Pennsylvania Railroad, Mellon, and General Motors combination.

COMPTROLLER'S RECORD ON EXPENDITURES

I insert at this point a copy of the letter of the Comptroller General of the United States, including tabulations, as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, March 23, 1934.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MCFARLANE: Complying with the request contained in your letter of March 16, 1934, for use of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, there is enclosed herewith in duplicate a tabulation showing the contracts of record in this office which have been entered into by the War and Navy Departments since July 2, 1926, for the purchase of airplanes and airplane engines. This tabulation is a break-down of the War and Navy Department contracts listed in the report forwarded to you with office letter of March 6, 1934 and shows the amounts stipulated in the contracts to be paid for airplanes, airplane engines, parts, drawings, data, etc. It is not understood that you desired—and there has been no attempt to list—the contracts of the two Departments in question for airplane parts where such contracts did not involve the purchase of airplanes and/or airplane engines. The changes by written orders and without competition after the contracts were entered into were many and they have not been listed on the tabulation enclosed.

There is also enclosed a tabulation showing the appropriations made by the Congress since July 2, 1926, in an aggregate sum of $217,457,491 for the Army Air Corps, with expenditures shown on the books of this office to date of $181,397,977.66 for the Army Air Corps and appropriations made in an aggregate sum of $218,526,078, with expenditures similarly shown to date of $183,017,181.41 for the Navy Air Corps. These amounts do not include the pay and allowances of the officers and enlisted men of the two Services, for funds therefor were and are carried elsewhere in the respective appropriation acts. It is understood that you require such a tabulation for the purposes of showing the considerable sums of public money made available by the Congress—and actually expended—for the Army and Navy Air Corps Services, exclusive of pay and allowances.

There has been noted your request for information whether this office actually examines the Army and Navy contracts for the purchase of airplanes, airplane parts, and accessories, and audits the expenditures thereunder in the same manner that it examines other contracts and expenditures for the several departments, independent establishments, etc., of the Government or whether this office merely examines the contracts to see whether they have been awarded under sections 10 (k), 10 (q), or 10 (t) of the act of July 2, 1926, and whether the expenditures by the disbursing officers are in accord with the terms of the contract. In other words, whether this office determines the legality and regularity of the contracts and expenditures or whether such questions under contracts of the War and Navy Departments for the purchase of airplanes, airplane parts and accessories are left to the administrative officers of the respective department and this office merely checks the contracts and expenditures to see that they are regular on their face and comply with the act of July 2, 1926, and any limitations that may have been placed in the appropriation acts.

The answer to such question is found in section 10 of the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 788, 789), wherein it is provided in subsection (q) that in the purchase of aircraft, constructed according to designs presented prior to July 2, 1926, or according to such designs with minor modifications thereof—which modifications may be made at any time—the "action of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy in each case shall be final and conclusive." Also, in subsection (t) wherein it is provided that thereafter whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall enter into any contract for or on behalf of the United States for the purchase of aircraft, aircraft parts, or aircraft accessories they were authorized to award such contract to the bidder that said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidder that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government and that "the decision of the Secretary of the department concerned as to the award of such contract, the interpretation of the provisions of the contract, and the application and administration of the contract shall not be reviewable otherwise than as may be therein provided for, by any officer or tribunal of the United States except the President and the Federal courts."

The principal aim of this office is to carry out the will of the Congress as stated in the statutes. The effect of this act of July 2, 1926, is to deny the Accounting Office of the United States all but the most perfunctory jurisdiction and control over the terms of specifications, advertisements, contracts, and expenditures of the War and Navy Departments for the purchase of aircraft, aircraft parts, and aircraft accessories. The act in specific terms expresses the intention of the Congress to rely on the administrative officers concerned in the making of the contracts and expenditures for aircraft, aircraft parts, and aircraft accessories to see that the terms of the law are carried out and the interests of the United States properly protected. Of course, under such circumstances this office may only check the contracts and expenditures for aircraft, aircraft parts, and aircraft accessories to see that the formalities of the act of July 2, 1926, have been observed. So far as this office is concerned, the responsibility has been left where the Congress placed it in the act of July 2, 1926; that is, on the administrative officers of the War and Navy Departments.

With respect to your request for the suggestions of this office as to the amendments necessary to the act of July 2, 1926, to secure a return of control by law over the terms of specifications to secure full and free competition by all qualified bidders in the delivery of aircraft, aircraft parts, and aircraft accessories, you are advised that it is believed that the enactment of H.R. 8044, Seventy-third Congress, second session, with the minor amendments suggested in the enclosed copy of my letter of March 17, 1934, to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, would accomplish that object.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Enclosures.

[2] Expenditures as reported so far.

The above tabulations of the Army and Navy show the appropriations made by Congress since July 2, 1926, which shows the sum of $217,457,491 for the Army Air Corps, with expenditures shown on the books of the office to date of $181,397,977.66 to the Army Air Corps; and appropriations made in aggregate $218,526,078, with expenditures similarly shown to date of $188,017,181.41 for the Navy Air Corps. These amounts do not include pay and allowances of the officers and enlisted men of the two Services, for funds therefor were and are carried elsewhere in the respective appropriation acts.

RECOMMENDATIONS

(1) I recommend that section 10 (Q) of the Aircraft Act be repealed and that section 10 (K) and section 10 (T) be amended so as to require open competitive bidding in the production procurement of all aircraft equipment, as was required by the Government prior to the passage of the Aircraft Act of 1926.

(2) That the proposed amendment of subsection 10 (K), as amended, would continue so as to permit the continuance of purchase by the Secretary of the Navy without competition such designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, and aeronautical accessories as may be necessary for experimental purposes only, but should not permit quantity purchases or repeat purchases of any such proven experimental designs, etc., without open competitive bidding.

(3) That all future contracts of the Navy contain a provision giving the Government the right or license upon the payment of a stipulated royalty or sum, the right to manufacture or cause to be manufactured such designs, aircraft, etc. This would enable the Government to eliminate patent contentions and permit free and open competition in all future procurement of all aircraft. This procedure was followed by the United States from 1917 to 1928 in certain cases.

(4) That the naval aircraft plant at Philadelphia be continued to operate as under present schedule without any enlarged powers, duties, or authority, except that the excessive overhead expenses, wherever possible, be eliminated. That disinterested witnesses be called to testify, if any doubt exists in the minds of the committee as to the exact status of the aviation industry regarding the interlocking connections of the different companies and the complete domination of the industry by the four major holding companies comprising the Air Trust.

(5) That a thorough investigation be made as to the desirability of future use of alloys of aluminum in the manufacture of our aircraft, and particularly the adaptability and usefulness of stainless steel for aircraft manufacture. That a comparative study of the use of these materials as to cost, maintenance, weight, length of life, ability to withstand salt water, etc., be carefully analyzed.

(6) That no more purchases of lighter-than-air craft equipment be made unless and until their elasticity of performance, maneuverability, and general usefulness under actual war conditions is definitely proven to the entire satisfaction of a disinterested board.

(7) That all aviation units attached to battleships, cruisers, or aircraft carriers be maintained at the highest state of efficiency for war purposes and all "admirals' taxis" (or joy-riding planes) be eliminated from the fleet service.

(8) That the Aircraft Act be amended so as to prohibit any governmental department from awarding any contract for any kind of aircraft to any company having connections with subsidiaries, affiliates, associates, or holding companies, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership, interlocking directorates, interlocking officers, or otherwise, if said subsidiaries, affiliates, associates, or holding companies are engaged directly or indirectly in the operation of competitive manufacturing, jobbing, or selling concerns dealing in any kind of aircraft equipment.

(9) That the Aircraft be amended so that it will stimulate inventive genius.

(10) That the air-mail laws be amended so that the Government will take over and operate the air mail and own 51 percent of the stock of the newly organized companies to be chartered for this purpose. This should be done for the same reasons that we carry other mail and to furnish proper training for the men in the Army to fly domestic mail, the men of the Navy to fly coastal and foreign mail, and primarily to save the taxpayers money and for the general good of the Services. Great Britain, France, and other countries recognized the necessity of owning and controlling their air-mail lines soon after the World War and have found this policy sound.

(11) That the eight different branches of aeronautics of the Government be combined under a secretary of the air of equal standing of other Cabinet positions, which department shall have a separate budget, personnel, and status as other departments of Government; that this be done in the interest of eliminating waste, extravagance, duplication, overlapping of responsibilities, and for the benefits to be derived from a united supervision. Germany unified her air force in 1916. After serious damage to Great Britain from the air, she unified her air forces in 1917. France, Italy, and other European nations soon followed suit. There are no divisions in the air such as we recognize on land and sea, and we must have a centralized command for war purposes.

(12) That the law creating the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics be amended, requiring that eligibility for membership on this Committee be limited to those not connected directly or indirectly with any aviation company selling any aircraft equipment to the Government; that an affidavit be filed by each member upon appointment showing completely their property holdings and connections, and that such an affidavit be filed the first of each year thereafter and all such information be made a part of the annual report of this Board, violation of such law to suspend automatically member from the board.

Respectfully submitted.

W. D. MCFARLANE.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the silver bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

H.R. 9725

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplementary report on the bill H.R. 9725.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE LATE GEORGE F. BRUMM

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of deep personal sorrow that I announce to the House the death of our beloved colleague, Hon. GEORGE FRANK BRUMM, from the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUMM has served his constituency, his State, and his Nation faithfully and well, and I know that during the five terms he has served in the House he has endeared himself to all by his genial and kindly spirit. Friends have been made on both sides of the aisle, and at a later time I shall pay a further tribute to his memory.

Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following resolution.

House Resolution 402

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable GEORGE F. BRUMM, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee: Mr. DARROW, Mr. CONNOLLY, Mr. WOLFENDEN, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly, at 7 o'clock and 4 minutes p.m., the House adjourned until tomorrow, May 31, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

NOMINATION OF W. LEROY LARSON—RECONSIDERATION AND RECOMMITTAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as in executive session, I desire to make a request. On the 29th of May the nomination of W. LeRoy Larson to be postmaster at Sidney, Nebr., was confirmed. Notice of the confirmation has not as yet been sent to the President. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed, and then that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks, as in executive session, that the vote by which the nomination referred to by him was confirmed be reconsidered and that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RENTAL AND HOUSING CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 86, Seventy-third Congress, first session, a supplemental report—made upon completion of the housing survey conducted as a Civil Works project in cooperation with the Department of Commerce—of an investigation relating to the cost and character of housing in rented premises in the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Civil Liberties Commission of the Ohio State Association of the Improved Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the World, favoring the enactment of legislation for the prevention of lynching and mob violence, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the One Hundred and First Annual Session of the New York Congregational Conference at Syracuse, N.Y., favoring the adoption of Senate Resolution 244 (submitted by Mr. NYE), increasing the limit of expenditure by the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of New York State League of Savings and Loan Associations, favoring the adoption of a home-modernization program, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the White Plains (N.Y.) Realty Board, favoring making available additional bonds up to $2,000,000,000 for continuance of relief to home owners under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the committee on cooperation for better housing of the New York Rehabilitation, Modernization, and Replacement Movement, New York City, favoring the passage of Senate bill 3603, providing for the financing of home construction and repair, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Orleans, N.Y., favoring the passage of the so-called "McLeod bill", providing payment to depositors in closed banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens, being members and friends of the American Legion Auxiliary of Port Byron, N.Y., remonstrating against the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations and the World Court, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and New York City, N.Y., praying for the enactment of legislation permitting the reunion of families separated from near and dependent relatives abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Pelham Parkway Democratic Club, Borough of Bronx, New York City, N.Y., favoring the immediate lifting of restrictions so as to allow the free immigration into the United States of persons suffering religious persecution under the Government of Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the petition of Sara P. Eastburn and other citizens of Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "Wheeler-Howard bill", for promotion of the welfare of Indians, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being members of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Mohawk District, Herkimer, N.Y., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to Indians enough land to live on comfortably, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Troy and Mechanicville, N.Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing adequate retirement pensions for railway and express company employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Greater East Side Democratic Association, of Buffalo, N.Y., endorsing the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a national labor board, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions recently adopted by the Rutherford (N.J.) Ministerial Association.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the attack on the World Court made by ex-Senator Reed and others at the hearings on May 16 before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, that the Rutherford Ministerial Association, at its meeting on May 17, hereby reaffirms its desire that the United States complete its adherence to the Court, and to this end respectfully asks the Committee on Foreign Relations to report for favorable action the protocols of adherence without further delay; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to Senator KEY PITTMAN, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that another copy be given to the press.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. GEORGE presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens, being World War veterans and their beneficiaries, of Atlanta, Ga., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures after the first one, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., May 22, 1934.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned World War veterans and beneficiaries of adjusted-service certificates, petition you to make provision for and the immediate payment of all said certificates, without any deduction of any interest upon any and all loans and prior advances against same.

We advance these reasons for this action, to wit:

1. Veterans universally have suffered as much as others from the depression of 1929 and following years, and this continues.

2. Despite payment of one-half these certificates and all other relief measures taken, we have received probably less than any other people who have had any beneficial legislation under this and all previous administrations, post-war.

3. We have been in the minority as beneficiaries in this administration among those who have actually had relief or employment provided.

4. All others who have claimed or advanced any bonus for services and losses against the Government during the World War have long since been paid bounties, losses, and extra compensation; and any claim that this requested action will open such claims is preposterous and without merit.

5. The cost of living generally and for our dependents and selves is on the increase steadily, has been for the past year, while the opportunity to earn a livelihood is not in keeping with the same pace either in wages currently paid or opportunity for employment.

6. Besides the universal and general debt burden of the country, the veterans were taken out of employment, these certificates were issued to in part compensate and equalize this loss of earnings during the war as compared with those who remained in civil pursuits, and payment to us was delayed for 27 years after the war, while the civilians had earned and received their wages currently during the war and have long since had extra compensation, etc., since the war, even long prior to the authorization of these certificates; hence the certificates, but not payment of the recognized thing to be done by us by the Government.

7. Veterans since the war have not received an equal chance at employment, but rather have actually been discriminated against in private and other employment and pursuits.

8. There was no havoc or hardship, as predicted, from the payment of one-half of these certificates, and there is no merit or reason in the bogus cry now that such would be the case following the present payment in full thereof.

9. It is generally known that these certificates do not include 7 years' interest from the termination of the war to 1925 in our favor, and this is enough to take care of the accrued interest and therefore just that the interest earned in these advances should be waived.

10. This relief will enable the majority of the veterans to buy for their dependents much needed necessities, such as clothes, food, medicine, and relieve their sufferings, make payments of debts for such purposes already incurred, and obtain relief from other embarrassing circumstances. There are very few not in such unfortunate conditions.

11. This would not work any special privilege in our favor, because there are very few classes of people or industries and commerce who have not already been the recipients of governmental bounty, loans, and other relief since the World War, during past and this administration; in fact, the armed forces have actually received less per capita costs in all such benefits, while they took the greater risk, that of their health, lives, and usual opportunities of peace and war, besides their actual suffering during the war and since from injury to health, loss of lives, discrimination in post-war life in the lack of equal opportunities to be self-supporting, and the same other hazards of life as all others.

12. This relief should in no wise be discounted as against those who were not in actual combat or overseas, because most of those were forced against their will to serve where commanded, despite their cravings to be at the front.

13. There is no assurance that the country will be better able to pay these certificates in full 11 years hence than now; besides it is unjust for the country to profit off the certificates as it was intended originally for this matter to be handled by banking institutions as to loans and advances, and 7 years' interest was negligently taken from the face of the certificates, which is to say the least unjust, despite the adage that the king can do no wrong.

14. This action would be in keeping with the spirit and keeping with the preelection campaign pledges of the present administration when the country was unquestionably in more dire circumstances than at present.

15. We have supported not alone this administration as loyally as any one, also at all times we have been even more loyal to our Government since the war than prior, and in this spirit no one dare deny we will ever continue.

16. We have sacrificed as much under the economy law to balance the Budget and maintain the credit of the Nation as any others according to our ability, if not more; besides which we are and have borne an equal per capita cost of all relief and extraordinary and ordinary measures for the support of the Government and the general and usual brunt of all things in general.

17. This action would greatly increase the buying, directly and indirectly, of capital goods which has been very slow to respond to all that has been done, and provide an immediate stimulus of money flow, circulation, and commerce, more so perhaps than anything else yet has caused instantly.

18. The death rate or mortality among us is very great, growing more rapid, and we believe that we can personally spend and supervise its spending in life to better advantage these funds to our dependents and selves; besides we wish and deserve that privilege, and rather do so than to linger and die with the fear that after we are gone these certificates may never be paid to our loved ones. There is no guaranty that the latter may not happen.

19. We believe the service organizations are without the authority to bind our individual rights universally, from lack of numerical strength and otherwise, to bind us universally so as to debar us this right of petition to our Government.

20. We cannot see how the public can at this time with good grace fairly and justly object to the grant of this petition and action.

21. We believe that this petition universally represents the wishes of our friends, all those who aspire to have a real, considerate understanding of our present problems and those of the past of our dependents and of the veterans generally throughout the country.

Very respectfully submitted.

CHAS W. ANDERSON AND OTHERS.

GAMBLING AND USE OF OPIUM IN MANCHURIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table a statement which Mr. Stuart Fuller, of the State Department, read before the opium advisory committee of the League of Nations concerning the evils of the opium traffic. With conditions growing worse in asiatic lands in respect to this menace, we must be on our guard in this country against the importation of dangerous narcotics.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY STUART FULLER, OF THE UNITED STATES STATE DEPARTMENT

As is well known, the evils of opium and gambling have long constituted a deep-rooted social problem in Harbin and northern Manchuria. It is also well known that for years the production of opium has been intricately involved with the wide-spread banditry obtaining in that area.

The following quotations from a statement made by a gentleman who has lived in China for nearly 24 years, who has been a resident of Harbin for 10 years past, and who has no connection with any consular or diplomatic establishment, may be of interest. This gentleman's work affords him wide contact with the local Chinese population, and his statements are not only based on first-hand information but are considered reliable and well informed:

"While it is true that under the old government there was much illicit use of opium, morphine, and other drugs, and also considerable secret gambling, I regret to say that since the legalizing of opium and gambling these forms of vice have greatly increased in Harbin and northern Manchuria.

"There has been such a tremendous increase in the cultivation of the poppy that it is quite impossible for the government to control the sale and use of opium. In many of the places which I visit throughout north Manchuria, to judge from the amount of opium that is sold, the large number of opium shops, and the great number of gambling hells that have been opened, one would be led to believe that opium and gambling constitute the principal business of those towns. I am glad to say that in recent months there has been a little improvement in Harbin, but the sale and use of opium still continues on a large scale, and what is worse, many young people are taking to this vice. I know this to be a fact, because I have visited many of the opium dens and there have found young men and women whom I know. These young men and women state that it is only since the opening up of these legalized opium dens that they have taken up the use of opium. Before opium was legalized those who sold the drug charged much higher prices than those demanded for smoking at the present time. Now opium is much cheaper and it is as easy to obtain a smoke as to get a cup of tea.

"Never before during my long residence of more than 20 years in China have I heard of opium shops where men were permitted to stand at the door for the purpose of inviting the people to come in and smoke. I have heard these runners call out on the streets that opium is a panacea to cure every ill. Many go in to learn how to smoke not only because of the temporary pleasure which they may derive from the drug but, unfortunately, under the delusion that opium will cure their ills.

"Previously there were no young women in these opium dens, but now these shops have been made attractive and young women, prostitutes, are employed in them to encourage the young men to come in and smoke.

"On a number of occasions I have been told by local Chinese that Koreans and Japanese are also taking up the use of opium.

"When a man becomes addicted to opium and has used up all of his money, he usually does one of two things: He may resort to the use of morphine or he may become a bandit. If he resorts to morphine, this soon drags him to the very bottom of human existence, until he is thrown out upon the streets eventually in the winter, to be carried off a frozen corpse and thrown beyond the bounds of the city for his body to be devoured by the dogs. If he becomes a bandit, he uses any method open to him to extract opium or money from the people. Many of these opium addicts go into the country districts because there, through banditry, they are enabled to rob the people of opium or of the money with which opium may be obtained.

"During the winter months anywhere from five to a dozen human bodies, morphine addicts, are picked up frozen on the streets of Harbin and are carried away as so much refuse. They are the bodies of men and women whose lives have been ruined. These people, created in the image of God, might have grown to be respectable, honorable citizens, but instead they have been destroyed mind, body, and soul. These people began as opium addicts and ended up with morphine. It is now so easy to obtain a morphine injection and these injections may be had for such a small sum that these poor, weak, dejected people take to the use of morphine as a duck takes to water. In our city these morphine dens can be found everywhere. I have talked with some of the proprietors of these dens. They explain that this is their way of making a livelihood, and state that they are not concerned with the people whose lives are destroyed but are out to make money in any way that they can. It is hard for me to understand why these people are permitted to continue in this nefarious traffic and to conduct these morphine dens where hundreds of lives are being destroyed."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1844) for the relief of James Foy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1211) thereon.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make a long-term contract for a supply of water to the United States naval station at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (no. 1212) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3595) to restore to the public domain portions of the Jordan Narrows (Utah) Military Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1214) thereon.

GEORGE E. Q. JOHNSON—REPORT OF CLAIMS COMMITTEE

Mr. LEWIS. I tender a report from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on House bill 4460, to provide for the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson, and I submit a report (No. 1213) thereon. I do so at the request and on behalf of the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

It is a report following the recommendation of the Attorney General, and the passage of the bill by the House, favoring the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson, a district judge for the northern district of Illinois, of Chicago, who passed out of office, his tenure under the law terminating, and this bill is for the payment of salary due him.

I tender the report, and ask to have it take such course that I may call it up later for action, without disturbing the program as now arranged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3704) to amend section 865 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 3705) to extend the boundaries of the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LONERGAN:

A bill (S. 3706) authorizing improvement of the Connecticut River between Saybrook and Hartford, Conn., for navigation purposes; and

A bill (S. 3707) to provide for a preliminary examination of the Connecticut River, with a view to the control of its floods and prevention of erosion of its banks in the State of Connecticut, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DAVIS:

A bill (S. 3708) for the relief of Samuel Shenkman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS (for Mr. REED):

A bill (S. 3710) to provide sick leave for certain civilian employees of the United States Government; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

A bill (S. 3711) to extend the time limit for filing claim for emergency officers' retirement pay; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3712) to authorize the appointment of Joseph W. Cavanagh, former lieutenant, Supply Corps, United States Navy, to such grade and rank on the active list, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3713) granting a pension to Anna M. D'Autrechy; and

A bill (S. 3714) granting an increase of pension to Florence G. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 130) to amend section 72 of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relative to the allotment of public documents, and section 85 of the same act fixing the date of the expiration of the franking privilege to Members of Congress; to the Committee on Printing.

ESTABLISHMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF FUNDS

Mr. HEBERT introduced a bill (S. 3709) to encourage the establishment of unemployment relief funds for employees, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEBERT subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day I introduced a bill to encourage the establishment of unemployment-relief funds for the unemployed. I have in mind a similar measure presented here a short time ago by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Senator from New York and I were members of a committee investigating unemployment insurance. We made rather an extensive investigation of the subject in 1931. We differed in some respects, particularly as to the method of procedure, but we did not differ as to the need for the establishment of some form of unemployment reserves. The Senator from New York has incorporated his ideas in a measure which is now pending in the Senate. I have tried to do likewise with the measure which I have introduced and to which I now refer.

I ask unanimous consent to have this bill printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

[S. 3709, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

A bill to encourage the establishment of unemployment relief funds for employees

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. When used in this act, the term—

"Employer" shall mean any person, partnership, association, corporation, or the legal representative, trustee in bankruptcy, receiver, or trustee thereof, or the legal representative of a deceased person, who or whose agent or predecessor in interest has, within each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the taxable year, employed at least 10 persons, except that the term "employer" shall not include the Federal Government, the government of the several States, municipal corporations, or other governmental instrumentalities.

"Employee" shall mean any person employed by an employer subject to this act, except that for the purposes of this act "employee" shall not include—

(1) an agricultural laborer;

(2) domestic servant;

(3) a teacher in any school, college, or university for the regular annual term for which such school, college, or university is in session;

(4) a physician, surgeon, interne, or nurse in a hospital, sanatorium, or other similar private endowed institution not operated for profit;

(5) a physically handicapped person employed by an institution financed largely by charitable donations and organized not for profit but primarily for the relief and rehabilitation of such handicapped persons;

(6) the father, mother, spouse, or minor child of the employer;

(7) an employee in the service of a common carrier subject to the provisions of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 211).

"Contributions" shall mean the amount which the employer has paid for the taxable year to an unemployment fund, but shall not include any amounts deducted from wages or contributed by employees.

"Unemployment fund" shall mean any unemployment compensation fund or reserve, or unemployment insurance fund or reserve, or guaranteed employment fund or reserve to which the employer contributes.

SEC. 2. Any employer who has paid contributions to an unemployment fund may deduct from income in the computation of his taxes, under the internal revenue law, an amount equal to such contributions paid during the taxable year.

SEC. 3. No deduction may be made, as provided in section 2 of this act, unless the Secretary of Labor has made a finding of fact within the taxable year that the unemployment fund to which the employer paid contributions, conforms to the following conditions:

(a) The unemployment fund shall consist of reserves set up for each employee individually, to be paid each employee as a matter of right during any period of temporary unemployment under such conditions as the trustees of the fund may determine. Upon the definite termination of his employment with his employer each employee shall be entitled to receive any portion of the reserves then remaining in his name and unpaid.

(b) The unemployment fund shall be in the exclusive name and control of trustees to be chosen by employers and employees, or of any agency of a State or of the Federal Government duly constituted for the purpose.

(c) There shall be a right of review before an impartial board whenever a dispute arises as to the distribution or administration of the funds.

(d) No provision of this act shall be construed as to prevent the participation by employees and/or the government of any State in contributing to any unemployment fund.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H.R. 1646. An act to promote safety on the streets and highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act; and for other purposes;

H.R. 6037. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution;

H.R. 6130. An act to prevent misrepresentation and deception in the sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia;

H.R. 8517. An act to provide for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia;

H.R. 9007. An act to amend section 11 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act;

H.R. 9143. An act providing educational opportunities for the children of soldiers, sailors, and marines who were killed in action or died during the World War;

H.R. 9184. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to sell the old Tenley School to the duly authorized representative of St. Ann's Church of the District of Columbia; and

H.R. 9622. An act to amend subsection (a) of section 23 of the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Act; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H.R. 2035. An act for the relief of Jennie Bruce Gallahan;

H.R. 9180. An act relating to the incorporation of Columbus University of Washington, D.C., organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia as provided in subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia; and

H.R. 9400. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Legion in the District of Columbia; to the calendar.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

On motion of Mr. COPELAND, the bill (S. 3553) to provide for the creation of a commission to examine into and report the clear height above the water of the bridge authorized to be constructed over the Hudson River from Fifty-seventh Street, New York, to New Jersey, was taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1932

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 9234) to amend section 601 (c) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1932; which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL ADJUSTMENT BOARD—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WAGNER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HASTINGS submitted several amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FIGHTING FOR PEACE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Mr. Frank E. Gannett, head of the Gannett newspapers. This is a valuable contribution to the cause of world peace. It was a radio talk given for the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations in New York City on March 14, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIGHTING FOR PEACE

A SECRETARY OF PEACE IN UNITED STATES CABINET

By Frank E. Gannett

There is no occasion for me to speak against the horrors of war or its tragic ineffectiveness and even futility. It is trite but true to say that war never settled any problem.

I doubt if any person listening this afternoon would venture to speak up in praise or defense of war. Everyone wants peace. No one likes legalized murder. No sane, normal person wants to kill his fellow man. And yet as we sit securely in our homes today, preparations for war go forward. We are told every day that another great war is inevitable. In the Far East the situation is tense. The nations of Europe seem ready to spring at one another's throats. The slightest incident might provoke another world conflict.

We of America may say we would not be involved. Yet most men who know how wars are made, and know their ramifications, believe it would be impossible for America to stand on the sidelines if even a substantial portion of the world should enter the arena for armed conflict.

TALK IS USELESS

Talking against war will not prevent it. If we could talk war to death, the grim champion of Mars would long ago have been sealed in his tomb for eternity. Developing military and naval strength cannot end war. History has yet to show a single instance where preparation for war has prevented it. Was there ever a more devastatingly efficient fighting machine than Germany developed under the Kaiser? Instead of preventing war, it was perhaps the chief cause of the titanic world struggle for which we of this generation and generations yet unborn, must pay in gold, in peace of mind, and in shattered health.

I recall being in Hong Kong in 1899. In the harbor lay a fleet of British warships and several German vessels. The men of the two fleets met ashore. The Germans proposed a toast to "Der Tag", the day Germany would fight Great Britain. A free-for-all fight followed in which many Germans and British were injured. This was 14 years before the World War broke out, but the World War was being bred. Disarmament conferences do not prevent war; least of all does sparring by the great powers over the kinds of armaments, defensive or offensive, each nation may possess. Never was such a conference entered into with entire good will on all sides. Each nation, instead of honestly seeking peace, has maneuvered for military or naval advantage for itself.

I am sure that the hearts of many listeners burned as did mine when they recently read in a current magazine of what has gone on behind the scenes at some of the disarmament conferences.

VENDORS OF WAR

Almost unbelievable seem the disclosures made in this magazine article. Can it be possible that not only were lobbyists for munitions makers skulking about these conferences but that some of the delegates themselves were stockholders and even directors of the great armament firms?

Yet so this article declared. It pointed out also that it cost about $25,000 to kill a soldier during the World War and added: "The important point is that every time a burst shell fragment finds its way into the brain, the heart, or the intestines of a man in the front line, a great part of the $25,000, much of it profit, finds its way into the pocket of the armament maker."

Again I say, disarmament conferences can never end war.

Nor can diplomatically worded treaties entered into by great nations against war prevent conflict. Such treaties too often are full of weasel words. They are effective only until some nation, for trivial cause or great, wishes to fight.

If talk against war, arming for war, conferring on armaments, treaties against war, cannot bring peace, must we despair of ever achieving it?

I am an optimist. I don't think we need despair of peace; that we need reconcile ourselves to these periodic conflicts in which mankind goes berserk and forgets and stifles all the humanitarian impulses which it has slowly developed as it has emerged from primitive savagery.

What we want, then, is not opposition to war, but definitely planned and organized promotion of peace.

For years I have argued that if the smallest fraction of the money spent in preparation for war were used in the promotion of international peace, we soon could bring about actual disarmament of the world and take off the backs of suffering mankind the unbearable burden imposed by martial preparations.

SECRETARY OF PEACE

Is it any wonder we have wars, when we consider the governmental set-up of all nations? Every nation has its department of war, the business of which is to prepare for war and to make war. Has any nation a department of peace, whose business it is, not to make war but to make peace?

So this afternoon I venture definitely to suggest that America should take the lead in setting up a department of peace, with a Cabinet officer at its head, on a par in authority and influence with all other Cabinet members. Other nations, I believe, would be forced to follow us. We could then develop an international peace conference entirely apart from other international bodies but cooperating heartily with them. This council would be constantly striving not to prevent war but to bring about better international relations.

Of course, I am not venturing today to outline a definite program for America's department of peace, nor am I nominating a Cabinet officer to head this department. But surely it requires no great imagination to suggest some of the functions of such a department.

Without entering into a discussion of a controversial subject, I am convinced all wars are due to economic pressure, to ambition, or to carefully fostered national hatreds.

International economic problems are complex and require intense study and consideration. But I believe they can be settled around the table just as business men in competing lines often settle their difficulties for the benefit of all.

Our present manner of dealing with an economic situation is for the strongest nation to grab what it can get, thus breeding ill feeling and friction which lead inevitably to war.

HIS FIRST TASK

Here, then, is the first place that our department of peace could function.

As a newspaper man, I believe in the tremendous power of publicity. I don't like the word "propaganda", since it suggests adroit and undercover manipulation of public opinion. Propaganda is shoddy publicity. Honest publicity includes information through the news columns, advertising of all kinds, editorial opinions, graphic presentation, conveyed by newspaper, book, radio, or motion-picture screen.

I have come to believe that advertising can accomplish anything. Why can't it prevent war, instead of making war? Every day we see the power of advertising in selling ideas to the public.

A manufacturer with adequate funds can change the thinking of millions in regard to his product by using the printed page effectively.

We now have the radio, which leaps over national boundaries to every corner of the world.

You will recall how, near the close of the World War, President Wilson used airplanes to distribute pamphlets to the Germans, acquainting them with the truth of the situation.

Today radio can accomplish a job like this much easier and more effectively.

What a powerful medium would the secretary of peace find in these great agencies of the printed word, the radio, and the motion picture! He would not seek to manipulate them under cover, but would enlist the cooperation of the men controlling them so that they might be used, frankly and openly, for bringing about better understanding between nations. No longer would printed word and picture hold up national characteristics to ridicule and scorn. Then men, women, and children of the nations would come to know each other as they really are.

HELP FOR SECRETARY

Think again of what the secretary of peace and his department, having the weight of a Government agency, could accomplish through the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, and similar organizations of youth by arranging pilgrimages to and from other countries—yes, and at Government expense. We could make no better investment in world peace than to make it possible for the boys and girls of the world to know and understand one another.

While riding in the New York subway, I have often thought that in this great city, in a comparatively small space, we have a marvelous cross section of the peoples of the world. These live in peace, get along well together, like each other, intermarry, go into business together, and live exactly on the same basis as the people of any individual nation. They find there is little basic difference between the men from one country and from another country. They know it would be silly, even if it were permitted, to go about fighting with this individual or that merely because he happened to come from a country that had a different flag.

Is this not abundant proof that, given an agency like the department of peace, similar understandings could be fostered between the peoples of the earth, even though they are not living together in close physical contact as in a great city like New York?

If time permitted, I might go on at length to suggest other opportunities for promotion of peace through such a department and such a Cabinet officer as I have suggested.

As Dr. John R. Mott, that great world citizen, talked to me the other day about the work of the Y.M.C.A. throughout the world, I was tremendously impressed with what this organization is doing in promoting peace and understanding. Men in southern Africa understand the Y.M.C.A. of the United States and of England and of Germany. They have, these Y.M.C.A. members, not hatred and bitterness, but love and admiration for each other, and this spirit is being spread throughout the world.

The work of Dr. Mott through the international Y.M.C.A. has accomplished more than can ever be measured in promoting friendly international relationships.

This man of great soul, known in every city, village, and hamlet in the world where there is a Y.M.C.A., has been carrying out unofficially the very idea I have in mind.

EFFECTIVE AGENCY

But how much more could be accomplished by a Government agency, properly financed, with the authority back of it of a great Nation like the United States, with an army of workers instantly applying corrective measures to every cause of ill will that might develop anywhere in the world.

There is nothing in the whole world more important than peace. Millions of men would give their lives gladly to promote it. Many millions went into the World War feeling that it was a war to end war, and yet we find that the war left behind it more problems than it undertook to solve. These problems have in them the germs of more wars instead of peace.

With peace the most important thing in the world, why cannot our Government and every other government in the world unite in a great effort along new and constructive lines for promoting peace?

We have learned that might does not make right; that arming a nation does not prevent war.

It may be wise for a nation to protect itself, but it would be still wiser for a nation to promote international friendship and brotherly love, so that there would be no need of military protection.

Why can't the whole world live in peace, as citizens from all parts of the world live side by side in peace in this country?

In concluding, let me repeat: We shall achieve world peace not by fighting war, not by preparing for war, but only by demanding and embarking on a definitely planned program of peace. We must, if you will pardon what seems a contradiction in terms, fight for peace with as much effort and determination—yes, and what is equally important—with as liberal financing as we have always shown in preparing for armed conflict.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is designed to combine two basic features:

First. A policy of tariff bargaining, first introduced in section 3 of the Tariff Act of October 1, 1890, and further extended in section 3 of the Dingley Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, which authorized the President to negotiate "commercial agreements in which reciprocal and equivalent concessions may be secured in favor of the products and manufactures of the United States."

Second. The policy of permitting the Chief Executive to rationalize and adjust the basic duty rates within a 50-percent range in order to achieve the objective and carry out the policy of the Congress as stated in the particular legislation. This feature of flexibility through Presidential action was introduced in sections 315, 316, and 317 of the Tariff Act of 1922 and was reenacted in sections 336, 337, and 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

The first feature of the bill has been objected to upon the ground that tariff bargaining by Executive agreement is in abrogation of the constitutional power of the Senate to ratify treaties with foreign nations. It is said that the agreements which the President is authorized to enter into under the bill are not in fact Executive agreements but are properly treaties requiring the ratification of the Senate.

The well-recognized distinction between an Executive agreement and a treaty is that the former cannot alter the existing law and must conform to all prior statutory enactments, whereas a treaty, if ratified by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, itself becomes the supreme law of the land and takes precedence over any prior statutory enactments.

If the contemplated agreements to be effective should require Senate ratification, there would be no need for the proposed legislation, inasmuch as the President would then simply negotiate a treaty which, if ratified by the Senate, would itself have the effect of changing the tariff rates. However, in the present bill, the Congress proposes to change the prevailing tariff law so that the proposed Executive agreements may be made in harmony with the revised law. This is a fundamental distinction and answers the question as to why the bill is here. A mere Executive agreement can be made by the President without the consent of Congress. It is equally true—and the fact demonstrates beyond all question the real nature of the agreements—that the agreements contemplated in the present bill could not be made effective by the President without prior congressional authorization.

The distinction between treaties and Executive agreements rests on more than a technical difference. It rests upon a fundamental theory of government. The Constitution places a check upon the President's power to enter into treaties by imposing the requirement that the advice and consent of the Senate by a two-thirds vote must be obtained. But no such extraordinary requirement exists with respect to commitments with foreign governments when such commitments give effect to the will of the people as expressed by previous acts of Congress. The only question which can arise is the validity of the particular act. The two-thirds rule obviously is designed as a check, not on the power of Congress, but on the power of the President.

A commitment to a foreign government can be effective as domestic law without approval by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. From the beginning of our national history down to the present day, the Executive, acting in conformity with previous acts of Congress, has entered into Executive agreements with foreign nations without obtaining the approval of the Senate by a two-thirds vote, and such agreements have been recognized and held valid by the courts.

I repeat, the only question that can arise on this branch of the legislation is the validity of the particular act of Congress which it is now sought to enact, giving to the President the power and authority to negotiate Executive agreements. It has been asserted that the second feature of the bill, whereby the President is permitted to adjust rates within a 50-percent range, is an improper and illegal attempt to delegate the legislative and taxing powers of the Congress. The question arises: Is not the making of a tariff a legislative power? The obvious answer is yes, and Congress in the proposed bill is exercising that very power. In the true sense of the word tariff making is a legislative power. But from this, in the light of the decisions of the Supreme Court, it does not follow that the only way in which Congress can make the tariff is by prescribing every detail of its operation and every rate for each article imported. Indeed, a study of the tariff acts reveals that exactly the contrary is true, for in not one of the tariff acts has Congress ever undertaken to prescribe every detail of the operation of the act itself and every rate for each article imported.

The fact is that the Congress from the earliest days has recognized that in the regulation of such a matter as foreign commerce, wherein nice adjustment and flexibility is necessary, due to changing domestic conditions and changing governmental attitudes and actions abroad, it has often proved necessary to invoke the assistance of some central, compact authority which could from time to time exercise a rationalizing judgment. Under our system of government Congress has naturally turned to the Chief Executive to meet this need.

The Supreme Court of the United States has shown itself to be aware of this need. On two notable occasions the Court has been called upon to decide whether acts of Congress improperly delegated the tariff-making power to the President. In both of these instances the Court has availed itself of the opportunity to speak directly to the point. In Field v. Clark (1892) (143 U.S. 649) the Court said, on page 691:

> • • • In the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government, it is often desirable, if not essential, for the protection of the interests of our people against the unfriendly or discriminating regulations established by foreign governments in the interests of their people, to invest the President with large discretion in matters arising out of the execution of statutes relating to trade and commerce with other nations.

That this is true is evidenced by many previous enactments of Congress. From time to time the Congress has authorized the President—

First. To lay embargoes on ships and vessels (act of June 4, 1794).

Second. To remit and discontinue restraints and prohibitions prescribed by Congress with respect to commercial intercourse (acts of Feb. 9, 1899, and Dec. 19, 1806).

Third. To revive restrictions and prohibitions with respect to commercial intercourse previously removed (acts of Mar. 1, 1809, and May 1, 1810).

Fourth. To declare the repeal of acts imposing duties on the tonnage of ships and vessels and on goods, wares, and merchandise (acts of Mar. 3, 1815, and May 31, 1830).

Fifth. To suspend the free entry of specified articles and to enter into executive agreements for the free introduction of such articles on a basis of reciprocity (act of Oct. 1, 1890).

Sixth. To enter into commercial agreements granting reciprocal and equivalent concessions, and to suspend by proclamation the imposition and collection of duties provided for by Congress (act of July 24, 1897).

Seventh. To grant minimum rates prescribed by Congress on imports (act of Aug. 5, 1909).

Eighth. (a) To lower or raise duties to equalize cost of production; (b) to exclude articles from importation on grounds of unfair competition; (c) to specify and declare new and additional duties when discrimination against American products is found to exist (acts of Sept. 21, 1922, and June 17, 1930).

The granting of such powers to the President has been consistently upheld by the courts. Enactments such as these show the development of reliance on executive action for adjustments to meet current conditions and contemporary practices of other nations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GEORGE. I do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the able Senator from Georgia emphasized the fact that the earlier statutes cited by him are particularly significant, in that they were passed through the Congress by men who had much to do with framing the Constitution?

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator for his observation; and I think the recitation of the fact is quite sufficient to give emphasis to the thought he has in mind. I had not especially emphasized that fact. The dates of the acts themselves, of course, disclose that they came early after the establishment of the Government under the Constitution, when many of those who participated in framing the Constitution were, of course, actual participants in much of the legislation passed.

Mr. President, I digress to emphasize one thought upon this phase of the question, and that is that the only question which can legitimately arise is whether or not an Executive agreement is authorized by a valid act of the Congress. If it is, that is an end to the question so far as any infringement upon the treaty-making power of the Senate as a branch of the Congress is concerned.

The second question is the important question in this particular legislation.

I desire now to consider in some detail the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Hampton Co. v. United States (1928) (276 U.S. 394), a case often referred to in this debate. This case arose under section 315 of the Tariff Act of 1922, which section was reenacted in substance in section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The issue raised in this case involved the question of the constitutionality of the so-called "flexible tariff provision", upon which depended the authority of the President to proclaim an increase of 2 cents per pound in the duty fixed by Congress.

It was contended that the flexible tariff provisions of section 315 were invalid as an improper delegation of the taxing power reserved to Congress by the Constitution. The Court, by unanimous decision, rejected this contention. The rule governing such questions was stated in the opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Taft, at page 409; and I invite particular attention to the ruling made in that case, not to what was said by way of argument in the subsequent discussion of the principle laid down:

> If Congress shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to fix such rates is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power.

Note—

> If Congress shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to fix such rates is directed to conform—

such legislation is valid, said the Court.

The soundness of the decision in the Hampton case is a question upon which I have spoken, and I retract not one whit from what I have previously said in this body in the discussion of that case so far as my personal views are concerned; but we are here concerned, not with our views of the Constitution, but with what the Constitution is as interpreted by the Supreme Court. "If Congress shall lay down * * * an intelligible principle", says the Court, such legislation is valid. Now, let me ask, What intelligible principle can be laid down as a predicate upon which reciprocal tariff agreements can be made by this country with any other country aside from the intelligible principle stated in this bill?

I cannot imagine the predication of power upon any honest principle, freely and fairly and openly declared, save the one recognized in this bill as the basis of the authority to the President. I am not now discussing the desirability or the advisability or the wisdom of bargaining tariff making through Executive agreement. I am discussing the question involved in this bill; to wit, What intelligible principle can be the foundation for the exercise by the Executive of the power which this bill seeks to give him, save the expansion of our foreign commerce?

We need not be confused by mere formula. We need not be confused by uncertainty of criterion. That is not the test which the Supreme Court in the Hampton case recognized. The validity of the flexible provision of the Tariff Act of 1922 was made to depend upon the declaration by the Congress of an intelligible principle for the guidance of the Executive in making or changing tariffs. I ask again, and let it be answered, Assuming that tariff bargaining by Executive agreement is desirable and necessary, what intelligible principle can be laid down save the purpose of expanding American commerce? That is the basis and the only reason and only excuse for tariff alteration or change by executive agreement.

The Court further found the intention of Congress to be clear; that is, the intention of Congress as expressed in the flexible provisions of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. I quote again the words of Chief Justice Taft:

> Its plan was to secure by law the imposition of customs duties on articles of imported merchandise which should equal the difference between the cost of producing in a foreign country the articles in question and laying them down for sale in the United States, and the cost of producing and selling like or similar articles in the United States, so that the duties not only secure revenue but at the same time enable domestic producers to compete on terms of equality with foreign producers in the markets of the United States.

The objectives of Congress are thus explicitly interpreted by the Court to be the establishment of duties which will (1) secure revenue in fact as well as in theory, and (2) regulate commerce so as to enable the domestic producer to compete on equal terms in the home market with the foreign producer so far as costs of production are concerned. Both of these objectives were approved by the Court as being within the proper field for regulation by Congress.

Before passing to the Court's treatment of the principles and plan established by Congress for the realization of these objectives, it is of interest to compare the objectives of the present bill. The sharply altered condition of world trade, and particularly the perilous situation of our own export trade, upon which the objectives of the present bill are predicated, are well known.

Upon this point I wish to make use of a map, merely for the purpose of stating the facts disclosed by the map, prepared by the American Manufacturers' Export Association. The facts, however, are based upon official figures.

The total exports of certain important enumerated articles in 1929 from all the States of the Union amounted to $5,146,000,000. In 1932—and the condition has not greatly improved since the end of 1932—the total exports of the same important commodities or products amounted to only $1,576,000—an actual loss in our exports of these important articles and products of $3,570,000.

Let us see how impressive the figures become when we apply them to States. Let us take, first, the State of New York. The total exports from that State of textiles, automobiles and parts, undressed furs, flour, books, maps, and printed matter, in 1929, amounted to $957,000,000; in 1932, to only $248,000,000, showing a loss in exports of the products of that State of $709,000,000.

Let us take next the State of South Carolina. The exports from that State of cotton, tobacco, textiles, lumber, and asbestos, amounted, in 1929, to $28,000,000; in 1932, to $16,000,000.

Let us consider the exports of the State of Georgia. In 1929 the exports of cotton, naval stores, lumber, metals and manufactures, and tobacco, amounted to $71,000,000; in 1932, to only $23,000,000, showing a loss in exports of $48,000,000.

Let us take the State of Texas for illustration. The total exports from that great State of cotton, petroleum, sulphur, carbon black, and rice, in 1929 amounted to $658,000,000; in 1932, to only $300,000,000.

Let us take the State of California. The exports from that State of petroleum, fresh and dried fruits, barley, canned goods, in 1929 amounted to $380,000,000; in 1932, to $149,000,000, showing a loss in the exports of that great State of $231,000,000.

Allowing for some decline in the value of exports, the picture is unquestionably true on the whole.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I trust that the Senator from Georgia will include in his remarks a table setting out in detail the losses in exports annually, indicated by him, for each of the States of the Union.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to do that, but without stopping to recite them now.

(The table referred to is printed at the end of Mr. GEORGE's remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now digress to say that from the dawn of civilization those nations which have recognized the value of foreign commerce have grown rich and prosperous; those which have recognized the desirability of living within themselves on their own fat, have fried in their own fat in the long run.

This Nation, I cheerfully concede, can more nearly live within its own borders than most other nations, let us say, as a matter of pride, than any other nation whose resources have been mobilized and organized up to this date; but as certainly as that the sun shines, if this Nation elects to live within itself, we will become a poor nation, relatively, because that is in keeping with all of the facts of the economic history of the world.

It has been said, and repeatedly said, that at most our exports have amounted to only 10 percent, or 9 percent, or 7 percent, of our total production; but I desire to say, with all of the emphasis in me, that those exports, nevertheless, have constituted the surplus money of this Nation, the surplus capital of the Nation, and they always will constitute the surplus capital of our Nation. They are multiplied in our domestic economy at least five times over, and we cannot forego them permanently without a loss of wealth in the United States and to the people of the United States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it should also be added that the export business of the United States formerly directly or indirectly employed millions of Americans who are at this time reported unemployed.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite right. I meant to embrace that, of course without enumeration, in the declaration upon which I stand, that the export surplus, the value of the exports over and above the imports, our participation in foreign trade, are multiplied many times over in the domestic economy, and they enter into the prices of all our raw products and into the employment of labor in the United States.

Mr. President, going back to the words of the bill itself, I quote: "For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States"; and since it is a supplementary amendment to the tariff act, this bill has as its object also to provide revenue, which objective will be more fully realized under the plan of operation provided in the bill—"by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States."

There could be no doubt with regard to the constitutionality of the objectives of the bill before the Senate. This is made abundantly clear when we set these objectives beside the objectives of our tariff acts which have had the express approval of the Supreme Court itself.

After approving the legality of the objective of Congress in the Tariff Act of 1922, the Court examined principles and plans of operation provided by the Congress to realize these objectives. The Court found the intention of Congress to be clear in this respect also. Duties were to be so adjusted that they should equalize the difference between the costs of production abroad and at home, and in order to implement this policy, Congress invoked the assistance of the Chief Executive. With the assistance of the Tariff Commission, the President was authorized to raise or lower the basic tariff rates within a 50-percent range in order to equalize any difference between the costs of production of goods imported from abroad and those produced at home. In reply to argument of counsel to the effect that no definite formula had been laid down by Congress, inasmuch as it was impossible to ascertain the difference in costs of production with any degree of precision, the Court said, at page 404:

> It may be that it is difficult to fix with exactness this difference, but the difference which is sought in the statute is perfectly clear and perfectly intelligible.

Bear in mind, the test which the Court laid down in the Hampton case was not the certainty of criteria, was not the certainty of formulae, but the declaration of an intelligible principle, and they come back to it in the discussion of the formulae.

> But the difference which is sought in the statute is perfectly clear and perfectly intelligible.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Does the Senator really think that the definition given in the pending bill is perfectly intelligible? Does he really think that it is understandable to say that the President can act when restrictions are unduly restrictive? That is the language of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I think so, because in prior acts he was authorized to act when he found it to be in the public interest, and that particular power was upheld. I beg to remind the Senator that that was a legislative power as well as a delegation of the authority to change tariffs.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am speaking under a limitation of time; but if the Senator wishes to ask a question, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. LONG. In the prior acts, however, Congress prescribed what the rates should be, and they allowed the President simply to place them in effect, as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; that is quite true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the interstate commerce act a rule was provided for the guidance of the Commission.

They were to ascertain and put into effect just and reasonable rates.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; it was provided as the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was more general than the provision contained in the pending measure.

Mr. GEORGE. It is true that in the McKinley Act and in the Dingley Act the rate itself was prescribed by Congress, but the point I make is that it is equally legislative power to declare when the act shall become effective as it is to fix the rate itself. The act did not become effective upon the happening of an event about which there could be no dispute; it became effective when, in the public interest, the President found it necessary to put the rates prescribed by Congress into effect.

Mr. President, the Chief Justice went further in the Hampton case, and stated that the very impossibility of providing exact formulas for such desired adjustments in the basic duties was reason for invoking the assistance of the Chief Executive in the matter.

Permit me to quote his exact language again:

> Because of the difficulty in practically determining what that difference is, Congress seems to have doubted that the information in its possession was such as to enable it to make the adjustment accurately, and also to have apprehended that with changing conditions the difference might vary in such way that some readjustments would be necessary to give effect to the principle upon which the statute proceeds. As it was a matter of great importance it concluded to give by statute to the President, the chief of the executive branch, the function of determining the difference as it might vary.

Let me digress to say, Mr. President, that while the difference between the cost of production of a given article at home and abroad is the formula laid down in the flexible tariff act, and while the power to make that determination is in the President, as a matter of fact the difference between cost of production of a given article at home and abroad cannot be definitely determined, and it was upon that ground that I thought the flexible provision of the Tariff Act of 1922 should be held unconstitutional.

Moreover it not only cannot be ascertained, but it changes overnight, and any man with common sense and experience knows that it changes overnight. Even if at the given instance when the rate is declared that difference has been accurately ascertained, in the moment after the ink has dried upon the signature of the Chief Executive, it may again be changed and modified by rapidly changing conditions.

The act itself recognized that this difference could not be ascertained, because it went further, and provision is made that when the cost of manufacturing the article abroad cannot be ascertained then the President is to take what? Any necessary criterion fixing that cost? By no means. He is to take the American selling price of the particular article as it is landed in this country and sold in the open market, whatever may be the exigency and necessity of the foreign manufacturer who must sell upon our market, regardless of what it cost him to manufacture or produce his article.

I am not contending that the criterion or the formula laid down in the flexible-tariff provision is not more exact and definite than the broad criterion or the broad predicate upon which the President is authorized to act under the pending bill; but I ask, If tariff making is to be had by Executive agreement, if it is necessary or proper now or at any time, what criterion can be laid down, what honest declaration of principle can be made save the finding of the Executive authority that it is necessary to expand foreign markets? That is the heart of it. That is the basis of it. Without it, it can never be justified.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, because I know he is under a time limit. I speak as a layman, and I am merely anxious to get the Senator's expert legal opinion. Would it not be simpler, under the circumstances which the Senator is describing, to merely have the bill provide that the President, whenever he finds it in the public interest, may do so and so?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that was what was done in paragraph 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. CUTTING. I understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was the language used.

Mr. CUTTING. And would it not be simpler to do it now, if that would make the measure constitutional?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator would not contend that that is a more definite rule than that which the Senator from Georgia is discussing.

Mr. GEORGE. No; and I would say frankly to the Senator from New Mexico that that is my interpretation of the rather broad language used here. At least, when boiled down it comes to that in the public interest. But, of course, the public interest with respect to our foreign commerce is the sale of more of our goods in the channels of foreign trade. Public interest, however, involves much more than that, and the Senator from New Mexico very properly points that out.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield for a question, although I am speaking, of course, under very limited time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I just wanted to ask whether this language could be construed in any way except as the person administering it exercises his own opinion? Is not the question, "Whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly * * * restricting the foreign trade" largely a question of opinion upon which people very greatly differ?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a matter of settled judgment, and so is the question of the cost of producing merchandise in Italy as compared with producing the same merchandise in the United States, one of opinion, one of judgment, one of discretion. It must necessarily be so. So it was also a matter of discretion and opinion under the earlier acts governing our commerce when the President was authorized to issue an outright embargo whenever he found that in the public interest it was necessary to do so. Certainly it was a matter of settled judgment.

Perhaps the most significant expression of the Supreme Court of the United States on this question is to be found in the opinion of the court at page 406 of the Hampton case. May I ask Senators' closest attention as I read these words, which to my mind are of the greatest significance and pertinence to the present consideration. Quoting from the language of the Chief Justice at page 406:

> In determining what it (the Congress) may do in seeking assistance from another branch (the executive), the extent and character of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of the governmental coordination.

There is the rule in the Hampton case. The President may negotiate these executive treaties or these executive agreements which cannot change existing law, but which must conform to existing law, whenever the Congress lays down an intelligible principle. And—

> In determining what it (the Congress) may do in seeking assistance from another branch (the executive), the extent and character of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of governmental coordination.

If the Court means what it says, you cannot have tariff bargaining by executive agreement unless you are frank enough and honest enough to lay down the formula which this bill contains. I am not now arguing whether you want tariff in that way. I am not now presenting the question of whether it is advisable or wise to have a change in tariffs through Executive action.

On that point I desire to digress for a moment. We have heard many times about the dangerous power given the President under this bill to change our tariff rates. Bear in mind now and let us speak exactly: "Alter our basic tariff rates." This bill does not give the President one single ounce of power over the basic tariff rate that he does not now possess under the flexible provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930. The conditions under which he may exercise that power vary, of course, but I am speaking about the extent of his power.

Under the flexible tariff he cannot take an article from the free list and put it upon the dutiable list. Under this bill he cannot take an article from the free list and put it upon the dutiable list so far as alteration of tariff rates is concerned. Under the present tariff act he cannot take an article from the dutiable list and place it upon the free list. Under this bill he cannot take an article from the dutiable list and place it upon the free list.

Under the tariff act the President may exercise the dangerous power of changing tariffs 50 percent up or 50 percent down. Under this bill the President may exercise that power, and only that power. He cannot alter an existing basic rate of duty more than 50 percent up or down.

The power is precisely, is exactly, the same; and if it is dangerous in one case, it is dangerous in the other case.

The conditions under which he exercises it are different. The formula which he is authorized to apply is different in making the changes. But the power is there, and I now wish to emphasize what was emphasized yesterday on the floor of the Senate—that the power to change the tariff under the flexible provision is not in the Tariff Commission, it is in the President and in the President alone. He is authorized to make use of the Tariff Commission. The Tariff Commission is advisory under both the act of 1922 and the act of 1930. He may take their judgment. But, as President Coolidge did in the sugar case, he may refuse to follow it after they have found the difference in the cost of production of sugar abroad and in the United States. He may find the fact, as has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court, independently of and beyond the findings made by the Tariff Commission itself. So that the power is vested in the same agency—the Chief Executive—and precisely the same power is given under existing law as is proposed to be given under this bill.

Now, I want to repeat what the Supreme Court did hold in the Hampton case:

> In determining what it (the Congress) may do in seeking assistance from another branch (the executive), the extent and character of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of governmental coordination.

If we want changes in the tariff through Executive action, such changes must be predicated upon the common-sense declaration made in the pending bill. They can be predicated upon no other ground; that is, they cannot be frankly and honestly predicated upon any other ground, save the expansion of our foreign commerce and the opening of markets for American-made products.

Coming back to the decision in the Hampton case, the Court thus upheld the constitutionality of a tariff law under which the Congress, in response to what it deemed the necessities of prevailing conditions, sought to assist the domestic producer by affording him an opportunity for equal competition in the home market through equalizing the difference between domestic and foreign costs of production.

Today world conditions are totally altered. If the American standard of living which the Congress sought to foster and protect in the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930 through the technique of adjusting the tariff rates to varying costs of production is to be restored and maintained, normal industrial and agricultural production must be made possible by reopening the foreign markets which these products previously enjoyed. To accomplish this requires more than facilities for adjusting and keeping in balance merely one phase of commercial activity; that is to say, equalizing the cost of production. In the words of the Supreme Court, "common sense and the inherent necessities of the governmental coordination" require the Congress to use a different technique in treating these new conditions. It is imperatively necessary to administer intelligently and quickly the other vital aspects of commerce which follow production, namely, distribution and consumption.

May I again digress to say that we carried production under war pressure to a height which it had not previously reached, but, if common sense prevails, we will recognize and must recognize that the great problem of this present time is the distribution and consumption of products, and not the mere making of products. Indeed, the new tariff barriers all over the world, the new customhouses that came out of the Treaty of Versailles, following the incidents of war, broke up and disrupted the ordinary trade and commerce and intercourse between nations long established and impeded the commerce of the world precisely as physical barriers will impede the physical progress of men who wish to travel the physical highways of the world. We are asked to recognize that fact, and to recognize it only. The Congress has fixed the tariff rates; the Congress has said what those rates must be on every commodity or article especially enumerated. The Congress proposes to say that when trade restrictions are unduly burdensome upon our commerce, when our markets abroad may be expanded, we will permit the President to negotiate an executive agreement with the foreign nation in question or with numerous foreign nations, in order that we may again recapture much of our lost commerce.

I recognize that men differ upon the question of how valuable is this commerce. I have dealt with that question. I recognize that men may honestly differ about the desirability of reaching out after foreign trade and foreign commerce. Far from being a free-trader, in any sense of the word, under existing conditions, and in view of our own standards and well-recognized and established doctrines and principles, I, nevertheless, believe with all my heart that a more liberal trade policy upon the part of this and every other great commercial nation is needed at this moment, among other things, again to build back anything like permanent stability and prosperity among the nations of the earth.

It does not mean free-trade; it does not mean the wiping out of tariffs. It means simply the taking of a sensible view of this broad problem, not in the light of the particular commodity which is grown in my State or which may be manufactured in your State but in the light of the interest and the welfare of all the people of the United States.

Within the past 4 years we have been made painfully aware that the deleterious effects of the world-wide maladjustment of the processes of distribution upon our domestic economy have been equal to or greater than inequalities in costs of production. Regardless of the relative importance of these factors in the entire process which constitutes trade and prosperity, the demonstrable fact is that today it is the factors of distribution and consumption which are in need of immediate attention. Congress has, therefore, drawn this bill with the objective of assisting the domestic producer by again invoking for a limited period of 3 years the assistance of the Chief Executive as the only practical way to carry out effectively a plan for breaking the jam in the processes of distribution between nations. The plan is based upon the intelligible principle of negotiating trade agreements with other nations whereby the admission of foreign goods into the United States will be regulated, as provided in the bill itself—

> In accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States. * * *

To implement this bargaining principle upon which the plan is based, the Congress, following the procedure adopted and tested in the flexible provision of the tariff act, proposes to authorize the President, whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions unduly burden and restrict the processes of distribution and consumption of the foreign trade of the United States, to enter into executive trade agreements with foreign countries and to proclaim limited modifications in the basic duties and import restrictions established by Congress; and, as I have already indicated, the same limitation of 50-percent change up or down in the existing rates of duty, found in section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, is provided in this bill.

The principle laid down to which the President must adhere is found on page 2 of the bill, beginning with line 3, wherein Congress explains the plan for realizing the objectives of the bill—

By regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States.

There is the principle spelled out at some length—in short, it is a principle of reciprocal tariff bargaining. If the Congress desires to have its agent bargain with other countries for concessions, it must clothe the agent with authority to make concessions. The Congress has provided for this on page 2 of the bill, beginning at line 19, where the President is authorized—

To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign-trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign-trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder.

And then there follows the same 50-percent limitation in any changes in duties as is found in section 336 of the 1930 act.

What are the limitations upon the Executive in his bargaining? First, he cannot change the basic tariff rates more than 50 percent up or down; second, he can make only such modification or other action as is required to carry out trade agreements; only to this extent can he make any change in the tariff law; thirdly, no agreement can be made except for the purposes set out in the bill and in harmony with the basic principle thereof quoted above. Finally, before the President can exercise any power under the bill he must find—

As a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the means hereinafter specified.

Without dogmatizing, because upon a question of this kind no lawyer who feels responsibility would undertake to dogmatize, but accepting the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Hampton case—if Congress establishes an intelligible principle to which the Chief Executive is to conform, it is proper for the Congress to command the assistance of the Chief Executive in varying the customs duties.

The principle of bargaining is certainly intelligible to the American people.

No fair-minded person can say that the principle of bargaining to open the lanes of distribution and markets of consumption by the Chief Executive in aid of the domestic producer is not as intelligible and practicable a principle within the rule announced in the Hampton case as that of equalizing the costs of production the world over as compared with prevailing costs in the United States.

Testing the validity of this bill as the Court will approach it, we must bear in mind the exigency of the situation, the common knowledge of which has been supported and amplified by testimony of those responsible for having accurate knowledge. We must also bear in mind that it is the consensus of opinion that the proposed method is the only practical procedure open to us, an opinion which is borne out by the practice and experience of most of the other nations of the world.

I call to witness the fact that those nations which have resorted to executive tariff bargaining have increased their foreign trade and commerce by a greater percentage than our own has increased. I call to witness that fact in this particular emergency as indicated in the testimony adduced at the hearings on the pending bill.

Accepting the rule of the Hampton case as the law of the land—and this rule we must accept as long as it stands, whatever our own personal opinion may be regarding the soundness of the decision—the conclusion seems to be certain, as nearly certain as one would dare assert, that a favorable decision is likely and probable from the Court sustaining the validity of this bill when and if the bill becomes law and its constitutionality is brought before the Court for its decision.

I have already mentioned some of the previous enactments of Congress granting to the President power to deal with matters of foreign commerce ranging from the levying of an absolute embargo to the suspension or imposition of customs duties. Most of these precedents were adduced in the case of Field against Clark, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1892. That case is said to be not in point with regard to the bill now before the Senate, because in that case the rates which the President was authorized to put into effect or suspend were fixed by the Congress. Yet the President, before he could suspend or put such rates into effect, was required to exercise a very broad discretionary power. He was obliged to find that the suspension of the rate was in the interest of the common welfare.

I again emphasize that the making of a rate is a congressional function, that the carrying into effect of the rate made is equally a congressional function, and yet that function was delegated to the President under the act considered in Field against Clark and was sustained by the Supreme Court, and that case is in point upon that feature of the pending bill.

Moreover, that case is precisely in point upon the question of the broad distinction between an Executive agreement and a treaty. The court there recognized that the fundamental distinction is not the one noted here by Senators, but it is that the Executive agreement must conform to existing law and he has not the power to alter or change it, whereas a treaty, when ratified by the Senate, becomes the supreme law of the land and supersedes conflicting congressional acts.

The President was authorized to act only when he should be satisfied that a foreign government producing and exporting certain specified articles had imposed duties or other exactions upon exports of the United States which he deemed "to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable."

I am sorry the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] is not present at the moment. It is the exact clause; it is almost the language of this bill. Here was a congressional power. Congress fixed the rate and said to the President, "You may put certain rates into effect or you may abrogate certain rates on sugar, molasses, and sirup." But it also said to the President, "We delegate to you the power to change those rates—that is, to put them into effect or to withdraw the rates—when you, as President, shall find that other countries, against whom the rates were to be invoked, of course, have enacted laws which you deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable." That contemplated the judgment of the President, of course, the judgment of the Chief Executive, the settled conviction of the Chief Executive, of course; but the Supreme Court held that that delegation of power was authorized under the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I will take my time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized for 20 minutes on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the determination of when duties are "reciprocally unequal and unreasonable" is more a matter of precise fact than the determination of when duties "are as a fact * * * unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States." So far as the formulas laid down in the flexible-tariff provisions of the acts of 1922 and 1930 are concerned, we have the testimony of Robert Lincoln O'Brien, the Chairman of the Tariff Commission, himself a Republican. Mr. O'Brien testified, both before the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance, to the effect that the formula of equalizing the cost of production was impossible to administer with any degree of precision; that it was an extremely indefinite matter and left much to the discretion and judgment of those administering the law. As to the fact that under section 336 of the present tariff law, it is really the President to whom the Congress has delegated the power to modify existing tariffs, Mr. O'Brien was equally emphatic in his testimony. He said:

> Tariff making by the Tariff Commission is Presidential tariff making. * * * I want to impress upon you gentlemen that the present 336 method is Presidential tariff making; if it is tariff lowering, it is Presidential tariff lowering.

In point of fact the decision in the case of Field against Clark was strongly relied upon in the Hampton case. I cannot do better than quote the decisive language of Mr. Chief Justice Taft on page 409 of the opinion:

> If it is thought wise to vary the customs duties according to changing conditions of production at home and abroad, it (Congress) may authorize the Chief Executive to carry out this purpose, with the advisory assistance of a tariff commission appointed under congressional authority. This conclusion is amply sustained by a case in which there was no advisory commission furnished the President—a case to which this Court gave the fullest consideration nearly 40 years ago. In Field v. Clark (143 U.S. 649, 680) * * *.

I now desire to give some attention to the part which the prevailing emergency conditions may play in any careful consideration of the constitutionality of this bill. Upon this point I find myself generally in accord with those who considered it. However, the court may properly take into account the part which such conditions play in determining whether a given principle of established law is properly applied to a particular piece of legislation.

Although the bill is designed to meet a very real emergency, an extraordinary condition obtaining here, as I have tried to show from the actual figures, and obtaining also throughout the world, it is not a compromise with emergency and its constitutionality is not and need not be predicated upon any doctrine that an emergency creates powers which are not at other times to be found within the Constitution.

The principle upon which the Hampton case was decided is familiar to us, and the only real question, so far as validity goes, before this body, therefore, is whether the plan proposed in this bill is a proper application of this principle. In my opinion the need for and the practicability of the plan now under consideration have been demonstrated beyond any reasonable doubt, both by the critical situation of our foreign trade and the current practices of other nations. As was said by the United States Supreme Court in its recent decision on the Minnesota moratorium law—and I think the language of the Court itself should be noted:

> While emergency does not create power, emergency may furnish the occasion for the exercise of power. Although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless, emergency may afford a reason for the exercise of a living power, already enjoyed. The constitutional question presented in the light of an emergency is whether the power possessed embraces the particular exercise of it in response to particular conditions.

The Hampton case has established that there does reside in the Constitution the power in Congress to invoke the assistance of the Chief Executive to vary the customs duties according to changing conditions of production at home and abroad. It cannot be asserted that this power was intended to be or is so limited as to include only changing conditions of production. Is it not entirely reasonable to conclude that if the necessity exists for invoking the assistance of the Chief Executive to adjust the customs duties from time to time, the Congress may say to the Chief Executive, "Adjust these duties not only with regard to the varying costs of production but also with regard to the varying barriers to the distribution of goods produced at home and abroad"?

Whatever part the question of an emergency may or may not play in the principles of constitutional law, certain it is that the Supreme Court of the United States would attach great weight to the prevailing exigency if called upon to decide whether Congress had acted properly in invoking the assistance of the Chief Executive in this particular respect. The Court has gone far to make abundantly clear that it looks upon this question in no narrow, formalistic manner.

In an opinion handed down by the Court on Monday last, a case involving the validity of an Arkansas statute, the majority of the Court again recognized that the proper application of a particular principle as translated into legislation might depend upon existing conditions.

Of course, there is in the Constitution no power that is not there equally in peace as in war, under good or under bad conditions, without regard to emergencies or existing conditions; but the right of the legislative branch of the Government to exercise that power may well depend upon extraordinary conditions. Every legislative body has recognized that principle from time immemorial.

Many things that are appropriate in the face of a major emergency threatening the very existence of the Nation itself, as in war, could not for a moment be sustained and maintained if it were sought by the legislative branch to make applicable the same principle to peace-time conditions and to the normal affairs of the Nation. To that extent, and to that extent only, has the question of extraordinary conditions or emergency any part in the discussion of this bill.

I have discussed the matter from the standpoint of what the Court has decided. In the light of the principles laid down by the Court, I repeat, in that discussion I do not abate one single whit my own personal view and conviction that the Hampton case might have been decided, consonant with sound principles of law under our Constitution, the other way.

We are now called upon, however, to say whether this measure in all probability will have the sanction of the court, and we are called upon to pass upon that question in the light of the facts as they exist, in the light of Executive tariff making in many parts of the world, and in the light of the fact that if Executive tariff making can be indulged under our system, it must be predicated upon the proposition of finding markets for our own products. Upon the firm conviction which I have that this is a fundamental step back toward normal restoration of prosperous conditions, not only in our own country but also throughout the world, I am going to resolve any doubt in my mind in favor of the validity of this bill, and vote for its passage.

I do so, Mr. President, again not because I am unmindful of the danger of delegating legislative power, whether taxing power or not, to any agency, whether the Chief Executive or not, but also because in present extraordinary conditions I see no other way to meet them as they exist, to break the log jam in the trade and commerce of the world, to set currents again in motion, and distinctly because this power is limited and restricted in its exercise, by the terms of the bill, to a short period of time.

It need not be said that if the power be once given, it will be continued. This Congress itself already has indicated that it would not extend for another year the licensing power given the President or the Administrator under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

It is true that that licensing power was never used, but it is well known that the Administrator at one time desired an extension of the power. Already, however, even the threat to ask for that extension has been abandoned; and it is decidedly uncertain whether this Congress will extend and enlarge the licensing power given to the Administrator under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which the Administrator himself is asking at the hands of this Congress.

So we may treat these conditions as extraordinary; and if lack of faith and confidence be invoked in the processes of democratic government, as those in opposition to the bill have asserted, may we not remind them that they may have confidence in the integrity and courage of the legislative branch of the Government under the Constitution to discontinue this extraordinary power to the President at the time fixed in this bill if happily the extraordinary conditions which now seem to justify its use shall have ceased to exist.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table to which I have referred, showing the value of domestic exports from the United States, by States from which shipped, during 1929 and 1932, and the percentage decrease.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. GEORGE F. BRUMM, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 40) authorizing and directing the Clerk of the House to make certain changes in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 5884) "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, the bill now pending (H.R. 8430) proposing to give the President power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements, is one of the most important measures, if not the most important measure, which has come before this Congress.

In his message to the Congress the President said that this legislation "is an essential step in the program of national economic recovery", and is "necessitated by the economic crisis through which we are passing."

It is not my purpose to repeat the arguments that have been made here, nor to dwell upon the facts already furnished this body in support of the measure. It has been shown that the total exports of the United States decreased from $5,241,000,000 in 1929 to $1,675,000,000 in 1933; that United States imports fell from $4,399,000,000 in 1929 to $1,499,000,000 in 1933; that the American share of world trade decreased in that time from about 13.83 percent to 10.92 percent; that the proportion of such trade lost by the United States has been gained by other nations; that there are about 27,000,000 of unemployed in the world and about 10,000,000 of that number are in the United States; that by reason of such reduced foreign trade some 700,000 people in the United States are unemployed in our foreign trade.

It has been further shown that the principle of reciprocal trade agreements is by no means new in this country.

Without attempting to trace the origin and history of the policy of reciprocity in our Government, it is interesting to note the recurring declarations in favor of this policy appearing in the platforms of both major political parties since the Civil War. For instance, there are ringing declarations in the Republican platforms of 1892, 1896, 1900, and 1904 extolling reciprocity.

The Democratic platforms have likewise declared adherence to this doctrine time and again, and the 1932 platform contained a strong declaration in favor of reciprocal-tariff agreements with other nations.

So far as the policy of reciprocity in trade relations is concerned, therefore, there is nothing new in the proposal before us. The only new feature about it is the transfer of a broader power than heretofore transferred to the executive department of the Government. That reciprocal trade agreements are desirable and furnish the only method of increasing our world trade under present conditions is very generally conceded. The method of bringing about this result is the real question involved.

Before the World War the United States was a debtor nation and paid out about $200,000,000 annually in interest. This enabled the United States to show a favorable trade balance year after year. Since the World War foreign nations owe the United States from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 annually in interest, which means that the United States is a creditor nation. Our export trade, however, was kept up until about 1929 by means of huge loans to these foreign nations.

The discontinuance of these loans, the stock-market crash, and the enactment of the so-called "Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act" in 1930, followed by the enormous loss of world trade, were the most important factors in the economic collapse. Largely as the result of this tariff act, retaliatory tariffs, quotas, embargoes, and other import restrictions were enacted by foreign countries.

The loss of world trade is due to such import restrictions, to inability of foreign nations to pay for imports in money or credit, and to the cessation of interest payments and loans to Europe by the United States. The only hope of increasing world trade is through international barter. To enlarge the volume of trade by barter is, as I understand it, the purpose of this bill to provide for reciprocal-trade agreements.

There are two possible methods of bringing about such agreements—one by reciprocity treaties ratified by the Congress and the other by reciprocal executive agreements under a specific authorization by Congress. In a recent letter transmitted to the Senate in response to Senate Resolution 325, the Tariff Commission related our experience under these two methods covering a period of some 60 years. During that time 10 reciprocity treaties which did not become effective were negotiated under the general treaty powers. Out of the 10, 2 were rejected by foreign countries, 2 were negotiated by one President but not accepted by his successor, and the other 6 were suppressed by congressional action.

The Tariff Act of 1897 contained a direct authorization to the Executive to negotiate reciprocity treaties within certain limitations. Such explicit authorization, however, added nothing to the constitutional right of the Executive to negotiate treaties which would be effective upon ratification by the Senate, but it did indicate the intention of Congress to make treaties so negotiated effective by ratification. Under this authority 11 treaties—the so-called "Kasson Treaties"—were negotiated with various foreign countries, including Great Britain. These treaties were recommended by Presidents McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt. Not one of them ever came to a vote in the Senate.

During the last century, with three exceptions, all attempts on the part of the United States to complete reciprocity treaties have been aborted. Out of 21 such abortive treaties 16 failed of ratification by the Senate.

From the experience this Nation has had in efforts to complete reciprocity treaties it seems vain to hope for any results by that method.

This country has also had some experience with reciprocal executive agreements, and the result has been in marked contrast to the fate of the attempted reciprocity treaties.

Under the Tariff Act of 1890, 13 such agreements were negotiated by the Executive and only 1 failed to become effective owing to the failure of the other country to ratify it. Under the Tariff Act of 1897, nine such agreements were entered into and became effective.

The conclusion of the Tariff Commission in the letter above indicated is summed up in the following statement:

> The past experience of the United States with respect to the difficulty of obtaining reciprocal concessions by means of treaties and the greater success in negotiating executive agreements under previous authorization by the Congress may be significant as a guide to future policy regarding methods of tariff bargaining.

The past experience of other nations has likewise taught them the value of negotiating executive agreements under previous authorization of their legislative bodies. The difference between such other nations and our own is that most of them have profited by experience and have authorized in one form or another their executives to execute promptly reciprocal trade agreements that would be beneficial to their respective countries.

The executives of about 25 nations have been given power to change duties without reference to their legislative bodies.

The executives of about 25 other nations have power to change duties preferentially pending perfunctory approval by their legislatures. These include practically all the important commercial nations of the world outside of the United States.

As a result, these nations have entered into numerous trade agreements, many of which have deprived the United States of valuable markets for her surplus products.

As stated by Secretary Hull in his recent testimony before the House committee:

> Many nations during the past 1 and 2 years have entered into reciprocal trade agreements and promptly carried them into effect. They are not disposed to take the time and trouble to negotiate such arrangements with a country unable to place such agreements in operation without unreasonable or uncertain delay, if at all. Our Government negotiated the 10 commercial agreements known as the "John A. Kasson Commercial Treaties" under the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897, which, according to the current public opinion at the time would have doubled our foreign trade if allowed to operate. They were, however, filibustered to death in another body, as we are accustomed here in the House to say. In the light of our past disastrous experience in seeking to carry reciprocal or similar agreements into effect, our Government would have much difficulty in removing the skepticism of other countries.

The effectiveness of the action of foreign countries in giving power to their executives to negotiate such agreements is attested by frequent newspaper reports. For instance, in the Washington Star on May 9 last appeared an article with the following headline—

> Trade Pact Made by Three Nations—

The subhead being:

> Italy, Austria, and Hungary Agree on Reciprocal and Preferential Duties.

I shall not take the time to read the article, but I ask that it be printed at the conclusion of my remarks and as a part of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I will read one or two paragraphs of the article, which seem very significant on the point under discussion. I quote as follows:

> An Italo-Austro-Hungarian economic agreement was reached today and will be signed probably Saturday.

Reading further:

> This agreement is based on reciprocal and preferential duties, a minimum export price accord, and an agreement between the three nations to purchase fixed quantities of certain products.

The article continues with an account of the accord that had been reached, in which Austria and Italy agreed to buy Hungarian wheat, Hungary and Italy agreed to buy Austrian lumber and wood pulp, and Austria and Hungary agreed to tariff adjustments to build up Italian ports.

This is typical of agreements being made by other nations to the exclusion of the United States.

The real purpose, however, of my remarks today is to consider briefly the effect of the proposed measure upon American agriculture. Coming, as I do, from an agricultural State, and believing, as I do, that the interests of agriculture are fundamental in any program of economic rehabilitation, I am peculiarly interested in this measure as it relates to the farmers of the country.

Is there danger to the agricultural interests under a proposal to give the President power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with other nations? Can any substantial benefits be expected to accrue to agriculture as a result of the enactment of this measure?

It seems that most of those the country over who supported the so-called "Smoot-Hawley tariff bill" are now opposing this measure and they appear extremely solicitous of the welfare of agriculture under this bill. The beneficiaries of that tariff law, and that large portion of the press which reflects their views, are generally opposed to the present measure and are seeking to alarm the farmers of the country. It has been my observation that the beneficiaries of high protective tariffs on industrial commodities have always sought to alarm the farmers, to hold out the lure of minor or ineffective tariffs, and to obtain their support for ever-increasing tariff duties on manufactured products.

Let us examine just a few of the tariff rates now in effect on imported farm products as compared with imported manufactured goods.

The tariff on crude and manufactured foodstuffs is a shining example of our previous governmental policy. In 1928 the average rate of duty on unmanufactured foodstuffs was 3.5 percent of the value of the imports. In 1931 this was increased to 5.3 percent, and in 1933 it stood at 5 percent. At the same time the import duty on manufactured foodstuffs—that which had gone through the hands of our special protected interests—was, in 1928, 39.5 percent, which amount was increased to 59.1 percent in 1931, and stood at 52 percent in 1933. The grower of foodstuffs now has the sweet satisfaction of realizing that under the beneficent Smoot-Hawley Act the manufacturer has just a little more than 10 times the advantage accorded him. This should inspire the farmer with confidence in the present solicitude of some of the opponents of this measure.

These figures are obtained from a copy of a report of the Statistical Division of the United States Tariff Commission for May 1934.

This report further shows that crude materials other than foodstuffs had an average rate of duty of 5.4 percent in 1928, 9.4 percent in 1931, and 14 percent in 1933.

On semimanufactured products—such as wood pulp, poles, ties, metals, marble, and leather, in large measure produced and prepared by individuals and small business concerns—the average rate of duty was 6.6 percent in 1928, 6.2 percent in 1931, and 8 percent in 1933; while finished manufactured goods had an average duty of 25.8 percent in 1928, 24.7 percent in 1931, and 27.7 percent in 1933.

To be more specific, hides and skins of the bovine species carry a 10-percent duty, while boots and shoes carry 25 percent, leather gloves 64.3 percent, leather bags 37.4 percent, and harness and saddles 28 percent.

This indicates the sort of treatment that has been received by farmers and other producers of raw materials in the tariff game that has been played for several generations.

It is hardly necessary to remind the Members of this body and the country of the great disparity between prices of farm products and prices of manufactured goods used by farmers which has developed during the last 25 years.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it the Senator's view that we shall, under this proposed legislation, buy more manufactured goods from abroad in competition with our manufacturers here in order that we may sell more farm products abroad?

Mr. POPE. I think the President should have the power, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. No; I did not ask about power, Mr. President. The power is in the bill. But I ask the Senator if that is what he is driving at? Is that what he thinks should be done? Would that be an economic procedure?

Mr. POPE. The point I am making is that those who are opposing this bill are in general those who supported the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, and that they are not so much interested in the welfare of the farmer; and, as I shall point out a little later, the only hope for the farmer is to have the foreign markets for his products increased by this method or some other similar method.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean by "this method" our buying more manufactured goods, say, from England or Japan?

Mr. POPE. It may be thought to be wise to do that.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the object in view? Is that what we are driving at with this proposed legislation?

Mr. POPE. I cannot say, Mr. President, what the view of the President is as to details of the agreements to be made, but I do know from his statement that it is his purpose to make such arrangements as will enlarge our foreign trade.

In the testimony that was printed there were various suggestions made as to how that may be done. But my point will be, when I develop it, that I want the farmer in on any arrangement that will expand his market, so that he may have a market for his surplus products.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not want to be subjected to the classification of an opponent of the bill. I am trying to get some light. I will reiterate my question. The Senator has argued that we should provide the ways and means of increasing the export of our agricultural products abroad. I wish to know now if he argues that we are to do that by way of closing up or reducing the manufacture or sale of our own domestic products within our own country? If so, I wonder how the farmer will maintain his domestic trade?

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I cannot see that giving to the President the power to increase markets for farm products under arrangements such as are being made by other nations, a power which he would exercise wisely, we think, would mean closing up any manufacturing industry. It might mean reduction of some duties on manufactured goods, which, as I have shown, are much higher than agricultural duties and might very well be reduced.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator can very well state, it seems to me, that the farmer's domestic trade has not blossomed forth in such a manner as many anticipated since the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act increased tariff rates. Has the Senator seen any decided benefit to the State of Idaho or to its farmers from the increases carried in that act on manufactured products there?

Mr. POPE. The reverse is true, I would say.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator again, the chief agricultural exports of this country are cotton and tobacco, and the cotton trade for the present year is about where it was last year, and last year about where it was the year before. We are exporting from 8,000,000 to 9,000,000 bales a year. The tobacco exports are about 300,000,000 pounds a year. I shall now turn the question around. The Senator did not become quite clear in his statement as to what would be done with our exports of manufactured goods. Does the Senator conceive that the President of the United States, in order to increase the sale of manufactured goods, will authorize the lowering of the tariff so that foreign nations may sell us more agricultural products?

Mr. POPE. Do I conceive that the President could do that, or would?

Mr. BAILEY. There is no question about the power contained in the bill to do it.

Mr. POPE. I do not conceive that he would reduce the tariff on agricultural products, but a situation might arise where it would be of advantage to the farmer to have agricultural duties reduced as to some products in order to dispose of other products of which he had a surplus.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Coffee is an agricultural product of South America. Does the Senator not conceive the picture, that there are agricultural products such as coffee with reference to which some kind of bargain might be made by the United States Government?

Mr. LONG. What else, other than coffee, Mr. President?

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator not conceive that trade agreements might be made with regard to such products?

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to be drawn into the argument; but I think a partial answer to the wise question propounded by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] would be that whatever the farmer would gain by having additional farm markets, to that extent would increase his purchasing power, so that he could buy the products of the domestic market. It has been contended that under the present dispensation he does not have the money to buy the things he needs. Certainly, if he could sell one-half of his cotton, and 40 percent of his tobacco, and 20 percent of his wheat every year, which he has not been able to do, and with respect to which we have had a curtailment program, he would have more money to buy the things which we produce in our own country, and, therefore, would to that extent offset, even if not completely, the loss of trade that might result through additional importations of manufactured articles.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, assuming every premise stated by the Senator from Maryland, that the farmer's purchasing power were to be increased—and we should at the same time decrease the rates on manufactured imports—would not the farmer buy the manufactured imports rather than the domestic articles?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think I can answer that question exactly as presented. But may I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that nearly one-half of the population is rural, either dependent in full or in part upon agriculture. As a matter of fact, it is the largest single industry in the country, and has the largest purchasing power if it were put into the position to have it, whereas the number of manufactured articles that might come in, unless all the schedules were reduced, would affect only small groups of individual manufacturers, if at all. So the percentage of people who would be helped, I think it is only fair to say, would be larger if agriculture were helped, than if any other single group in any one line of manufacturing in the country were helped.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will conclude my part of this colloquy with just one remark. The Senator from Maryland predicates his statement and his argument on the theory that the President will close a number of smaller or less valuable industries in America. I should like to know if we are looking that in the face. Do we really intend by this legislation to authorize the President to destroy even one industry in America? I would rather have one industry going well here, to buy from our farmers, than a thousand in Japan.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it would be better to sacrifice one or two or three industries, which are not a part of the efficient political economy of the country, or which are not efficiently operated, or which are not efficiently located, than to sacrifice the nearly 50 percent of the people who are dependent upon agriculture. As we have the picture now, we have sacrificed the greater number of people to take care of the smaller industries. I would rather sacrifice a smaller number of industries and take care of the larger number of people. We cannot have the cake and eat it too. I think the Senator's interrogatory as to whether we must surrender something is pertinent, but I do think the prosperity of a maximum number of people on the farm would far outweigh any other prosperity; would outweigh the prosperity or injury that might be done to a smaller number engaged in manufacturing in some of our States.

Mr. BAILEY. I said I would conclude my remarks, and, if I correctly understand the Senator, I will not interrupt further. Insofar as we sacrifice the domestic industry to which he referred, we enhance the position and increase the prosperity of similar industries in other countries. Is that the policy of the Congress? Is that the rule upon which this proposed legislation is based, for which the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia argued so ably this morning? Is it the rule that justifies the constitutionality of the measure that we shall enter upon a policy which will build up small industries in other nations and destroy similar industries in our own Nation? Is that in contemplation?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think a very crude illustration of one benefit that might come under this proposed legislation can be given. We have in America no old wines. Those who drink wines are willing to concede, I think, as a matter of fact, that France and other countries abroad make better wines, because they are older at the game and because, due to prohibition, we have no old wines in this country. On the contrary, France produces very few apples, whereas in Maryland we produce many apples, 80 percent of which are exported. Those who have given consideration to the problems of the apple growers realize that France has not only put a high tariff on apples from the United States but has in force a quota limitation, so that only a certain quantity of apples may go into France. France cannot ship her wines here and we cannot ship our apples there. I do not see why, for example, we could not import more wines from France, provided France would import more apples from us. That would not only benefit the apple and wine producers in each country but would benefit everybody connected with the operation from the time the apple leaves the tree until it reaches France. It would benefit the railroad companies, and, incidentally, would help the coal miners, the equipment makers, the makers of rails, the banks which hold railroad bonds, the stocks which are held by investors in the country, the steamship companies—and there hemp and rope and cotton and lumber come in, because steamship companies, which use those commodities, must live on transportation, and the more trade there is back and forth, the more people there are employed, regardless of the production of the given article. So if we can exchange products, if we could work out an arrangement of that kind, not only would the producers and those intimately related with the particular commodity produced be benefited but all the indirect workers would be benefited—the maker of baskets, the builder of trucks used to haul the apples to the station, the manufacturers of the tires on the trucks, the drivers of the trucks, the baggagemaster, the brakeman, the engineer, the fireman, the coal miner, and all the others engaged in incidental activities connected with the marketing of that crop.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, if I may now follow my thought, the testimony at numerous hearings during the last 2 years has shown the extent of this disparity between the price of the things the farmer sells and the things he buys. Using 1910 to 1914 as the base period, represented by 100, the relative price of all farm commodities in 1932 was 57, while on the same base the prices paid by farmers for manufactured goods is represented by the figure 111. The whole purpose of agricultural legislation recently enacted has been to remove, so far as possible, this disparity.

The farmer does not need to be told, however, of the enormous, and to him hopeless, difference between the price that he receives for hides and the price he pays for shoes; the price he gets for wheat and the price he pays for bread; the price he gets for pork and the price he pays for cured hams and bacon; the price he gets for wool and the price he pays for woolen goods. He knows that the purchaser of his goods fixes the price of every dollar's worth of his farm products, and that the seller fixes the price of all the manufactured goods the farmer buys.

At the hearing before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, one witness, who had made a study of this subject, gave this bit of interesting testimony:

> Speaking of bakeries, Mr. Brice Smith, of Kansas City, prominent in baking industry, told me that there was so little wheat in a loaf of bread that it was almost negligible and he didn't figure it as entering into the price factor. * * * I submit, sir, that here is a suit of clothes that cost me $55. I am not gainsaying that it contains $15 or $18 worth of cloth. That cloth is a manufactured article. If you take the cloth off my back and weigh it on the scale, at the price prevailing for wool today you would see that the farmer did not receive 55 cents out of the $55 that I paid for the suit.

Some years ago my distinguished colleague [Senator BORAH] pointed out that during the decade from 1920 to 1930, in spite of the great prosperity enjoyed by the manufacturing interests of the country, the condition of the farmer became steadily worse. During that period the value of his property decreased from about $77,000,000,000 to $55,000,000,000. His average income decreased from about $900 to $600 per year, while his taxes increased some 300 per cent. Since the distinguished Senator made that statement the condition of the farmer became much worse until a little over a year ago. Some improvement has been made within the last year.

That agriculture is more deeply interested in export trade than other industry appears from the fact that during the past 23 years 17.86 percent of the income of the farmer has been received from export trade as compared to 5.21 percent of the income received from such trade in nonagricultural industries. The foreign markets are a necessity to the American farmer if he is to maintain his present production and standard of living. Surpluses of farm products must be disposed of if our country is to have any degree of prosperity.

Under the pending measure it is the purpose of the Government to effect reciprocal agreements that may gradually eliminate the unfair discrimination against the farmer and afford him markets for his surplus products. If that could be done, the whole domestic-allotment legislation could be dispensed with and the farmer would then have a better opportunity to share in the wealth and prosperity of the Nation. That the President of the United States is keenly alive to the interest of the farmer appears in a significant way from his message to the Congress. He says:

> Important branches of our agriculture, such as cotton, tobacco, hog products, rice, cereal, and fruit raising, and those branches of American industry whose mass-production methods have led the world, will find expanded opportunities and productive capacity in foreign markets, and will thereby be spared, in part at least, the heart-breaking readjustments that must be necessary if the shrinkage of American foreign commerce remains permanent.

To those farmers who have been alarmed by propaganda that their interests have been marked for slaughter and that there is a sinister design by our great President and his administration to trade off whatever advantages farmers may now possess, I would remind them of the record of President Roosevelt, a record throughout his public career of friendship and sympathetic interest and constructive effort in the interest of the farmer. These are his reassuring words on this measure:

> The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this, the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.
> From the policy of reciprocal negotiation which is in prospect, I hope in time that definite gains will result to American agriculture and industry.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Would not the Senator also say that he agrees with President Roosevelt's assurance to the farmers when he said, "Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products"? Would not the Senator also support that statement?

Mr. POPE. Oh, yes. I do not see that that is inconsistent at all with the statement made by the President in his message.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one more question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. It is quite clear that the Senator's point of view is that this proposed legislation is designed to aid the farmer in the export of his crops and in developing a world market.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. And at the expense, of course, of buying manufactured goods, not agricultural commodities, from other nations.

Mr. POPE. It may be at the expense——

Mr. BAILEY. There must be some reciprocity. The Senator is arguing that there is to be reciprocity; but, whatever we might buy, we would not buy agricultural products; we must buy something, and therefore we would buy either mining products or manufactured goods.

Mr. POPE. We might buy agricultural products; for instance, we might buy coffee.

Mr. BAILEY. I would feel much better about voting for the bill if I knew how we are going to maintain the N.R.A. and the American wages by the method of buying goods from a foreign country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if that would not depend on what we bought; whether or not the commodities were produced in this country in any substantial quantities?

Mr. POPE. Does that answer the question of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. By no means. It is said that the answer to the question depends upon a generality. That never answered a question from the foundation of the world.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. This proposal specifically excludes the provision of the N.I.R.A. which gave to the President the power even to put an embargo where importations would affect the prices under the code arrangement or might destroy the effect of the code under the N.R.A. law; and so it would seem to me that we have taken away none of the power from the President. He will continue to see that that law shall be carried out.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, it is my understanding that the code and the N.I.R.A., either now or presently, will apply to every industry in America; and if that is the case, then there is no use for this proposed legislation; it falls to the ground, and there is nothing that we could import.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Idaho that I do not want to take his time because he is, of course, proceeding under a limitation; but there are many items now on the free list, such as rubber, silk, tin, coffee, and tea. Would it not be possible for us to agree with some country which has very large exportations of coffee or tea, for instance, that we will not for the period of 3 years put a tax on those items if they will make certain concessions to us in the taking of some of our goods? But if the amendment should be adopted whereby all agricultural products would be eliminated from any such agreement, then we could not make that kind of a trade agreement.

Mr. BAILEY. The amendment relates to existing tariff rates and not to what we may do in the future with regard to any new tax we may impose on foreign products.

Mr. HARRISON. But under the terms of the bill the President is given that power. We are not proposing to effect any rates at all, because there is no demand to put a tax on coffee or tea or silk or similar articles. If, in order to get large concessions from some other country, we make an agreement that we will not impose such a tax, it would seem to me a very advantageous arrangement. Even in the Colombian treaty or agreement which will probably come to the Senate, that is one of the main features; but if we adopt the amendment which is championed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and others, some of whom may carry out their purpose to vote for it, then all right to make such an arrangement in a trade agreement would be taken away.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I do not know whether I understood the illustration given by the Senator from Mississippi when he said that we might say to Brazil, "We will not put any burden of tariff on coffee for 3 years if we can get an agreement by which you will take some of our products." Suppose they took us at our word, would we put a duty on coffee if they should not enter into such an agreement?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not believe we would.

Mr. FESS. Is that a mere bluff that we are using toward Brazil?

Mr. HARRISON. I imagine if Congress gives this power to the President and our Government enters into an agreement of that kind, we will at least show our good faith and abide by the agreement.

Mr. FESS. Under the authority granted in the bill could we make that kind of an arrangement with coffee on the free list?

Mr. HARRISON. I think we could.

Mr. FESS. So the bill does propose to deal with items on the free list the same as with items on the dutiable list?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the President could not take an item from the free list and put a tariff tax on it and thus put it on the dutiable list. That is not permitted under the terms of the bill. But there is nothing in the bill that would prohibit the President from entering into an agreement that we would not put a tax on something now on the free list, although there is no demand in the country to put a tax on it, if we could get certain concessions which would help our agricultural interests and the general prosperity of the country.

Mr. FESS. Would that carry with it the threat that if they should not make the concessions we want them to make, we would put a duty on an article now on the free list?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no. All of this is to be done by mutual agreement and understanding.

Mr. FESS. It seems to me it is merely a bluff.

Mr. HARRISON. The whole thing perhaps seems to be a bluff to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, the American farmer asks no special privileges from his Government. He only asks the opportunity to live as a decent, self-respecting American citizen. He knows that he has been subjected to unfair discrimination under our tariff policies, and that he has paid billions of dollars to the overlords of industrial aristocracy which has helped to build huge fortunes and concentrate great wealth in the hands of a favored few. He knows that this has resulted in his impoverishment.

The pending measure would tend to restore to the American farmer the position in our economic life to which he is entitled.

Now we have the proposed amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] providing that no foreign-trade agreement shall be entered into with respect to any agricultural product. In other words, this would mean that the farmer might not share in the reciprocal agreements for increased foreign markets and no hope would be afforded him in this way to dispose of his surplus products. To my mind, he would again be discriminated against as he has been discriminated against under tariff bills in the past. I do not favor such discrimination, and I do not favor any such amendment.

An appealing argument can be made, and is constantly being made, that under our economic system and under the agricultural program of this administration the production of farm products is being curtailed, acres are being leased and plowed up, pigs are being killed, and other acts are being done to limit or dispose of surplus farm products, and at the same time millions of people at home and abroad are suffering for such goods.

A few days ago at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, when a bill to make effective the limitation of farm products was being considered, one member of the committee exhibited a newspaper clipping showing the distressingly large number now on the relief rolls of this country. I think every member of the committee who read the clipping was struck by the tragedy of it all—there we are struggling to reduce surpluses of farm products to sustain prices of farm products while millions are undernourished and on the relief rolls of the country and millions more in need in other countries.

Now, under this measure there is a chance to dispose of some of these surpluses for consumption by those who need them; a chance to reverse the program of curtailment and elimination of surplus products; a chance to restore to some extent the markets for such products as have been lost within the last few years; a chance to look in the direction of a larger volume of world trade.

In my humble opinion, if permanent and substantial relief for American agriculture is ever to be realized, it must be, at least in part, through expanding markets and expanding returns for the labor and toil of the millions of farmers in the country.

TRADE PACT MADE BY THREE NATIONS—ITALY, AUSTRIA, AND HUNGARY AGREE ON RECIPROCAL AND PREFERENTIAL DUTIES

ROME, May 9.—An Italo-Austro-Hungarian economic agreement was reached today, and will be signed probably Saturday.

This agreement is based on reciprocal and preferential duties, a minimum export price accord, and an agreement between the three nations to purchase fixed quantities of certain products.

The major points of the agreement, which has been in negotiation for 5 weeks by Dr. Richard Schuler, the Austrian Minister; Dr. E. De Winckler, Hungarian export chief, and Dr. Chiancarelli, the head of the economic section of the Italian foreign ministry, are as follows:

1. The minimum export price accord—Austria and Italy agree to buy Hungarian wheat at a price approximating 40 lire a quintal, that is, about 92.6 cents a bushel, a figure appreciably above the present export price. Hungary and Italy agree to buy Austrian lumber and wood pulp for paper making also at a price appreciably above the present internal price in Austria. The minimum export price accord is an effort to raise prices and increase buying power.

2. Italy agrees to buy approximately 2,000,000 quintals (7,408,000 bushels) of Hungarian wheat, and Austria agrees to buy 2,250,000 quintals (8,334,000 bushels), thus practically eliminating Hungary's surplus of 6,500,000 quintals. The feature of this agreement is that Italy agrees to buy whether she needs wheat or not and has the right to reexport any portion of this purchase that she does not need either as wheat or flour.

3. Austria and Hungary agree to lower their tariffs 10 percent on the products of any country which go through Trieste and Fiume. This is an effort to build up these ports at the expense of North German ports, particularly Hamburg.

4. Italy's and Austria's industrial products are given a large preferential treatment by Hungary. So considerable is this preference that an expert said in the future only Italian automobiles would be sold in Hungary.

5. A permanent committee has been appointed whose chief members are Winckler, Schuler, and Chiancarelli.

The experts believe that the economic agreement, which was negotiated by Premier Mussolini of Italy, Chancellor Dolfuss of Austria, and Prime Minister Goemboes of Hungary, will lift Austria and Hungary out of their economic difficulties and make Austria more independent commercially.

Mr. CUTTING obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE AIR MAIL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to call up the conference report on the air mail bill. It will take only a short time, I think. Would it inconvenience the Senator if I should call it up now?

Mr. CUTTING. That is quite satisfactory, provided I may obtain recognition after the consideration of the report shall be concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have considered the conference report on Senate bill 3170, relating to air-mail contracts.

Mr. CUTTING. I assume that if there is to be any considerable debate, I may reserve the right to resume the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] desires to speak on the report.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator from Ohio assures me that it will require considerable debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may say that the program was arranged without consideration of this report, which, I am satisfied, will lead to some debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well, Mr. President; I withdraw the request.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the pending amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I am afraid, however, that, even if we assume the possibility that that amendment may be adopted, the dangers which confront American agriculture may be just as serious as they are at the present time.

Even if we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from California, the Executive, nevertheless, retains the right to lower agricultural tariffs by 50 percent; and while that might not be embodied in any specific agreement with a foreign country, I fear that the practical results would remain very much the same.

I cannot resist the conclusion that whether or not this amendment shall be adopted, the bill in itself postulates the sacrifice of American agricultural interests. I cannot see—and so far no one on the opposite side has attempted to enlighten me—how we shall be able to make any agreements of this kind except with regard to agricultural products.

It surely is apparent that reciprocal agreements can be made most easily with nations which are prepared to receive our capital goods and which have nothing to pay in return except agricultural surpluses which have accumulated in their countries.

Mr. Louis M. Hacker has an interesting article in the June Harper's entitled, "Plowing the Farmer Under", in which, among other things, he says:

> In view of the long conditioning American industry has had in a protective-tariff environment, a sudden change to an international unfavorable balance situation under which the United States would import more than it would export—and particularly buy from abroad manufactured goods—is unlikely. If the question is seriously considered in all its ramifications, there is a greater possibility of the bars being let down for the importation of foreign raw materials and foodstuffs than for the importation of finished goods. In any event, as a reform program, the revival of foreign trade holds out no real hope for American agriculture.

With that conclusion I entirely agree.

It has been a remarkable thing that for 10 days an interesting debate—a debate on a very high plane, I think—has been maintained by members of the minority party. It started out with the speech of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], certainly as eloquent and convincing an address as I have ever heard in this Chamber. It has gone on for the most part on the same general plane, yet during all that time the debate has been entirely one-sided. Until the last couple of days, no one has attempted to defend the principles of the bill. No one, even now, has pointed to any single commodity as to which the United States would obtain more favorable treatment through the passage of the bill than it is able to obtain at the present time.

That seems to me a very remarkable state of affairs. It is true that certain interests have been mentioned which, we are assured, will not be bargained away for the satisfaction of this fetish of international trade. Chief of them is wool. We have been told—perhaps not in so many words on the floor of the Senate, but we certainly have been informed through the press—that wool would not be considered one of the products which would be traded under these agreements; yet when we turn to the little pamphlet by the Secretary of Agriculture entitled "America Must Choose", we find the following:

> This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for a while to wool growers, and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils.

The Secretary of Agriculture, of course, is one of the people who are going to administer this bill if it shall be passed; and I submit that the Secretary of Agriculture who says that the bill may cause pain to the wool growers is a better authority than any we have had so far on the other side.

For the first time this morning a serious attempt was made to justify the constitutionality of the bill. I know that no Member of the Senate will accuse me of posing as a constitutional lawyer, and I do not care to discuss that phase of the question at all; but in the able discussion by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] one conclusion stood out firmly in my mind, and that is that there is no limitation whatever upon the power of the President as described in the first paragraph, the preamble of the bill. The Senator from Georgia admitted that, in effect, this section would have meant exactly the same thing if we had worded it: "The President may, when he deems it for the best interest of the country", do those acts which in subsequent paragraphs we grant him authority to do.

That, of course, is interesting, not as a matter of constitutionality but as a matter of common sense and a matter of policy; and what little I intend to say this afternoon will be confined to the question of policy.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. When the Senator from Georgia made the distinction that this bill lays down a rule of action for the President, and said that because of that it is constitutional, can we not justifiably come to the conclusion, if that principle is accurate, that all it is necessary to do is for the Congress to lay down a principle and give to the President full authority to fix the rates thereafter? Would not that be a conclusion from his statement?

Mr. CUTTING. That would be a conclusion which would commend itself to me as a layman. I do not undertake to decide questions of that kind.

Mr. FESS. It appears to me that that is a justifiable conclusion from the premises laid down.

Mr. CUTTING. It would seem to me, furthermore, as a layman, that if it is constitutional to say that the President may exert the powers delegated to him in this measure if he deems it in the best interests of the country, it would be equally constitutional to delegate to the President power to make war if in his judgment that should be to the best interests of the country.

I prefer, however, to get on to the question of the policy of the measure, because that, after all, is what I am most concerned about.

Mr. President, perhaps I may be allowed to say that my remarks will be based on two assumptions, and if those assumptions are incorrect, of course the argument based on them is equally incorrect.

The first assumption is that the evils from which we have been suffering in this country are due primarily to the fact that our people have not sufficient purchasing power to consume the goods which our country is producing or is able to produce. If that is the case, then it seems to me to follow that when the citizens of a country cannot themselves buy the goods which they produce, neither can they buy the goods which some foreign country is willing to exchange for the goods which they produce. So it seems to me that the fundamental thing which is wrong is the question of internal purchasing power, and that we cannot remedy that defect by any kind of international agreement at all.

The second assumption I make is that international trade is essentially an exchange of the goods and services of one country for the goods and services of another. If we export a certain amount of products of our country, we have to take in exchange, in the long run, an equivalent amount of goods and services from the foreign country with which we are dealing. Of course, there is one alternative, and that is the alternative of extending credit to the foreign country, by which it may buy our goods; but that merely postpones the day of reckoning, unless we are willing to say that the credit which we are extending to the foreign country shall never be made good by any real exchange of commodities.

In the light of those assumptions, which, I confess, seem to me axiomatic, let us see what the policy of the administration is as testified to by its representatives before the Finance Committee of the Senate. Let me first read from the Secretary of State, because in two sentences he sums up the entire policy of the proposal. Said Secretary Hull:

> If a nation is enterprising * * * it will resolutely seek in the present situation to restore old markets and to establish new markets both at home and abroad until a volume of production affording full employment to labor has been made possible.

Then comes the sentence to which I desire to attract particular attention:

The policy of the proposed bill is to supplement our almost impregnable domestic markets with a substantial and gradually expanding foreign market for our more burdensome surpluses.

There we have it in a nutshell. Our own market is impregnable. No foreign nation can invade it. We maintain it just exactly as it is today. On the other hand, we find markets abroad for our burdensome surpluses.

When we consider that every other industrial nation on the face of the globe is engaged in exactly the same pursuit, that every one of them has a surplus which it has to export, and that it has devised a mechanism for keeping its own markets impregnable, we can realize the kind of a fight which it is proposed the United States shall enter.

A market for our burdensome surpluses. With millions of our own people underfed and underclothed, does it not seem the most utter paradox on the face of the earth that the main endeavor of the United States at the present time is to get rid of burdensome surpluses? Just think of the expression! How can a surplus be burdensome when there are people in our country who need to use it?

We used to talk about the bountiful harvest. We used to talk about burdensome deficits. We have to change all our views about those things. From now on the harvest will be a calamity to us, and the drought and the famine will be termed "bountiful."

If the principle under which we are asked to act is correct, then, of course, there is nothing in sight but a desperate endeavor to get the products which this country produces in such abundant profusion into the hands of somebody else somewhere else, and leave our own people to starve.

Mr. President, in the time at my disposal I am not able to read as much as I should like from this very interesting testimony of Secretary Hull. I shall quote a paragraph or two, however. Said the Secretary:

A few other countries are already aroused and awake to the value of foreign trade. Their seamen and their vessels loaded with merchandise are finding their way into every harbor of an increasing number of countries. They are exhibiting remarkable initiative, enterprise, and pioneering spirit not unlike that of other nations in the past, when they set out determined upon their share of world commerce. A vast and ever-increasing foreign trade is easily within the grasp of this country, unless we fritter away the opportunity. It is a first step in such an undertaking that the proposed bill is offered.

So we join this race in which all foreign nations are now engaged to get rid of as many goods as possible and to take as few goods as possible in return.

I shall come back a little later to the Secretary's doctrine of a burdensome surplus. First, I wish to quote a line or two from the Secretary of Agriculture. Secretary Wallace stated his policy concisely. His testimony appears on page 27 of the Senate Finance Committee hearings. He said:

It would seem to be exceedingly unwise during the period when we have such a breathing spell to prepare for an eventuality, which eventuality will be either the continuation of the acreage-control programs, which we are now using in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, or the creation of foreign purchasing power by the acceptance of more goods from abroad, or do a little of each.

There seems to be some confusion in the way the testimony of the Secretary is printed. I cannot believe that he meant to say it was exceedingly unwise to prepare for an eventuality. Probably he is misquoted in the printed record, but I am reading it as it stands.

His policy, however, is plain; either we are to continue the acreage-control program—and that means the program exemplified, for instance, this morning, when we read that a million cattle are to be destroyed in the Middle West—either we are to do that and cut down the goods which are available to our own people who need them, or, on the other hand, we are to create foreign purchasing power. It seems to me that the Secretary is not actually offering two alternatives at all. They are merely two angles of the same policy. We create foreign purchasing power, and we cut down the level of American production to the intolerably low level of consumption which exists at the present time.

If we are going to increase purchasing power, why do we have to confine ourselves to foreign purchasing power? Why do we not do something to increase the purchasing power of our own people at home?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator might be interested in the statement that was made by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] respecting the number of workmen who were employed in the production of commodities which were sold abroad. Would the Senator be interested in knowing what the Tariff Commission's report shows?

Mr. CUTTING. If it will not take too long.

Mr. HATFIELD. Perhaps it would take a little bit too long.

Mr. CUTTING. I should prefer that the Senator put it into the RECORD in his own time.

Mr. HATFIELD. It is only one paragraph, I will say to the Senator. The report headed "Economic Analysis of Foreign Trade of the United States in Relation to the Tariff", by the Tariff Commission in response to Senate Resolution 325, shows that in 1929 the estimated number of wage earners in manufacturing industry engaged in producing for export articles of the several major commodity groups, was 658,000. This number had decreased to 364,000 in 1931, or a decrease of 294,000 employees. In other words, at the high tide of business there were only 658,000 wage earners employed in this country in such industry.

Mr. CUTTING. I appreciate that contribution by the Senator from West Virginia.

I have already mentioned the fact that it has been almost impossible to get any tangible information as to what will be done if this bill shall be passed. The Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, was before the Committee on Finance for a long time. He was questioned by many Senators, especially by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. Let me quote just a little to show the difficulty of finding out what this all means and what it is all about:

Senator WALCOTT. Can you think of any trade that would benefit in this country that does not injure another industry, under the terms of this bill?

Mr. SAYRE. I think, sir—I hesitate to mention this—but I think, sir, the very recent agreement which we signed with Colombia will create real benefits without doing injury to anybody. I can think of many other instances where it is possible, I believe, to create real benefit without injury.

Later on Senator WALCOTT asked:

Senator WALCOTT. Doctor, we struggled this morning to get a single concrete illustration. You must have had something in mind when you drew this bill, otherwise the bill could not have been drawn.

* * * * * * *

Can't you be frank enough to tell us what you have in mind that impelled you to draw this bill?

Mr. SAYRE. I think it would be the answer of a pure theorist to say, until this careful study of which I have been speaking has been made, what commodities can be traded in advantageously and what countries can be traded with advantageously; until we consult with and talk with the countries concerned, we cannot say with what countries agreements can be negotiated. The State Department has expressly abstained from doing that in order to keep good faith with Congress.

Senator WALCOTT. So you have no countries in mind and no commodities?

Mr. SAYRE. No specific consultations have as yet taken place. I do not say that I have no countries in mind, and I do not say that I have no commodities in mind, but I do say that I do not know, until investigations and inquiries have been made, what countries will move toward it or what commodities we will bargain with.

We do not know what countries and we do not know what commodities. And the only concrete instance that can be pointed to is a treaty with Colombia, which was not only negotiated but also signed 5 months ago, and to which the Senate of the United States has so far been forbidden access.

Nevertheless, it must be obvious that most of the countries with which we are going to deal under the provisions of this bill are countries which have agricultural products to export to the United States. From all we have heard of the Colombian Treaty it must come under that head.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] just now made a most extraordinary defense of that treaty when he said that we were promising under the agreement to keep coffee on the free list for 3 years. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] very justly pointed out, there is no way in which coffee could be put on the dutiable list except by the Congress of the United States, and there is no desire on the part of any element either in Congress or among the population of the United States to have coffee placed on the dutiable list, so that, as the Senator from Ohio aptly said, any deal with a foreign nation, one of the terms of which is that coffee should be kept on the free list, is purely a question of bluff.

I have in my hand a pamphlet just issued by the Foreign Policy Association, which, as some of us know, is a society favorable to international trade. This particular pamphlet, entitled "Tariff Bargaining Under the New Deal", makes the best possible case, certainly the best case I have seen anywhere, in favor of this bill. Most of the specific statements are taken from the report of the Tariff Commission, and for those reasons I think it is fair to say that it represents, in a way, the position taken by the proponents of this legislation.

The countries as to which this pamphlet says we are going to gain by means of reciprocal agreement are the following: Colombia, Cuba, Canada, Germany, Italy, and Argentina. Since we have not been able to obtain from any member of the administration the names of the countries with which we propose to deal, I think it is fair to consider a few of the countries here mentioned as being perhaps those with which it is proposed to make agreements.

As to Cuba, of course, Cuba is almost in a class by itself, since Cuba is one of the few countries which has a so-called "favorable balance of trade" with this country; that is, which exports more to us than she imports from this country.

When we come to Canada, however, how is it conceivable that we can make an agreement with Canada which will not have as one of its terms the providing of markets in this country for Canadian wheat, timber, copper, cattle, dairy products, and coal, all of them products of which we already have a surplus?

With regard to Germany, everyone knows that Germany is engaged at the present time in closing herself off from all communication with foreign countries. She is engaged in building up a national state of the most complete variety. She is attempting to build up production of those articles which she does not now produce. The idea of entering into any trade agreement with present-day Germany seems preposterous, although logically it might have some desirable features.

As to Italy, this very pamphlet shows that agricultural products, cheese, olive oil, products of that kind, would probably be the main Italian surplus which we would have to take in this country.

The last country in this list is Argentina. The Foreign Policy Association says:

> Argentina ranks as the most important of the countries with which the United States has had preliminary conversations regarding a new commercial agreement.

And at the end, after quoting from the Tariff Commission, it sums up the situation as follows:

> The Tariff Commission's study would indicate that the United States might make substantial concessions on a number of dutiable articles now imported from Argentina, including flaxseed, quebracho extract, cattle hides, and combing wool.

Of course, unless we were to add to that list the canned meats, as to which the Senator from Louisiana was so eloquent the other day, I do not know how there could be a series of Argentine imports which would be more distressing to American agriculture than flaxseed, hides, and wool. Those are the products which would be allowed to come into this country under an agreement with "the most important of the countries with which the United States has had preliminary conversations."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIETERICH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In connection with the remarks the Senator has just been making, I should like to refer to an Associated Press dispatch of March 2, from which I quote as follows:

> Negotiations for reciprocity treaties between the United States and Brazil, Argentina, Sweden, and Portugal, under way for several months, have been interrupted until legislation proposed in President Roosevelt's tariff message has made appreciable progress in Congress.

I take it from that that these reciprocal agreements have already been under negotiation and are now perhaps practically closed, awaiting for the Congress to adjourn.

Mr. CUTTING. It is so stated in the pamphlet from which I have just quoted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator give the names of the three particular articles to which he referred, as to which conversations are being carried on with Argentina, and upon which there is to be one of the Yankee bargaining trades?

Mr. CUTTING. The articles mentioned in this pamphlet are flaxseed, hides, and wool.

Mr. JOHNSON. Wool?

Mr. CUTTING. Wool is one of them. Is the Senator surprised?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sure that the article has been read erroneously, if the Senator would glance at it again, because we know that there is now outstanding a commitment that wool shall not be touched, and it is an astounding thing to find in an authoritative publication a statement that wool is to be dealt with in a reciprocity agreement.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I have so far failed to find the definite agreement of which the Senator speaks; I have seen references to it in the press, but I have never seen an authoritative statement from anyone to the effect that wool will not be considered under the terms of this proposed act. If the Senator knows of a place where that has been stated in black and white, and in so many words, and in language which cannot be misinterpreted, then I should be delighted to be so informed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I referred yesterday, if the Senator will pardon me for taking his time——

Mr. CUTTING. I am delighted to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. JOHNSON. I referred yesterday to a dispatch from one of our distinguished colleagues in which, in so many words, he said he had the assurance that wool would not be touched.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am sure that our distinguished colleague quoted by the Senator from California made his statement in complete good faith, but we have previously had so many such assurances with regard not only to this kind of legislation but also to other kinds of legislation that I should prefer to have any assurance of that sort written into the bill.

Mr. President, having said what I have, I want to make it perfectly clear that I think there are many rates in the tariff schedules which are entirely too high. Time and time again during the discussion of the Hawley-Smoot bill I voted for lower rates than were placed in the bill by the majority—and the majority, it is fair to say, consisted, in part, at least, of Senators who sat on the opposite side of the aisle. I think a great many of the rates in the various schedules ought to be lowered; but they ought to be lowered with the sole objective of helping the American consumer. They ought to be lowered with the purpose of increasing our own defective purchasing power. They ought not to be lowered as a part of a Yankee horse trade; they ought not to be lowered in consideration for something or other which may come in from abroad; they ought not to be lowered in order, as the Secretary of Agriculture says, to create foreign purchasing power.

The President has full authority, under the existing flexible provision of the tariff law, to make all these changes, to lower a duty as much as 50 percent, if he desires. He has all that authority right now. Why is it necessary for him to exercise it as a part of a series of foreign agreements?

One of the ablest Members of this body said to me this morning that perhaps the drought and the famine in the West were so great that instead of having an agricultural surplus we should be forced within a year to buy agricultural products from abroad, and that in that case we might want to enter into an agreement by which we could bring foreign wheat, for instance, into our country without the payment of the existing duty of 42 cents a bushel. Of course, it seems to me that the answer to that is that if we need foodstuffs from abroad it is perfectly easy for the President to lower the duty and that every one of the countries which produce an agricultural surplus will let us have it and will be glad to do so; but then it is to our advantage to import that food, and we can hardly ask foreign nations to do something which is to our advantage as part of a bargain to provide a foreign market for our manufactured goods, of which, I assume, we will still have a surplus in spite of the drought.

International trade, Mr. President, as I have previously said, is essentially an exchange of goods and services; it cannot be anything else. We may loan money to foreigners to buy our products, but the loan does not in the least alter the substantial economic realities of the situation.

A year or two ago Mr. Lawrence Dennis wrote an interesting book entitled "Is Capitalism Doomed?" in which he demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt, in my judgment, that the principal of foreign loans can never be repaid; and that the interest can be repaid only by making additional loans with which to pay it.

I shall read a word from his final conclusion:

> The American people have now admitted that they are going to do nothing about unemployment.

This was written a couple of years ago, and, of course, for a time we did some very serious things about unemployment. Since, however, we have abandoned the C.W.A. and have done so little to take its place, and since we are proposing to appropriate a totally inadequate sum for public works, I think we may almost say that we are back in the position which Mr. Dennis describes. However, I shall continue the quotation:

> The American people have now admitted that they are going to do nothing about employment. War, therefore, is the inevitable solution. It will impose itself by the force of economic and political events brought to bear on statesmen who do not know what it is all about. The more our statesmen talk peace, and the greater their sincerity of belief in what they say, the more inevitable becomes the war issue.

We have as the principal proponents of this bill three of the most honorable and sincere statesmen whom I know. I have for them the highest respect, and nothing I have said or shall say must be taken as impugning in any way my belief in the sincerity of Secretary Hull, Secretary Wallace, or of Assistant Secretary Sayre. Does not that emphasize the fact Mr. Dennis brings out—that the greater the sincerity of our statesmen, the more danger there is apt to be of their leading us into a ruinous policy?

Mr. President, I have never been one who has engaged in the denunciation of foreign governments because of their failure to pay the war debts. I have never been able to see how, under the present economic system of the world, it is possible for them to do so. The loans were not made in cash. They were made in goods, and they will have to be repaid in goods, or not repaid at all. When I say "goods", of course, I mean goods or services, neither of which we are willing or able to accept. But having said that, the fact remains that the only people who derived any advantage from the loans which we made to foreign governments during the war and during the subsequent period were the foreign consumers. They got their munitions, and they have not paid for them. Whether they are able or unable to pay for them, the fact remains that the whole advantage has gone to them; and that as to any foreign loans we may make in the future the same thing will be true. We cannot make this kind of thing work unless we increase the purchasing power in this country. We cannot make it work by sending abroad money or credit with which the foreigner will buy our products. To do so will sink us deeper and deeper in the morass in which we are already floundering.

I was amazed to hear this morning from the lips of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] the statement that the excess of our exports over our imports represented the surplus capital of this Nation, and that that surplus undoubtedly would have to be invested in foreign trade. Mr. President, the whole idea of surplus capital which has to be reinvested is that of the system which we pursued domestically in the disastrous years which led to the crisis of 1929—the crisis which we are still confronting. To keep on investing money in production—and to that extent the same thing is true of foreign trade—is to keep on increasing the gap between the purchasing power of the people of the country and the cost of production, which in the long run they have to pay.

What are the inevitable results of this policy? We are trying to get what is called "a favorable trade balance."

When we say a "favorable trade balance", we are using a term which has always seemed to me wildly contrary to the fact. A favorable trade balance is a balance whereby we deplete our country of its goods and services and take nothing in return. We find every industrial nation in the world engaged in the same ridiculous endeavor. There is some excuse for other countries which have to import most of the goods their people need, but for a country like the United States, which produces almost everything, which has difficulty in finding sufficient noncompeting foreign goods to pay for its exports, it seems like a policy of madness.

I entirely agree with Mr. Dennis that such a policy can lead to nothing but war. Every war for a hundred years has been due to exactly this kind of thing—this race; this competition for markets; this endeavor to find subject territories to which surplus products of a nation may be sold; this endeavor to beat the other fellow out in a horse trade; this endeavor to get our manufactured goods, we will say, into Argentina instead of the manufactured goods of Great Britain, although in return we have to take products for which we do not have a need and which will injure American industry and labor.

Why, Mr. President, it seems to me it would be more sensible to take our surplus, if it is really burdensome, and dump it in the Atlantic Ocean. Then, at least, we would be free from this war menace, and we could proceed, without regard to these fanciful castles in the air, to set our own house in order, as sooner or later we are going to have to do.

Of course, Mr. President, our surplus should not be sunk in the Atlantic Ocean. Of course, something more sensible than that should be done with it. But why should not we help our own consumer? Why should we not help out the people of our own country? Why would it not be far more sensible yet to distribute our surplus among the needy and the starving right here at home? Yet, if anyone should suggest something of the sort, I can see the hands go up, the whispers of horrified amazement which would arise from many parts of the Chamber, "That would be unsound. That would be socialistic. That would be radical."

There is no way apparently in which we can help our own consumers except indirectly through giving our goods away—because that is what it amounts to—to foreign consumers who will never in the long run be able to pay for more than an infinitesimal fraction of them.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. The impractical phase of the proposed legislation is due to the fact that we produce practically every commodity in this country upon which any possible trading agreement could be made.

Mr. CUTTING. I think the Senator has stated the case, perhaps not literally but substantially.

Mr. DICKINSON. Practically all the commodities which we do not produce, like silk and coffee, come here free of duty; and, therefore, there is nothing practical about a suggestion of this kind with reference to negotiating trade agreements or adjusting tariffs in order to secure a trade advantage.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes, Mr. President; I think the most hopeful thing about the legislation is that it is so impractical that perhaps it will never be put into effect. I think, perhaps, it will be impossible to find countries which meet the various terms that have been laid down before us as the policy of the administration, but insofar as it is practical it is a dangerous piece of legislation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me further suggest that the uncertainty the threat of this measure would arouse in the minds of business men—the fact that they would not know when their interests would be involved in tariff duties or tariff trade agreements—would certainly more than overcome any possible trade advantages or benefits we might get under the bill.

Mr. CUTTING. I am afraid that is apt to be the case.

Mr. President, I mentioned a moment ago a conception which most of my colleagues would consider a revolutionary conception, of distributing the surplus directly to our own consumers or, what amounts to the same thing, distributing sufficient purchasing power among the people of the country to buy the products of its industry. I was amazed the other day to read an editorial from the London Times, perhaps the most conservative organ of public opinion in the present world. Sometimes a foreign observer, even though a conservative one, sees a situation from a little broader angle than we do at home. I want to quote a few sentences from this editorial:

> The purpose of the tariff bill—

Meaning the present pending legislation—

> is to help foreigners to buy American goods by authorizing the President to reduce the tariff in appropriate cases, thus enabling them to sell their goods in America. There is, however, the threefold difficulty—that America, comparatively speaking, needs so little that she cannot produce for herself; that much of that little is earmarked, so to speak, for the repayment of American loans abroad, leaving little over to pay for any expansion of American exports; and that any great increase of imports would expose American industries to competition from countries working for longer hours at lower wages and would tend to spread unemployment among the already hard hit industrial workers. The policy of the administration provides for the establishment of export credit banks with Government backing to finance foreign purchases of American goods. Their operations, however, while they would ease the immediate difficulty, would only postpone and would not solve the problem of payment. Unless, of course—

And these are the words which I ask my colleagues to mark—

> Unless, of course, credits were advanced without any intention of insisting upon repayment, and in that case it would seem simpler and would achieve the same ultimate purpose if they were advanced directly to the American farmers and other producers.

Such a suggestion, coming from the stodgy, reactionary, ultraconservative London Times seems to me very significant of the way our policy must look to any intelligent observer from outside. It would look even more crazy to an inhabitant of Mars.

At any rate, Mr. President, that is the policy which we apparently are adopting. Our surpluses—to use Secretary Hull's cogent phrase—are burdensome to us. What are we going to do with them? We are going to force them on other countries at any risk. We are going to make deals with them. We are going to get the better of them in the deals. Always, of course, the United States can be counted on to get the better of a trade agreement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. Can the Senator name one deal where we did get the better of the bargain?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not like to go back into the past. We are dealing with the future now and whatever may have been the case in the past, from now on we are going to get the better of every deal, because that is the assurance we have been given; and if we do not get the better of any deal, God help us! What are we going to do? What are we going to do with all these surplus foodstuffs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. CUTTING. I still have 20 minutes on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has.

Mr. CUTTING. I will take that.

What are we going to do with these surplus products? There is nothing to do with them. We could not even conceive of giving them to our own people. We could not conceive of building up what seems to nearly everybody the thing which the people in this country most lack; namely, the power to buy, the power to consume, the power of equating our consumption with our production. We cannot do that, but we can force the foreigner to take our stuffs. We can force him to do so even though in the last analysis we shall have to go to war in order to do it, because, as the Senator from Georgia stated this morning, our excess of exports over imports represents our surplus capital. We have to employ surplus capital. We have to keep on investing and reinvesting. We have to keep on piling up production, forcing reinvestment of capital in this country or abroad, although we know perfectly well in advance that the capital never is going to be paid back, and that the interest cannot be paid back except by future loans. We are going to enter into this race. That is what we are proposing to do, according to the men—the very honorable and sincere men—who have appeared before the Finance Committee and have boldly stated their policy.

Of course we cannot compete with the foreigner in the open market on most of the products with which it is inevitable that this proposed legislation will deal. Of course our cost of production is higher, and as a result of recent legislation it is going to be higher still. Every time we enact legislation for the benefit of the people of this country, every time we enact what is generally called social-service legislation—and I believe in that legislation as fervently as any Member of this body—every time we do that we are inevitably raising our costs of production. All the legislation which has been enacted as part of the new-deal program—the N.R.A. and all the rest of it—is increasing that cost of production. So the only way in which we can take care of this situation is to enter into these trades, in which inevitably we are going to give away something without getting anything substantial in return.

Mr. President, I have sympathized deeply with the publicity given in recent months to the question of armaments. No one deserves more credit for the publicity in that respect than our colleagues from North Dakota and Michigan [Mr. NYE and Mr. VANDENBERG], who have started an investigation of our own armament industry. There is no question that the race for armaments is one of the direct and important factors which lead to war; but, having said that, I wish to say again that in my judgment the race for armaments never has been and never will be half so potent a factor in bringing about war as the race for markets—a race which, in our case, will bring doubtful advantage at best to us if we engage in it, and in which we can succeed, perhaps, only by passing again through an ordeal which may be far worse than the ordeal of 1917 and 1918.

In my judgment, Mr. President, we shall have to set our own financial house in order. We shall have to devise some method of equating our industrial and agricultural surpluses, on the one hand, with our starving, underclothed consumers on the other. After we shall have done that I think we can face foreign nations with equanimity. Perhaps then we can with advantage enter into agreements which wise men might consider of mutual profit. Until, however, we get down to bedrock, until we do something for the people of our own country and their internal purchasing power, I submit that legislation of this sort is not only injurious but also dangerous and fundamentally indefensible.

We have been told, on grounds which seem to be unanswerable, that the proposed legislation is unconstitutional. I pass that by. We have been told, and I think it has been sufficiently proved, that a great many Members of this body have, let us say, conscientiously and sincerely altered their views on the wisdom of delegating three of our most important powers to the Executive of the Nation. I pass that by. If I believed this proposed legislation right, I could swallow a great deal. Certainly, inconsistency is not always a sign of immature judgment. It may sometimes be a sign of statesmanship. I am willing to concede that all the Members of the majority side who signed that impressive round robin 5 years ago have now changed their minds; but I am not willing to do an unconstitutional thing if, in addition to being unconstitutional, it seems to me dangerous and subversive of the interests of our own people.

It is in that belief that I shall vote in favor of the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; and even should that amendment be adopted, I should still feel obligated to vote against the delegation of a power which it is obvious, from all the testimony we have had on the subject, will be used in a way which I believe to be perilous to the interests of this country.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a very unique, interesting, and historic document, which I shall trespass upon the time of the Senate to read. It was presented in the First Congress, first session, and was Document No. 1. I read it, as follows:

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS.

FINANCE.

[No. 1, 1st Congress, 1st session.]

Manufactures.

Communicated to the House of Representatives, April 11, 1789.

To the President and Congress of the United States, the petition of the tradesmen, mechanics, and others, of the town of Baltimore, humbly sheweth:

That, since the close of the late war, and the completion of the Revolution, your petitioners have observed, with serious regret, the manufacturing and trading interests of the country rapidly declining, while the wealth of the people hath been prodigally expended in the purchase of those articles, from foreigners, which our citizens, if properly encouraged, were fully competent to furnish.

To check this growing evil, applications were made, by petitions, to some of the State legislatures: these guardians of the people, in several of the States, interposed their authority: laws were by them enacted, with the view of subduing, or, at least, diminishing the rage for foreign, and of encouraging domestic manufactures; but the event hath clearly demonstrated, to all ranks of men, that no effectual provision could reasonably be expected, until one uniform, efficient government should pervade this wide-extended country.

The happy period having now arrived when the United States are placed in a new situation; when the adoption of the General Government gives one sovereign Legislature the sole and exclusive power of laying duties upon imports; your petitioners rejoice at the prospect this affords them, that America, freed from the commercial shackles which have so long bound her, will see and pursue her true interest, becoming independent in fact as well as in name; and they confidently hope, that the encouragement and protection of American manufactures will claim the earliest attention of the supreme Legislature of the Nation; as it is a universally acknowledged truth, that the United States contain, within their limits, resources amply sufficient to enable them to become a great manufacturing country, and only want the patronage and support of a wise, energetic government.

Your petitioners conceive it unnecessary to multiply arguments to so enlightened a body as the one they have now the honor of addressing, to convince them of the propriety and importance of attending to measures so obviously necessary, and, indeed, indispensable; as every member must have observed and lamented the present melancholy state of his country; the number of her poor increasing for want of employment; foreign debts accumulating; houses and lands depreciating in value; trade and manufactures languishing and expiring. This being a faint sketch of the gloomy picture this country exhibits, it is to the supreme Legislature of the United States, as the guardians of the whole empire, that every eye is now directed: from their united wisdom, their patriotism, their ardent love of their country, your petitioners expect to derive that aid and assistance, which alone can dissipate their just apprehensions, and animate them with hopes of success in future, by imposing on all foreign articles, which can be made in America, such duties as will give a just and decided preference to their labors, and thereby discountenancing that trade which tends so materially to injure them, and impoverish their country; and which may, also, in their consequences, contribute to the discharge of the national debt, and the due support of Government.

Your petitioners take the liberty to annex a list of such articles as are, or can be, manufactured in this place, on moderate terms; and they humbly trust that you will fully consider their request, and grant them, in common with the other mechanics and manufacturers of the United States, that relief which, in your wisdom, may appear proper.

A list of enumerated articles manufactured in Baltimore town, and State of Maryland, which are affected by the importation.

Shipbuilding.

Anchors, adzes, axes, hatchets, iron bolts, spikes, and all kinds of nails, scythes, (Dutch excepted) sickles, drawing knives, bits for boring pumps, carriage hoops and attire, scale beams, steelyards, spades, shovels, hoes, mattocks, pickaxes, andirons, shovels, and tongs, chimney grates, iron traces and chains, thumb latches, plane irons, augers, chisels, and gouges, gridirons, currycombs, bits, and stirrup irons, smith's and hand bellows, guns and pistols, gun and pistol locks.

Copper and tinware, including worms for stills.

Brass andirons, candlesticks, and all rough brass castings, under 100 pounds weight, brass carriage and harness furniture.

Cordage, cables, and spun yarn, white rope, log line, and sein twine.

Ship's blocks, of all kinds.

Wrought gold jewelry, and all kinds of plated ware.

Clocks, of all kinds.

Wool and cotton cards.

All kinds of snuff and manufactured tobacco.

All kinds of ivory and horn combs.

Cabinet work and all other wooden household furniture.

Summarizing, I might say, first, that this is a tariff petition from 726 manufacturers, mechanics, and tradesmen of Baltimore town.

Second, it was presented as Document No. 1 in the first session of the First Congress.

Third, it was approved by Alexander Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury.

Fourth, it was embodied in a tariff bill by James Madison.

Fifth, it was debated for 5 weeks, and passed on May 16, 1789.

Sixth, it was signed by President George Washington on July 4, 1789.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1932. An act for the relief of Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe by removing cloud on title;

S. 2623. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended; and

S. 3290. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3985) for the relief of Charles T. Moll.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and Mr. LUCE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House; asked for conferences with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. COFFIN, and Mr. Goss were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conferences:

H.R. 541. An act for the relief of John P. Leonard; and

H.R. 2439. An act for the relief of William G. Burress, deceased.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, after the remarkable argument presented by that able statesman and patriotic American, the senior Senator from the great State of California [Mr. JOHNSON], in dealing with the subject of agriculture, especially as it pertains to the subject of fruits and other products of agriculture; and remembering what has been accomplished in that great State in the development of citrus fruits and other fruit products, and their relation to chemistry, I deem it pertinent to relate the value of the chemical industry to our country. Knowing the part the chemical industry played in making possible the development of the citrus fruit industry, I feel it appropriate to discuss the subject of chemistry as it applies to agriculture; incidentally, as it applies to chemicals, medicines, and to the welfare of the American people, who were deprived of a chemical industry for a period of almost a hundred and fifty years, until the war-embargo period, beginning in 1914, at the commencement of the greatest war which history records.

One of the most essential industries of our country which will be seriously affected by the granting of authority to the Chief Executive to enter into reciprocal trade treaties with foreign countries, without Senate approval, is the chemical industry, which is still young in our country's history.

This industry, born out of the suffering and privations of our sick and injured during the World War, can hardly expect to receive any consideration from an administration bent on accepting and distributing the products of the German chemical cartel in the United States in order to make possible the distribution of additional American pork products in Germany.

Mr. President, we have heard it said on the side and in the cloakrooms that there is assurance upon the part of those in control of this Government that the tariff protection now accorded wool will not be disturbed. It is rumored the same promise has been made with respect to the chemical and every other industry now in operation which has tariff protection. In my judgment, Mr. President, all of these different groups, representing these different industries, will be greatly disappointed if the reciprocal tariff principles are applied in the secret recesses here at Washington behind closed doors.

Mr. President, that distinguished American, the late President Woodrow Wilson, had something to say upon this subject. I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a part of President Woodrow Wilson's message to Congress on May 20, 1919, and his admonition to an American Congress, which admonition applies today as it applied when he was the Chief Executive of this Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Nevertheless there are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experiences of the war have made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic considerations must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic. Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacture of dyestuffs on the one hand and of explosives and poisonous gases on the other has given the industry an exceptional significance and value. Although the United States gladly and unhesitatingly joins in the program of international disarmament, it will, nevertheless, be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well-equipped chemical plants. The German chemical industry, with which we will be brought into competition, was and may well be again a thoroughly knit monopoly capable of exercising a competition of a peculiarly insidious and dangerous kind.

Mr. HATFIELD. The pioneer of early American history and his conquests of the unexplored wilds furnished the basis for an inspiring chapter of early American history. Early pioneers passed on, leaving a great heritage for America. But the spirit of the pioneer, and of conquest was just as great as in earlier years. First came pioneering in the building of transcontinental railroads to serve industry, agriculture, and diversified American affairs. Then the mechanical age arrived, and motive power was substituted for human labor to an unprecedented degree. Transformation of society accompanying these pioneering efforts was great. Such transformations continue today, but under still a different leadership.

Today it is the scientist and engineer dealing in chemical research, chemical development, chemical industry, that afford exploration and conquest just as thrilling, just as vital to American well-being. The astounding accomplishments in applied chemistry have a profound importance for the safety, comfort, the happiness of our people. The future of chemistry and its continuous expansion in America is, therefore, of inescapable interest for every statesman.

America dare not stand still. If we were content to do so, we should have to accept the theory that a substantial percentage of the people were assigned to a subsistence level wholly un-American, wholly unacceptable to any community. Only when America advances are her people busy, productive, happy.

As we expanded across the continent from the original Colonies to the Pacific, there was always new opportunity. While the intensive development of the continent was being accomplished through railroad building, and more recently through automotive development and highway building, opportunity continued. Only occasionally when this type of expansion in human affairs slowed down or stopped did opportunity hide or seem to disappear altogether.

But there are no new geographic areas to be explored and developed. We do not need more railroads, more highways, more automobiles in the sense that we needed them 20 to 50 years ago. We must look elsewhere for opportunity. We find it in the field of chemical research, chemical development, and new industries based on them. Here is an unlimited field for new human activity. There one finds room for pioneer spirit and conquest, of just as great magnitude and of just as thrilling character as lay before the Colonists of early American history.

The remarkable progress of American chemical industry since the World War has been largely due to the progressive attitude of the executives of this industry in maintaining an extensive and continuous program of research. The future of this and many other industries must be based on continuance of large annual expenditures for highly specialized skilled staffs engaged in scientific and engineering investigations. It has been estimated that under normal business conditions the chemical research expenditure by that industry ranges from twelve to fifteen million dollars annually, and if the chemical processing industry is added it would approximate $50,000,000 annually. The results of this investment are of benefit to every citizen in the fields of medicine, agriculture, and everyday life. Through chemical research, American industry has been able to break away from the domination of foreign monopolies in these vital necessities with a tremendous saving to the consumers of this country.

Every State of our Union can and does share in these benefits. In other words, Mr. President, the chemical industry is reclaiming those products which have been considered waste materials. There is no geographic limit on the opportunity for scientific pioneering. I am prepared to show this convincingly with respect to every part of the United States. But, first, I want to describe briefly some of the achievements reached in recent years in my home State, West Virginia.

West Virginia was primarily a producer of raw materials, principally coal, lumber, oil, and gas. The application of chemistry to these and other raw materials of the State, such as natural gas, salt, and limestone, with the aid of the energy from our mountain rivers, has wrought a miracle of transformation providing many thousands of workers with employment. Today West Virginia is one of the leading chemical and industrial States of the Union, and the Kanawha River Valley has been properly termed "the Rhine of America." With coal, water, and air as raw materials, nitrogen has been fixed in the form of ammonia and other compounds made on a scale undreamed of before the World War. One of the major units of this industry in my home State has become an integral part not only of national defense but also of modern industry and of efficient agriculture.

Chemists have taken the natural gas and petroleum of this area and by complicated, highly specialized processes, made from these fuels numerous synthetic chemicals. The largest plant for manufacture of synthetic ethyl alcohol is there. It and a large variety of other solvents and related chemical products have become widely used essentials in the manufacture of explosives, varnishes, synthetic resins, and synthetic fibers such as rayon. These and other products of American ingenuity and industrial skill could not be furnished the American people so efficiently or so cheaply were it not for the supplies of chemical products made from natural gas and petroleum. Truly this is pioneering for the service of the Nation just as much as was the opening up of new territory or the conversion of unexplored wilderness into productive farm land.

In West Virginia there are many other equally novel, equally important industries based on chemical research. Enterprising establishments manufacture alkalis, barium chemicals, pigments, and an endless variety of chemical products that are a record of scientific achievement developed from simple raw materials. The application of chemical skill with sound engineering practice represents a pioneer work that is a modern-day demonstration of the Aladdin's lamp of chemistry.

The two important alkalis are soda ash and caustic soda, both made from salt. Caustic soda is made by an electrolytic treatment of brine, giving also chlorine as a joint product. Caustic soda is used in the manufacture of soap, rayon, rubber, textiles, pulp and paper, petroleum refining, and for the preparation of a multitude of chemicals. Soda ash, which is made by the so-called "Solvay process", has similar uses.

In West Virginia more than half of all the groups of enterprises, doing some $40,000,000 worth of manufacturing a year, are in the chemically controlled establishments where research finds its practical and essential application for the service of the American people and American industry. Other States may not possess so great a chemical wealth. But every State of the Union has many such opportunities which may be based on their particular resources, mineral, agricultural, or of whatever sort they may be. Each State, furthermore, needs this kind of service from chemical research and affords the same opportunity for chemical industry and development.

A trip around the United States will demonstrate many such possibilities. The many possibilities which exist are an inspiring basis for optimism and confidence in the future of industrial America if chemical vision is given continued opportunity to translate itself into practical industry.

This opportunity will not continue if the chemical industry is dependent upon the wisdom, the sagacity, the personal convictions of the men intrusted to the carrying out of the revolutionary and wholly unconstitutional proposal now pending before the Senate.

As the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] pointed out last evening, the present Secretary of State has frequently expressed and committed himself with respect to the tariff; he is against protecting any industry, and he believes fundamentally and whole-heartedly in the principles which were laid down by that English economist of many years ago, Adam Smith.

Virginia, like my own State, has been greatly benefited by chemical development. Within its borders one finds the world's greatest plant for the manufacture of synthetic sodium nitrate, the material which today replaces Chilean nitrate as a raw material for fertilizer and industrial products in time of peace, and for explosive making in time of war.

I have in my hand a book entitled "Significance of Nitrogen", by J. Enrique Zanetti, a distinguished teacher of chemistry at Columbia University. It is printed under the auspices of the Chemical Foundation, with an introduction by Hon. Francis P. Garvin. On page 62 I note a paragraph dealing with the development of synthetic nitrogen in America, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMERCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF NITROGEN FIXATION

The close of the war found us very nearly where we were prior to the opening of the war in the production of atmospheric nitrogen. Not much had been achieved in actual production, but a vast amount of experience had been gained, which, during the following 12 years, was to lead to a position of complete independence from foreign nitrogen. By 1921 only one plant, built by the Atmospheric Nitrogen Corporation at Syracuse, N.Y., was producing in appreciable amounts—3,000 tons of nitrogen annually—by the Haber process. Within a few years, however, the number and capacity of the plants increased rapidly. Capacities in 1932 are as follows:

Corporation and location:	Net tons nitrogen
Atmospheric Nitrogen Corporation, Hopewell, Va	177,000
E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Belle, W.Va	100,000
Atmospheric Nitrogen Corporation, Syracuse, N.Y.	14,000
Shell Chemical Co., Pittsburg, Calif.	10,000
Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co., Wyandotte, Mich.	6,000
Mathieson Alkali Co., Niagara Falls, N.Y.	5,000
Roessler-Hasslacher Chemical Co., Niagara Falls, N.Y.	2,500
Midland Ammonia Co., Midland, Mich.	2,000
Great Western Electrochemical Co., Pittsburg, Calif.	1,200
Pacific Nitrogen Co., Seattle, Wash.	900
Total	318,600

These plant capacities cannot be given with a claim to strict accuracy because of the rapid changes that are constantly going on, but they certainly represent a minimum capacity in 1932.

PRESENT NITROGEN SITUATION

With the substitution of by-product coke ovens for the old beehive ones our by-product ammonia annual capacity has now reached 200,000 tons of nitrogen. Adding this to the synthetic ammonia capacity in tons of nitrogen taken as 318,600, we have a capacity of 518,600 tons of nitrogen, which is far in excess of our normal peace-time consumption placed at 370,000 tons.

Military authorities place our nitrogen requirements for the manufacture of explosives and smokeless powders, in case of war, at 150,000 tons. This figure represents a maximum which will not be reached until the third year of a major war. That amount—and a good deal more—could be supplied by our existing plants which, without much difficulty, could step up their production at least 10 percent above normal capacity.

Mr. HATFIELD. Until recently Chile had a world monopoly on nitrate of soda, imposing a high export tax on this necessity. Today the price ($25 per ton) is about one-half the pre-war price, when the world's supply was a monopoly controlled by international financiers.

Incidentally, the American farmer and consumer paid an export tax to Chile of over $290,000,000 on nitrate bought from Chile since 1830, a penalty for our former dependence upon a single foreign source for a necessity, and at the same time our chemists were deprived, because of neglect upon the part of the Congress of the United States, of the opportunity of developing the ability which was dormant in them, and the toilers of this country were deprived of employment in an industry which is always stimulating and always encouraging and always intelligent.

Mr. President, suppose a few years ago we had concluded a treaty with Chile under which we bound ourselves to take Chilean nitrates for our domestic needs. How, may I ask, would it have been possible to have developed this new independent domestic source of this essential product? This single example illustrates how trade treaties will be an obstacle to progress and invention.

Because of like chemical developments elsewhere, we no longer fear a shortage of nitrogen as a possible handicap should this Nation ever become involved in armed conflict, and our farmers are independent of a foreign monopoly. Given from 12 to 18 months, American chemical industry could reproduce as often as the Government might need, at any point which the Government might designate, plants similar to those in Virginia and West Virginia, making fixed nitrogen for explosives as unlimited in quantity as the atmosphere about us. Thus chemistry has afforded the basis of our security against a foreign monopoly and made us independent.

In Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Tennessee, West Virginia, and other States the chemist has given further evidence of his pioneering service, of value not only to the local community but to the Nation as a whole. In those States are located a number of the country's greatest synthetic textile plants, making rayon, or artificial silk, as it was called at one time. These plants use either cotton linters or highly purified wood fiber (alpha-cellulose) as a base material. In other words, they take cotton and make of it an entirely new product, enlarging the textile industry's opportunity for the spinning and weaving of a wholly new class of fabrics. At once, therefore, they afford a new opportunity for employment of the people in the communities where processing is done and an additional market for our surplus cotton linters.

Here again America finds itself with abundant supplies of a textile fiber so that, to a considerable extent, we could, should the necessity ever rise, do without imports of silk from the Orient. The greatest service comes not because America thus competes with another nation in the making of artificial silk to replace the natural but in that this development frees us from dependence on others. An additional service is in the fact that the American textile consumers are given a wider choice of materials than ever before. When the ultimate users, the general public, are so served we can accord proper credit to the chemists who accomplish these developments.

In Georgia we find one of the greatest and the newest of chemical engineering achievements, which has just proven its industrial possibilities. In Georgia the distinguished American chemist, Dr. Charles H. Herty, saw the slash pine and other local scrub varieties of forest trees little used, seemingly almost useless. This situation was, as always, a challenge to the chemical pioneering spirit. Chemists felt that there must be ways in which this so-called "weed wood" of the South could be put to service. Chemical investigations in research laboratories, directed by Dr. Herty at Savannah, have supplied the answer.

A few months ago whole editions of newspapers in important southern cities were printed on the paper made from these so-called "useless trees." Not even the metropolitan dailies of New York present a finer appearance than do the southern newspapers, which used local wood pulp for their newsprint paper.

The commercialization of this research is the next step ahead. It offers perhaps the greatest single opportunity for further development of industry in the South. As plants are built, there will spring up in these States a new and wholly American industry supplying needed newsprint paper at a reasonable cost. We shall then be, to that extent, less dependent upon the imported supplies of pulpwood and wood pulp. We shall be just that much closer also to the creation of new wood-pulp-using industries of which the same chemists talk with enthusiasm and assurance.

These southern industries, first supplying their own tributary territory, can properly afford us a wider base for southern industry, a larger opportunity for other uses of wood pulp outside the field of the paper industry. They also give promise of providing employment in territory where today the want of a new industry is perhaps most acutely felt.

It is my understanding that 70 percent of the newsprint used in printing all papers and magazines is of foreign origin. This is true, even in the southern communities, where, through the developments made possible by the use of slash pine, American independence of foreign newsprint is possible.

Incidentally it is my understanding that newsprint paper made from slash pine can be commercially produced at a price which will mean a saving to the users of newsprint of from 30 to 40 percent of the present price.

Mr. President, chemical developments, as I have herein shown, point the way to industrial development and American economic independence of foreign sources of newsprint paper. Ordinarily this statement could be made with some assurance of safety. However, in view of the confidence which the present administration places in the ability of Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture, it is essential that we qualify this statement.

The Department of Agriculture has secured, through congressional favor, the handling of tremendous sums of money belonging to the American people. Presumably this money should be expended for American agriculture and the development, where possible, of agricultural waste lands. The development of the slash-pine industry should, to intelligent, fair-minded Americans, be a matter of prompt consideration. Yet the economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture is credited with stating that the first purpose of the Department of Agriculture is to place in the hands of foreign nations the dollars with which they may pay for those farm products which we export.

Mr. Ezekiel is further credited with maintaining that if we take steps to reduce our imports, which naturally would include newsprint paper, the ability of foreign countries to buy our cotton for export will be greatly curtailed.

May I suggest to the Senators representing the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas that it might be well for them to consider whether they will vote to make impossible the creation of a new industry in the Southland in order that the theory of Mr. Ezekiel and his associates may prevail, the theory of Mr. Ezekiel being that we must not permit the building of this newsprint industry in the Southland, as by so doing we would necessarily reduce our imports of newsprint paper. To Mr. Ezekiel the matter of placing American money in foreign hands is of greater importance than to provide employment for American workers or to make it possible for States, wherein slash pine prevails, to have a new industry which would assist America in economic and industrial freedom.

Mr. A. A. Berle, in an article with a subtitle, "Berle interprets the philosophy behind the program for reconstruction through control of the old forces", states:

> Those of us who had the privilege of working on the original plan began with the assumption that what we needed most was a machine that worked. Whether it was rugged individualism, fascism, communism, socialism, or what not, made not the slightest bit of difference.

I have a quotation from a radio address delivered recently by a distinguished author, H. L. Mencken, published in the Baltimore Sun of April 28, 1934, which I ask to have printed at this point as a part of my remarks. Mr. Mencken was commenting upon the Ezekiel suggestion from a practical point of view.

There being no objection, the quotation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Go back to your old job while the going is still good. Go back to teaching sophomores to be ashamed of their fathers. If you go on much longer trying to make a new sure cure on poor old Uncle Sam every day, and sending in a bill for $100,000,000 with every one, you may wake up some morning and find the country howling for your hide. And when that time comes you may discover that both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue have slid from under you and you are left to face the music alone.

Mr. President, the culture and care of forest areas on land which should be retired from agriculture would afford much employment. Essentially, this type of development would be self-financed, self-perpetuating, virile, growing, permanently a natural part of the social and business structure of the area in which it would be placed. It is not like many of the proposed governmental schemes for betterment, schemes which contemplate mere multiplication of manufacturing units or relocations in new territory. When such relocation occurs, oftentimes the new merely destroys that which was formerly efficient in another State. Not so with the southern development of wood pulp, paper, and other wood products. They would represent additional wealth-producing possibilities for the entire country.

In Florida, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi, American chemists found another opportunity for pioneering. Again they were intrigued by an apparent waste. In much of the area tributary to Pensacola there were pine stump wastes with high rosin and turpentine content. This waste temporarily disturbed the chemical investigator, but after much study he devised new methods for the reclaiming of these materials. Chemistry has added greatly to the store of available products by taking rosin and turpentine from woods that otherwise were worse than wastes, actually a nuisance, and a cause of fire hazard in the area where left by old-type logging operations, and the pulp is then available for paper making.

The chemist was not content merely to supply more naval stores of this sort. He set about devising new uses and new derivatives for the products of his industry. The story of the development of synthetic camphor from turpentine is a romance just as thrilling as any pioneering exploration on the Great Plains or over Indian trails to the far West.

This country has been and temporarily is dependent on imported camphor. The natural camphor comes from the Japanese Government monopoly and is an essential raw material for a wide variety of industrial operations. A few years ago chemists said to us in Congress, "We believe that with tariff protection against price dumping we can supply camphor at reasonable prices to supplement imported natural material." Congress decided that it was wise to encourage this development, but said that the protection afforded should continue only if the domestic industry did actually supply a reasonable percentage of domestic requirements regularly.

The United States Tariff Commission has periodically determined the ratio of domestic production and domestic consumption. It reports that the American chemical industry has made good and is today supplying well over the amount prescribed in the tariff law. The raw material is, of course, the turpentine produced in the pine forests of the South. The American chemical industry, therefore, not only insures against interrupted supply or excessive high price of camphor but also affords a new outlet for the products of the naval-stores industry of our Southern States.

The Gulf coast country has not been neglected by American chemists. Near Birmingham, Ala., we have an expanding chemical industry based largely on phosphate rock as a raw material, which is converted phosphoric acid and its derivatives. In Louisiana and Texas there are large deposits of sulphur, salt, petroleum, and natural gas, which products are the basic raw materials used in much of the new chemicals. In Louisiana there is occurring new sulphur production as well as new alkali-industry development, which will add much to the industrial wealth of that southern State.

At Baton Rouge there is a new plant for the hydrogenation of petroleum. Hydrogen is derived from natural gas and is chemically combined with petroleum, thus giving a higher yield of gasoline and producing lubricating oils of superior qualities.

Similar developments exist in the Gulf coast country, with one of the outstanding alkali plants of the Nation located at Corpus Christi, Tex.

Mr. President, the Dow Chemical Co. began extracting iodine direct from brine in Shreveport, La., about 1928. In 1930 they opened another plant at Long Beach, Calif. This iodine is precipitated as silver iodide from the raw brine slightly acidulated with sulphuric acid. The silver iodide is converted to iodine and the silver recovered.

The price of iodine in 1930 was about $4 per pound. We were buying every pound of it from Chile. This monopoly of the English-Chilean syndicate controlled every pound of iodine shipped into America and our consumers paid $4 a pound. But what do we find today? Through the development made possible by research on the part of the Dow Chemical Co., taking the salt water from the oil wells of Louisiana and California, treating it with a silver product, precipitating silver iodide, and then manufacturing the iodine into the sublimated form, there is produced in America a tremendous amount of iodine yearly, saving to the American people some $1,250,000. In 1932 the price dropped to $2.50 per pound, and in the spring of 1933 it dropped further to $1.90 per pound.

Another plant, also at Long Beach, Calif., is making iodine from the same California waste brines from the oil wells. All told, the American plants are making more than half of all the iodine used in the United States.

Mr. President, years ago the world was dependent for sulphur on the pyrites mines of Spain and the sulphur mines of Italy. Prices of this essential element were irregular and often excessive. Supplies were none too sure. American industry had to carry great stocks in storage to insure against interruption of manufacturing operations should labor, shipping, or less frequently war-time interruption of supply occur. Today all that has been changed.

A new process for sulphur mining has been developed and applied in Texas and Louisiana. Steam is pumped down into the ground, and the sulphur is melted in place from its rocky bed far below the surface. It is then forced out of the ground in a fluid condition, pumped to nearby storage bins, and allowed to solidify. This sounds, and actually is, very simple; but it took a great deal of careful chemical research and highly skilled engineering development to make it a successful, going process. This new process made possible American freedom from fluctuating price, and a complete elimination of any threat of interrupted supply of sulphur.

That is an extremely important thing for the welfare not only of the sulphur and sulphuric-acid industries but also of scores of other great industrial groups. These today could not operate without that most important of all heavy chemicals, sulphuric acid, which is made in huge quantities every year from the elemental sulphur so simply and so efficiently mined in these Southern States. Today there is hardly a plant making steel, fertilizer, petroleum products—such as gasoline—paints or pigments, explosives, rayon, or a hundred other products which would not have to close down if its supply of sulphuric acid could not be obtained. Literally millions of tons of sulphuric acid are used annually in these industrial operations. Certainty and continuity, as well as reasonable price, are assured, because the American chemical industry has supplied the sulphur, and developed highly efficient processes for conversion of elemental sulphur into sulphuric acid.

Mr. President, if there were time, one could tell an intensely interesting story of the ways in which sulphuric acid can now be made. Formerly huge chambers made of lead were necessary. Then came chemists and devised what they called the contact process, using that extremely rare metal, platinum, as an aid to combining sulphur dioxide, air, and water into the wanted acid. Huge lead chambers were extremely costly, and the supplies of the rare metal platinum were too uncertain and the price much too high to satisfy the chemist. Wholly new kinds of material were devised to take the place of platinum. These materials were made from minerals containing vanadium, a metal somewhat rare, but far less expensive and far more widely available than platinum.

The American industrial concerns that wish to make sulphuric acid have a wide choice of processes and assurance that they are not dependent on the costly platinum. One might say that all this development places a limited price on sulphuric acid. Certainly this result is not only of value to the communities where the acid industry is located but it is also of tremendous importance to all users of the multitude of products in the making of which the sulphuric acid is used.

They know that so far as these chemicals are concerned they need not worry. The price to them of the ultimate product is not going to rise unduly. Substitution of a competing method or material will quickly come, if necessary, to prevent this. The chemist thus becomes a protector of the consumer-customer pocketbook through the achievements made possible by scientific pioneering.

Mr. President, many times Congress has given its attention to the question of fertilizer supply for American agriculture. Without fertilizer, the American farmer is helpless in his competition with the rest of the world for domestic as well as foreign markets. Without fertilizer, his labor in the production of crops, even with modern machinery, would be almost as great as in the pioneer days, with primitive scythes and hand-seeding of the field.

Fertilizer is the farmer's labor-saving device par excellence. The chemist has long recognized this. Furthermore, he has done something about it. He has made fertilizer materials cheap, widely available, certain of supply from American sources. It was the chemist's curiosity to know what was in the rock underlying the oil fields in Texas and New Mexico that brought about the greatest and most recent of these discoveries, paving the way for American independence for our fertilizer industry. I refer to the studies made by chemists of the rock cuttings taken from oil wells in these States. In these cuttings the chemists found significant quantities of potash, one of the three vital supplies for fertilizer which at that time had to be secured from foreign sources.

The chemists recommended underground exploration to see just how much potash actually existed, and just where it might be possible to mine it economically. With the aid of geologic science, a number of places were selected for drilling. The prophesied existence of huge beds of potash was proven. Now a substantial chemical enterprise is mining and processing potash in New Mexico and California in quantities which can supply about one-third of the entire domestic consumption. Enlargement of these operations would be easy and economic were there any threat of price rise in the supplies imported from abroad. The question is simply one of applying on a larger scale established chemical methods to the reserves proven by sound exploration, guided by impartial scientific investigators.

Up until the time of this discovery we depended altogether upon the German production of this product, which seemed to exist in various sections of the German Empire and in Alsace-Lorraine.

Mr. President, because of this and other developments already referred to, America can stand independent of the rest of the world so far as fertilizer needs are concerned. We could at any time, with some notice, supply American industry and American agriculture with all they may ask for in the way of potash, nitrogen products, and phosphate chemicals. All this could be done without any significant rise in price above the prevailing rates for the chemicals needed. Thus, with respect to those basic materials of military and agricultural need, America today is self-sufficient. To this extent the War Department's list of strategic imported materials has shrunk.

No longer need our military authorities worry as to where they will get abundant supplies of nitrogen or potash in the event of hostilities. The American chemical industry stands in a proven position, adequately prepared to meet these needs, no matter how much or how fast they may expand. This is as it should be. We have American chemical research, an aggressive American chemical industry, and adequate tariff protection to thank for the achievement.

The chemical industry is further aggressively at work in many of these Midwestern and Great Lakes States. It has made a more notable contribution with the use of local raw materials than at Midland, Mich. There the raw material used is a salt brine, pumped from deep wells. From this brine is made a wide variety of salt products and some highly distinctive materials which occur here in unusual concentration in these brines. These include alkalis, chlorine used for the purification of drinking water, Epsom salt (magnesium sulphate), and bromides used in medicine and photography.

Without developments which made bromine available in large quantities, it would not be possible to achieve success in the development of the highly efficient ethyl gasolines marketed now from coast to coast by every important petroleum company. There is a romance of chemical pioneering in this development that is thrilling, even to the layman.

Mr. President, to make ethyl gasoline, the petroleum industry requires a fluid which contains various bromine compounds, such as ethylene dibromide. For a time it looked as though the limited supplies of bromine were going to limit the quantities of efficient motor fuel which could otherwise be marketed. More intensive development at Michigan took place, and a significant expansion in supply of bromine occurred. Sea water was then selected as a logical raw material.

Mr. President, American chemistry in the development of ethyl gasoline has created a market for the use of petroleum which otherwise would not exist. Not only this, but the development of ethyl gasoline has enlarged the opportunities and the speed of airplane traveling.

One wonders why the Dow Chemical Co., up in northern Michigan, should be the one leading in research of this sort. This is merely another evidence that chemistry knows no geographic boundaries, recognizing no artificial limits on new plans for better, cheaper service to its customers. As a result of the scientific chemical research work at Midland, there has been built within the last year near Wilmington, N.C., a plant to recover bromine from sea water. This is known as the "Ethyl-Dow Chemical Co." That plant takes sea water in which there is about 1 pound of bromine for every 10 tons of water and efficiently recovers this necessary chemical. The supply which the petroleum industry demands is, therefore, only limited by the market, not any longer by the raw material. Withal, the price of bromine has become constantly lower.

One of the many developments in which Dow chemists have had an important part is the production of magnesium. This is one of the elemental materials, even lighter than aluminum. It is a constituent of some of the lightest, strongest alloys so far developed. Named for the company first producing it—dow metal—it is furnished as an additional member of the light alloy series available to American manufacturing industry. It combines strength and lightness in an admirable way for many purposes to which older types of metal are not so well adapted.

Incidentally I understand that 20 percent of the annual earnings of the Dow Chemical Co. are set aside each year for chemical research.

This development of light alloys, of alloy steel, and nonferrous alloys is really the prefatory chapter of chemical development on which transportation of the future is to be based. The aircraft industries, both airplanes and lighter-than-air ships, would not have been possible in their modern efficient form, had there not been both extremely strong light alloy steels and the aluminum and magnesium alloys of which these craft and their mechanical equipment are made. Recently an American airplane made a phenomenal trip from San Francisco to New York in less than 13 hours due to this type of construction.

Other divisions of the transportation industries are learning a great lesson from aircraft. Land vehicles, quite as much as air vehicles, should be as light as possible commensurate with strength suitable for service. Lately there have been a half dozen new railroad train or car developments of this sort. As evidence that the rail carriers are alert to the possibilities which come from light alloys chemically controlled, we now hear of speeds of 100 miles or more per hour of trains, depending on the light construction which gains speed without need for sacrificing strength or security.

The alloy steels rendering so great a service in automotive transportation are going to find application in rail development as well. For this reason there is today much talk of applying these metals to freight-car as well as to passenger-car development. This is not in the interest alone of more beauty or speed. It is in the interest of economy and efficiency of service to the shipper. Hauling deadweight tonnages of old-fashioned crude cars about the country is an advantage to no one. Substitution of more efficient transportation units will be helpful to every interest involved.

It is said that the lowering of the net weight of a freight car by only 5 tons would render practically obsolete every freight car now in America. Chemical engineers in the alloy-steel field tell us that even a greater weight saving than this can be accomplished by the use of modern materials of construction. They assure us that it can be done at a cost within practical limits. The saving in fuel, wear and tear, handling charges on the cars when hauled both full and empty will more than repay the carriers for purchase of equipment of this sort. Evidently we are entering into a whole new era of transportation facilities, using materials developed under chemical-process control.

Mr. President, when viewing this situation which contemplates a rebuilding of much, in order that we may substitute better equipment, one sees possibilities of employment for workers all the way from the iron mine, through the iron and steel industry, to the shops building new equipment. This reveals possible new employment which, for a time may equal that prevailing when the railroads were first laid out and built. The beauty of all this is that none of it is employment artificially stimulated. It is all based on the sound judgment of competent business executives who make the new purchases and carry out the new plans because this is the way to give better service to their patrons and customers—a symbol of progress.

When we study the available raw materials, explore the possibilities of further development, consider needed industry, everywhere we find new chemical opportunity. The only limitation on this chemical development is that placed by the barrier of uncertainty, the obstacle of threatened interruption to development, such as the measure now pending, just at some crucial time as the work goes on, as prevails at present with the threat of foreign products landed at total costs which are less than American costs of production, small as they are.

Mr. President, most of us, unacquainted with scientific developments, little realize the present-day scope of chemical enterprise. Not all this is found in the making of queer commodities sold in tank cars, high-pressure cylinders, or special containers devised to meet the needs of a particular commodity. Many of the products are materials of everyday use, which we could not have in their present purity, at their present price, were it not for the intensive research and close chemical control in the factory. During the past decade this dominance of chemical-process industry has grown amazingly. In the last three census years amazing data were disclosed as to the extent of this growth.

Today approximately 20 percent of all American manufactures, measured either in terms of value of product or in terms of factory employment, comes from establishments properly classified as chemically controlled industry. If one adds to these the highly processed modern foods, processed fuels, and metals and alloys made under the most careful chemical control, he finds that at least another 20 to 25 percent is dependent on chemically minded management. Thus we reach the amazing conclusion that nearly half of the output of American factories is responsive to chemical research, chemical control, or the planning of chemically minded executives. Under these circumstances is there any wonder that discerning statesmen look with admiration at the achievement of this distinguished profession or science.

Chemical industry has rendered another service of great social value, which has been little noticed. I refer to the stabilization of supplies and prices of everyday goods. Formerly there were shortages and surpluses of many things which were accepted as natural or inevitable. The chemist dislikes that word "inevitable." He refuses to accept it with reference to goods of any sort. The chemist, therefore, sets about providing substitutes of comparable efficiency and value which can be used when there be need.

From this spirit of chemical development there have grown up many new commodities. These are competitive, one with another. Such competition is, to the public, far more important in maintaining reasonable price levels than is any sort of acceptable competition between concerns making identical commodities. If one kind of leather tanning (vegetable tan) becomes too expensive, the chemist substitutes a new method (chrome tan), and the buyer of shoes is protected against unreasonable increases in prices. If one solvent happens to be scarce, another is substituted, such as synthetic amyl alcohol, usually with little or no increase in cost to the manufacturer. There is no end to this development. Each new thing enters the market in order to give the ultimate purchaser wider choice and greater certainty of uninterrupted supply.

Mr. President, the chemical industry has long recognized this situation. It has profited by its knowledge. During the boom period it did not allow prices to get out of hand. The chemical commodity index curve for 1920 to 1930 was surprisingly level. Of course, certain individual commodities rose and fell sharply, but, by and large, chemicals as a class did not boom, hence they did not have any great occasion to slump. Employment in the chemical industry has been correspondingly stable. Every element in the business has been benefited, including the consumer.

America would be very fortunate if more of its industrial groups had been able to operate on the far-seeing scientific basis which prevailed in the chemical industry. Perhaps as more of the industries come under chemically minded management, this industrial benefit will be experienced, as well as the advantage of scientific research. Perhaps if we do more of that kind of planning, based on informed, scientifically minded management, we would need less of Government interference with business affairs, less artificial planning by the academic mind, which can know but little of the real problems of practical business which it seeks to govern.

America expects to progress further. None of us are content to stand still. We will progress the more rapidly if we afford a continued opportunity for chemical investigation and chemical industry to thrive. Based on such opportunities will be new services and new possibilities for employment, and, best of all, a higher standard of living for all—consuming groups as well as producers. A few of the many examples include utilization of cottonseed, formerly a waste product, as a raw material for edible oil and as a source for lintels used for pyroxylin products—celluloid articles—and as a base for the lacquer industry used in painting for instance automobiles; also new sources of fertilizer materials; and above all, new medicinals for the cure and prevention of disease.

Mr. President, there are some who will contend that we possess a very large heavy-chemical industry, one which produces alkalis, acids, fertilizers, metallic salts, wood-distillation chemicals, and other products, and also related industries, such as rayon. These industries are established as a result of congressional tariff action, on a firm basis. These industries will remain strong only so long as we continue to write tariff rates in the open.

No American industry can feel that it is safe with men, not conversant with industry, men having no interest in the continuation of industries which are temporarily in need of what to some may appear to be high tariff rates, men who are controlled and influenced solely by theory and virtually devoid of facts.

The organic-chemical industry, which includes such products as dyes and medicinals, had made very little progress prior to 1914.

For a period of 150 years we were largely dependent upon products produced by the German cartel, and other foreign syndicates, and we paid to them such prices for these most essential products as they demanded.

The American organic-chemical industry has grown today to a point where, if present tariff rates on these products continue, we will be able to be independent of the German cartel, the British, the French, or the Japanese monopolies.

Mr. President, this does not mean that the American producer of these organic-chemical products secures from the American people the exorbitant, yes, the extortionate prices which the American people were forced to pay prior to the establishment, on a sound basis, of the American organic-chemical industry.

Incidentally, one reason these products are sold to the American people at a fair price, a price, Mr. President, which is far below prices we formerly paid to the German cartel, is the foresight and the patriotism of the Honorable Francis P. Garvan, founder of the American Chemical Foundation, to whom President Wilson and a Democratic Congress entrusted those patents which were taken over when we entered the World War. It is my understanding that Mr. Garvan established a license system whereby all American chemical manufactures were licensed to use these patents on the payment of a small fee, the proceeds from these licenses being used exclusively for chemical research and promotion of the American Chemical Foundation.

Mr. President, the farmer is dependent upon the chemical industry for many products which make farm life more pleasant and, likewise, the chemical industry is dependent upon the purchasing power of the American farmer.

Therefore, I sincerely trust that this amendment protecting agriculture, so essential to the welfare of the American farmer, will prevail.

At this point I desire to read from the text of a book by an outstanding American chemist who is the chief of the research division of the Dow Chemical Co., located in the great State of Michigan. His name is William J. Hale, Ph.D. It was Dr. Hale, through his chemical staff, who developed the process through which iodine is taken from the salt wells of America. It was the Dow Co. who fathered the development of bromine from the Atlantic Ocean, and, not long ago, the development of a plant in the great State of North Carolina. This plant is extracting bromine in commercial quantities. For every 10 tons of sea water handled 1 pound of bromine is realized.

A few years ago this eminent chemist and distinguished American, published a book, the title of which is "Chemistry Triumphant: The Rise and Reign of Chemistry in the Chemical World."

This book contains a wealth of information and, at this point, I wish to quote as follows:

> The status of chemical industry in America in 1914 was infantile in the extreme. There was only a smattering of an organic-chemical industry, but the inorganic had made some real progress in production of halogens, soda, sulphuric acid, and aluminum. The World War practically set up an embargo in this country on chemicals. Chemical activities thus were encouraged and, to extend this activity, an organic-chemical embargo was continued after the war up to the time of passage of the benign Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act of 1922. Thus was made possible the rise and development in America of this fundamental industry of industries. Truly the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act will be viewed by future historians as one of the greatest and most timely acts of a United States Congress in making for American safety and security for all time.

In California we find literally scores of examples of chemical achievement. The reason for my delivery of this address was the argument presented yesterday evening by the distinguished Senator from that great State [Mr. JOHNSON], as stated in the beginning of my remarks.

One of these achievements deserves special attention, not because it is the biggest or the finest or any other superlative sort of thing. It deserves attention rather because it represents an interesting point of view of chemists and the chemical industry.

Waste is at all times objectionable to the chemist. He sees no excuse for waste products. The chemist insists on doing research in order to establish an industrial basis for converting these into by-products. In other words, we might well classify chemists as those who literally develop valuable products from the scavenger materials. They reclaim, rehabilitate, and turn into some useful material something which ordinarily would be thrown away. Strangely enough, oftentimes they make the by-product more important, more profitable, of greater public service than the original industrial materials.

In California chemists found the activities of the citrus-fruit industry plagued by surpluses, burdened with low-grade fruit that could not be packaged, shipped, and profitably sold on the ordinary market. In the case of lemons currently the margin of profit was destroyed by the lack of market for the culls and surpluses. Chemists attacked this problem with fundamental research methods. They established a basis for a lemon-oil industry, utilizing the rind, the citric-acid industry using the juice. Today the great lemon-marketing cooperatives of the West operate plants which are based on the research achievements of American chemists.

This development in California, in conjunction with an eastern process for making citric acid from sugar, has made this country independent of our former sole source of raw materials for citric acid, namely, Italy.

In California we have a plant making synthetic ammonia and derivatives based upon hydrogen obtained from natural gas, a unique development.

Later I shall refer to the great potash and borax industry situated at Searles Lake, Calif. Here the chemist has again rendered a service both to the industry and to the customers.

During the war we were seeking kelp from the sea, salts from the lakes of Nebraska and California, with the hope of securing a little fertilizer potash for the farmer. But, today, there has been a marvelous development in the production of potash in New Mexico through the work of the chemists who have delved down into the earth and found here, under our own flag, richer stores, if possible, than are found in the German Empire.

Mr. President, shortly I expect to hear that the chemists will take part in two new developments now occurring on the Columbia River, one at Bonneville, just 50 miles east of Portland, Oreg., the other at Grand Coulee, in central Washington. The American Government at these two points is building two great power dams, utilizing the water flow of this greatest river of the far Northwest.

We may look forward to the meeting at tidewater, at the Bonneville plant, of cheap power and cheap transportation. Just a few hundred miles to the east, in Idaho and Montana, are huge supplies of phosphate rock. Just now able chemical engineers are investigating the possibility of taking this rock, this power, cheap transportation, and potash which the chemists have made available at Searles Lake and Death Valley, Calif., and preparing cheap fertilizer. At one of the western ports of America, where ended the famous explorations of Lewis and Clark, the scientific explorers take up the trail. They suggest to us that here may be the point at which to make the cheapest fertilizer materials available for the Pacific region.

As one turns eastward across the Great Plain States of the Northwest, one recognizes a great national problem for which the chemical industry has not yet afforded an adequate answer, the problem of disposal of agricultural surpluses. The reason for delay is obvious, when one studies this situation.

Mr. President, hitherto these materials, wheat, corn, cattle, hogs, and other farm and range products, have been used almost wholly as food. The human being wants and uses only about so much food, on the average, each day. Growing more food, therefore, merely lowers the price. Lowering the price does not create a desire for more food or any opportunity for a greater market. No amount of agricultural research, showing how to produce foodstuffs more cheaply, will make us eat any more food, although we may increase the variety. Such research does make it possible to grow the food at a cost more nearly approximating the market price, but it does not solve the surplus problem.

The chemical industry seems to afford the only hopeful basis for a solution of this problem. The chemist takes corn, coal, petroleum, or natural gas and makes many hundreds of useful chemicals that have no apparent relationship to the raw material employed. It is to be expected that with the proper stimulation the chemical industry can take wheat and other grains as they have taken corn, coal, and petroleum as chemical raw materials and make nonfood products from them. A much larger opportunity lies ahead. The chemical industry has done much for the Corn Belt, but it has not yet solved its problem of surpluses. It is not too much to hope, however, that chemical research, engineering development, and industrialization will do so in due time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FESS. There has been much speculation as to the possibility of converting out of corn, for example, a form of alcohol which might be used for fuel purposes, for operating internal-combustion engines, and so on.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the able Senator for his contribution, and I am about to discuss the inestimable help which American chemists have rendered in making valuable use of corn and other farm products.

It is none other than the distinguished chemist to whom I referred a while ago, Dr. Hale, who has written extensively upon the practicability of doing what the Senator from Ohio has referred to. Dr. Hale and other chemists claim that the farmer's surplus corn can be utilized by making it into alcohol, and that if alcohol is mixed in certain proportions with gasoline the efficiency of the gasoline will be increased, and this method could utilize every surplus ear of corn produced by the American farmer. They also state that if this project is developed—and they say that it certainly will be—the farmer will never have an opportunity for a vacation, but that he will have to reclaim the land now dormant in order to satisfy the demands which will be made for this combination with gasoline which is made from petroleum and alcohol, which combination increases the standard of efficiency of the automobile.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of a chart which indicates, in part, what American chemists have done with corn. I shall not take the time to give a list of the different by-products which flow from an ear of corn, but I point on the chart to the germ or heart of the corn, which is the fattening element. When the farmer feeds that to his hog, instead of developing a hog that is attractive to the market he develops one satisfactory primarily for the production of lard, but if he takes the germ, or that fattening element, out of the corn, the farmer can feed the proteins of the corn to his hog and develop one more acceptable to the market, such as we find in the State of Virginia in the production of Smithfield hams.

Corn is taken by the chemist, and from the kernels are prepared yeast, gluten, and feed, dry and wet starches. The dry starch is used in the making of textiles, paper, confectionery, explosives, laundry, adhesive, colors, and fireworks. From the wet starch is derived sugar, which is used in dietetics, caramel, brewing, rayon, leather, lactic acid, sodium lactate, calcium lactate, vinegar, pharmaceuticals, alcohol, and fermentation products. In addition thereto, from the germ in the corn are prepared corn oil, corn-oil meal, soap and glycerine, salad oils, table and cooking oils.

In other words, Mr. President, the corn farmer is deriving, through chemical research, similar cooperation and help as happened in the coal fields, where American chemistry has made possible the use of coal for medicinals, fertilizers, and many other chemicals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from West Virginia on the amendment has expired.

Mr. HATFIELD. I believe I have 20 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 20 minutes on the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have some figures here showing the prices of chemicals now as compared with the prices the American people paid for like chemicals before the development of industrial chemistry in the United States.

Before the war, to furnish one example, the well-known medicinal "606", sold by the German cartel, cost the consumer about $3.50 per ampul, and at that time was a German monopoly. I am now informed that the purchases of salvarsan by the United States Government of the improved product from domestic sources cost twenty-odd cents per ampul.

What is true of "606", or salvarsan, is typical of what has happened with many other chemical products. America has become independent of foreign monopoly and the American people have been privileged to purchase these products at prices which are from one-half to one-tenth the prices which they formerly paid.

The story of indigo which sold in 1916 at $2 and which sold in 1932 at 14 cents is most interesting.

What is true of indigo is likewise true of sulfur black. Pre-war price, 18 cents; 1932, 15 cents.

Aspirin, a drug used universally today but available only to the rich prior to 1915, sold in 1932 for 68 cents, as against a pre-war price of $4.80.

Saccharin: Pre-war price, $2.25; current price, $1.70.

Diethylbarbituric acid (trade name, Barbital and Veronal): Pre-war price, $21.50; current price, $3.25.

Carbon tetrachloride: Pre-war price, 8½ cents; current price, 5¼ cents.

Ammonia: July 1914, 13 cents; current price, 4½ cents.

Mr. President, I desire to refer to a few more problems dealing with creative chemistry which have been developed in the United States in the last 17 years. I read from a text from a book by the late Edwin E. Slosson, M.S., Ph.D., one of America's outstanding scientific writers, one who possibly may be known personally to a great many Representatives and Senators. This distinguished scientist was a very attractive writer, a very impressive writer. He was one who could impart his knowledge to the public in an understandable way.

Take, for instance, his treatment of the subject of coal, a commodity which is found in 35 or 40 of the 48 States of the Union in commercial quantities, in the production of which some 500,000 men are employed.

In the olden days, 35 or 40 years ago, the old beehive oven was the oven which furnished the coke for the steel industry of this country; but today the beehive oven would be a curiosity indeed.

I hold in my hand a chart, unfolded, which shows coal in its distilled state, yielding coke, gas, and tar; and I turn a few pages from this chart, and I behold another chart showing coal in its original form, taken from the mine 100 percent.

In another example is shown where the coal has been reduced, the coke or carbon representing 72 percent of the original coal. Then we go to another chart, and we find gas representing 22 percent of the original coal, and then to a lesser constituent, tar, representing 6 percent of the coal; and from this tar, Mr. President, there have been unfolded many thousands of different chemicals giving to the American textile mills a wide variety of dyes, which are reflected in the wearing apparel of each and every one of us today.

Not only that, Mr. President, but from the same tar comes synthetic chemicals and synthetic medicines; very much better, very much purer than the chemicals that were once developed from the vegetable root or from the tree that grew in the forest. That in part is what happened to coal in the last 17 years in America under the development of the American chemist.

Take the product known as "madder." It was a European farm product which was grown on more than 500,000 acres in southern France. From these madder roots was developed a chemical known as "alizarin", which represents the basis of turkey red.

Synthetic indigo is developed from coal tar, a synthetic product. Indigo grew in India. Some 1,500,000 acres were devoted to the development and growth of indigo.

The madder root which was produced and sold from the farm product of France brought to the growers of madder some $15,000,000 a year. The indigo grown in India brought to those who cultivated it some $22,000,000 a year. So, Mr. President, it is easy to see what is in store for the American people through and by the continued development of the chemical industry of America if properly protected.

Take another example. Many of us have read of Tyrian purple which was worn by the Roman senators and by the wealthy people in those ancient days of old Rome in its heyday. We remember reading of the tunic, a yard wide, or, at least a yard square, and the cost of the dye which entered into that tunic, which dye was taken from the glands of numberless little shellfish taken from the Mediterranean. The dye was extracted from the little sac that was located near the head. In case some harm was overtaking the shellfish it emitted this fluid which hid it from its enemy. These little glands were taken from the fish, the fluid was extracted from the gland, and it took 12,000 of them, Mr. President, or $750 worth, taken from these little inhabitants of the Mediterranean Sea, for the purpose of dyeing one tunic a yard square.

At this point in my remarks, I desire to quote for the RECORD an extract from Chemistry Triumphant:

There is no animosity between the chemist and the toiler of the land; they are each striving to provide for man's needs at lowest costs. As biology develops, the chemist in turn will apply his art to extend and diversify the output of the land. But from time to time the advance in chemical manufacture is destined to work havoc upon century-old customs and habits.

Some 400,000 acres, extending from France into Asia Minor, were once under cultivation of madder. By 1870 the annual world crop of this root had mounted to 70,000 tons, valued at that time at $15,000,000, and containing about 1,500,000 pounds of pure alizarin. In 1912 the consumption of synthetic alizarin amounted to 4,000,000 pounds. Today little or no madder is grown. Synthetic alizarin was victorious.

In the same manner natural indigo was practically driven from the world market by the synthetic product. This constituted the greatest chemical gamble in the world's history down to the close of the nineteenth century. Over $5,000,000 was expended by the German companies toward their goal. No one could have foreseen the tremendous obstacles that were destined to beset the enterprise.

The average annual world production of indigo in 1880 amounted to some 8,000,000 pounds (65 percent indigotine). In 1896 approximately 1,600,000 acres under indigo cultivation yielded a crop of 17,000,000 pounds of indigo (65 percent indigotine) valued at $20,000,000. In 1912, after 15 years of severe competition, this acreage had dropped to 200,000, and the value of the crop to about $2,000,000. In 1913 Germany exported 13,400,000 pounds (100 percent) synthetic indigo, valued at $10,000,000, with the selling price reduced to about one-half of what the natural indigo commanded in 1896. By 1914 synthetic indigo in the form of a 20 percent paste was being delivered in New York at 15 cents per pound. Today the world production of indigo (20 percent) is about 75,000,000 pounds annually. The victory was complete. Synthetic indigo of American manufacture appeared in our markets in January 1917. From its initial selling price of $1.25 per pound (20 percent paste) the constant lowering in manufacturing costs permitted of its sale at scarcely 13 cents per pound by 1927.

It was not long before the indigo chemist sought even to better his product beyond that provided by nature through many milleniums. In 1909 Friedlaender synthesized 6, 6'-dibromindigotine and found it identical with Tyrian purple of the ancients; over 12,000 molluscs (murex brandaris) were collected on Italian shores to yield 1.4 grams of this dye to confirm his research. And today we brominate indigo directly to a number of valuable fast dyes, notably among which is a tetrabrom indigo (Ciba blue 2B) far superior to the ancient Tyrian purple of similar constitution.

Again in 1905 Friedlaender discovered the beautiful red thioindigo, a direct counterpart of indigotine, wherein the imino (NH) groups of the latter are replaced by sulphur (thio) atoms. Insight into indigotine structure led to amplification in new ranges of color. In general these indigoid dyes constitute our first vat dyes; dyes that are capable of reduction to a soluble leuco or colorless base in vats or tubs, and from which solutions the immersed textiles absorb the colorless base to be dyed (that is, impregnated with the original insoluble dye) immediately after they are exposed to the oxidizing action of air. In 1901 R. Bohn discovered another type of vat dye called indanthrene. In brilliance and fastness to light it has few competitors. Furthermore, by halogenation this fastness is enhanced. Possibly no class of dyes has attracted more attention of late than certain of the azo colors; they lend themselves most admirably to development upon the newer silks.

Mr. President, today the American chemist can reproduce the same Tyrian purple at a minute fraction—a few coppers—of what it cost to color this same tunic in ancient times.

Mr. President, I could go along and recite the unfolding of the great accomplishments of chemical progress over the period of 17 years in America because of the protective tariff which was enacted in 1922 after the embargo was lifted, but time will not permit.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Before the Senator reads I wish to recall to his memory the sort of prophecies which were made back in 1922, when it was proposed to protect the dye industry.

The mere suggestion was ridiculed out of all countenance. We were then wholly subservient to Germany for dyes; and when it was suggested that we could produce sufficient for our needs it was ridiculed, just as there was ridicule back in the early days of tin plate, when it was said that it was perfectly silly to talk about our ability to furnish sufficient tin plate for our needs. All that the Senator has stated has developed since 1922. It has all developed in that comparatively short time.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the able Senator for his contribution.

It was due to this opposition, so well expressed by the able Senator from Ohio, that for 150 years the chemical industry of America languished; and it will languish just so long again, Mr. President, unless it is so guarded by a protective tariff which is free from bargaining, assuring those who are willing to invest their money in this life-saving industry to the 125,000,000 people that their investment will be worth while. And, while the investment is safe, it is made in the interest of the American consumer, as the RECORD will disclose from statements which appear in my address, this industry has saved the consumer who pays for these products millions, yes, many millions of dollars yearly.

Dr. Hale, in his interesting book Chemistry Triumphant, refers to the fact that had the Germans prosecuted the war as they could have done in the first weeks of the contest, they, in all probability, would have won a complete victory. But when the onslaught came and when 6,000 men fell upon the field of battle, overcome by gas, not knowing what they were battling against, Mr. President, Italy, France, and England were as paralytic in their preparedness as was America. It was left to the American chemists, largely here in the District of Columbia, to develop the gas, and the Allies furnished the shells; and these shells were loaded with gas and sent across the seas so the soldiers of the Allied forces might be supplied with the same kind of armaments which were utilized and developed in secret and their potentialities realized by the German chemists even before the outbreak of the war.

Mr. President, quoting from Chemistry Triumphant, I note Dr. Hale deals with the subject of the gas attack by the Germans upon the Allies, as follows:

At the outbreak of the war, almost all countries, outside of Germany, were woefully deficient in chemical experience. This was by far their greatest weakness. Had Germany left her land troops at home and concentrated upon chemo-aerial attack, the victory would have been hers even within 10 days. This is on the assumption, of course, that she could have commanded a great number of airplanes and a sufficiency of chemicals.

Mr. President, the value of chemical gas in warfare in contrast with the value of gunfire is well illustrated in the book, Creative Chemistry, by Edwin E. Slosson, page 221, the chapter entitled "Fighting with Fumes", which reads as follows:

The Germans opened the war using projectiles 17 inches in diameter. They closed it using projectiles one one-hundred millionth of an inch in diameter. And the latter were more effective than the former. As the dimensions were reduced from molar to molecular the battle became more intense. For when the "Big Bertha" had shot its bolt, that was the end of it. Whomever it hit was hurt, but after that the steel fragments of the shell lay on the ground harmless and inert. The men in the dugouts could hear the shells whistle overhead without alarm. But the poison gas could penetrate where the rifle ball could not. The malignant molecules seemed to search out their victims. They crept through the crevices of the subterranean shelters. They hunted for the pinholes in the face masks. They lay in wait for days in the trenches for the soldiers' return as a cat watches at the hole of a mouse. The cannon ball could be seen and heard. The poison gas was invisible and inaudible, and sometimes even the chemical sense which nature has given man for his protection, the sense of smell, failed to give warning of the approach of the foe.

Mr. President, it is our duty, it is an obligation that we owe to our people to safeguard and protect this industry so essential in time of peace, so necessary in time of war. To my mind, no diplomat, no college theorist should be trusted to enter into negotiations with any foreign country through which negotiations we may awaken and find that our chemical industry has been throttled.

Mr. President, the American farmer profits through the continuation of the American chemical industry and the American chemical industry and every other industry can profit only through the continuation of a purchasing power on the part of American farmers, which purchasing power they have only through the sale of their farm products to the employed industrial workers of our country.

Mr. President, I whole-heartedly support the amendment sponsored by Senators JOHNSON and FLETCHER.

(Quotations from Dr. Hale's book and other quotations ordered to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of Mr. HATFIELD'S remarks are as follows:)

[From the Chemistry Triumphant, p. 11]

The great lesson impressed upon the Allies was the power of chemical industry and the complete dependence at all times of all things human upon chemical advance. Thus has chemical study come to the fore—achemico—Genesis of the world itself. It is the heritage which Germany gave to an advancing civilization—the valorization of chemistry.

BIOLOGICAL GENESIS—THE (?) ASCENDANCY

In the not far distant future there must come another awakening—the dominance of another force; the birth of another star of human destiny. This is the biological development. Not alone must we become conversant with all manner of physical and chemical changes inherent in human functions but further must we attain exact knowledge and control of bacteria and enzymes in all media.

It is hoped that the agency of a war will not be required to force home the necessity of such study. Almost 9,000,000 able-bodied men had need to be killed to force the world upon a chemical basis. Nature is prodigal in her tutelage. In the insect world there would appear indeed parallels of these human devastations through mighty cataclysms that serve for racial advance.

[From the Chemical Industries for May 1934]

A CHEMICAL TOURIST THROUGH THE SOUTH

By Williams Haynes

I. DOWN THE ATLANTIC SEABOARD

Three-quarters of the several million dollars which chemical industry spent for new plants last year was invested in the South. Half of these capital expenditures this year will be made in the South. By next year there will be a notable tilt southward in the balance of our chemical production, and more than this, the South will be the home not only of new centers of production of standard heavy chemicals, but also of new producers and of new processes.

It would be gross exaggeration to call this development a southern migration of chemical operations, although an enthusiastic transplanted Yankee prophesied we should be moving chemical industries bodily to New Orleans which he quite firmly believes will become American chemical headquarters. Warmed doubtless by the unusually severe weather reports from the North this past winter, this optimism may be discounted as heavily as you wish, nevertheless this southern trend is significant.

What has prompted it?

What does it mean?

Where will it end?

No simple answer can be found to these leading questions. The more one knows of these southern chemical developments, the more important they appear and the more complicated their industrial implications.

Below the frost belt

Cheap, available, abundant raw materials are often an obvious motive for southern location. The Gulf coast combination of sulphur, salt, petroleum, and natural gas, with coke, limestone, and phosphate rock available by water transport is unique and intriguing. The South is obviously the natural habitat for cellulose and hydrocarbon developments, both of which promise exceptionally great expansion in the chemical future.

Chemical production below danger of freezing temperature means cheaper installations and more convenient operation.

The climate is not only kind to pipe lines and pumps, it is equitable in many sections as shown by the fact that only 2 days were lost during the 150 days the Dow bromine plant was building. But you cannot generalize on southern climate. One night on the Gulf coast of Texas we slept soundly through a downpour of 4.1 inches; 3 days later, a thousand miles away we were still in Texas where they had seen no drop of rain since September 1933 and where the full year's fall is usually only 0.9 inch more than the single night's rain of the coast region.

The cart before the horse

The meaning of this southward movement is even harder to appraise. Chemical industry is proverbially dependent upon its consuming industries and historically follows them into new territories. The new southern plants on the coast are not shut out by freight costs (thanks to the big water-rail differential) from eastern or northern markets and are at a positive advantage in the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers territory as against competitors on the Atlantic side of the Allegheny Mountains. Reversing the usual order, available chemical supplies may be a helpful incentive to the establishment of chemical-process industries in the South. Certainly a number of wide-awake chambers of commerce are doing plenty of wishful thinking along these lines. Even today the effects upon the local communities of these chemical plants are considerable. At Brunswick, Ga., the Hercules wood-turpentine plant has done what the T.V.A. is planning at Muscle Shoals. They are lighting two cities and selling surplus electrical power to the neighboring countryside. At Grande Ecaille, La., a new town is being built where a swamp was a year ago, and for 10 miles up and down the Delta of the Mississippi new houses are building, old houses are being renovated, new crops of vegetables, and eggs, and milk are finding a profitable market. Carlsbad, N.Mex., hardly appreciates it yet, but it is in a fair way of being transformed from a cattle town and tourists' rendezvous into a mining center. Corpus Christi, with its new deep-water harbor, welcomes the Southern Alkali's new plant as harbinger of an industrial springtime that will sow a rich crop of local prosperity. The Ethyl-Dow plant has a weekly pay roll of something over $3,000—good new money for the landlords, the merchants, and the movies of Wilmington; and the business men of this old

North Carolina port hark back to the war-time days of its shipbuilding activity for an adequate comparison.

Of all recent southern chemical developments this bromine-from-the-sea operation has most firmly caught the public fancy. The publicity hounds at the A.C.S. St. Petersburg meeting smelled a good story in Dr. Stewart's casual reference to gold from seawater in his paper[1] on the Dow process of extracting bromine and the daily papers all over the country wrote glittering headlines. Everywhere throughout the South the first question asked anyone who has actually visited the new Dow plant is about this fabled gold extraction. The facts are plain. In a million parts of sea water are 67 parts of bromine; in a billion parts, 2⅓ parts of gold. A cubic mile of ocean contains $126,000,000 worth of bromine and at new-deal values, $6,125,000 of gold. Handling 37,000,000 gallons a day Dow is extracting 15,000 pounds of bromine. In the same goodly quantity of water there is about $40 worth of gold. I suspect that, as they are handling the water anyway and since Habor has thoroughly researched the gold-extraction processes, it is not unlikely they will at least make some experimental gold recovery—enough, as one of the officers jokingly said, "to make rings for the directors." It would be a clever publicity stunt.

The manager of this new Dow plant is an embarrassingly young engineer transferred from Midland, G. F. Dressel. He has an engaging smile, a real sense of humor, and a very great modesty of his own accomplishments with a very great pride in his plant's performance of 101 percent of projected capacity the second month of operation.

The plant was really built under the direction of A. P. Beutel, our chief of construction, and the process worked out by our chemists under the direction of Leroy C. Stewart, our research director. Of course, we had a big initial advantage in using what is essentially the same process we use in extracting bromine from our Midland brines; but our mother liquor here, the ocean, actually contains less bromine than our effluent after the extraction at our home plant.

Briefly we replace the bromine in the sea water with chlorine, blow it out with air, remove it in absorption towers by a soda ash solution forming sodium bromide and bromate. This bromide-bromate liquor is treated with sulphuric acid to liberate bromine, which is condensed to pure liquid bromine and which in turn is mixed with ethylene gas to form ethylene dibromide, our finished product. We make our ethylene from ethyl alcohol shipped down through the inland waterway from Deepwater, Del., and our ethylene dibromide goes back the same route to Carneys Point, Del., where it is blended with tetra-ethyl-lead for motor fuel by our ally in this enterprise, the Ethyl Gas Corporation. Both our bromine extraction and our bromine-ethylene reaction operate at above 90 percent efficiency.

The alliance Mr. Dressel mentioned is mutually advantageous in the extreme. The motor-blend use having roughly quadrupled the market for bromine, and still growing, Dow, the largest producer, faced the problem of either expanding greatly their present brine operations or tapping a new source of supply. As the brine operation necessitated extensive well expansions and would produce large quantities of the typical Dow products from the midland brine, the company, rather than upset their production balance, naturally preferred to tap a bromine source that was easy and economical to work, unlimited in supply, and would produce no byproducts. The set met these requirements perfectly, and having determined that the bromine content of the Atlantic is virtually constant all along the coast, it remained to find a location where there was no pollution from a large city, no dilution from fresh-water rivers, and where the effluent might be disposed of without fear of such dilution. The long narrow sand bar, outside Wilmington, N.C., behind which the Cape Fear River flows into the sea, offered an ideal combination of these advantages.

Besides the alcohol from Deepwater, the chlorine used comes from the R. & H. division of du Pont, another affiliate of the Ethyl Gas, and it is interesting to note that this chlorine is originally separated from salt at Niagara Falls, in the operation that produces the sodium used in the manufacture of the tetra-ethyl-lead. The sulfuric acid used comes from nearby fertilizer operations in specially designed tank containers below decks on a company-owned vessel, the Ethyl Dow, 116 feet long, with 100 horsepower diesel engine.

At the end of the bar, 8 miles below the bromine plant, commanding the mouth of the Cape Fear River is Fort Fisher, and the Union soldiers who attacked this stronghold during the Civil War, helped this ultra-modern chemical plant not a little. The trenches they dug were the basis of the canal through which 26,000 gallons of sea water now flow every minute into a settling basin, dug out of a great natural depression tens of thousands of years ago when a great shower of meteors bombarded the Carolina coast. All of which bears out Dr. Stewart's statement that "in kidnaping old Father Neptune we had to take every natural and chemical advantage over the old sea king." Production that is slightly over projected capacity the second month of operation is a record that will stand for a long time.

Bromine is not an exclusively southern raw material; but the southern pines, longleaf, slash, and loblolly distinctly are, and in Savannah are stirring new developments in the better chemical utilization of this natural crop, which many of us have forgotten is the foundation of one of our very oldest chemical raw-materials industries. The first year of the first English colony at Jamestown, Va., the first cargo of exports back to England included wood pitch, the crude material of our American naval-stores industries, which even today control the world's markets for turpentine and rosin.

Because of this same pitch, however, it has always been believed that the southern pines were quite unsuited for the manufacture of wood pulp for white or newsprint paper. At Savannah, Dr. Herty has proved that if the southern pine is caught young and treated rough; that is, cut before the heartwood forms, say at from 5 to 7 years, and chipped, digested, and beaten promptly there is no rosin problem at all. He has done it, and W. G. MacNaughton—"Bill" to thousands of friends—thoroughly relishes showing how they are going on and doing it, time and again, day after day, using all sorts of pines and always learning more and more about the best and the quickest and the cheapest way to convert them into good white cellulose.

Technically, one might say, this feat is an accomplished fact. Economically, the transfer of the newsprint paper industry to the South is still an interesting probability.

On the pro side is the fact that in 5 years southern pines are suitable for working while it takes northern spruce from 20 to 30 years to reach this size. When the paper industry becomes more seriously dependent upon reforestation this will doubtless be an unanswerable economic argument. But in the meantime, the industry is firmly planted in substantial buildings, equipped with costly and weighty machinery, close to suitable and still sufficient raw materials, located on clear water streams. I suspect the first southern mill will be either the property of a new company or an addition to or adaptation of some existing kraft paper operation. In the meantime the good work should go forward; for it holds huge industrial possibilities, and some of the many rumors of cellulose for rayon and acetate from southern pines ought to be translated into a fact as plain as the newsprint pulp.

In Savannah, thanks to my confrere, Thomas Gamble, who combines the jobs of publisher of the leading naval-stores business paper and of the mayor of Savannah most skillfully, I enjoyed a conference with a score of leaders among the gum producers who make rosin and turpentine by the ancient and honorable processes of extracting the gum from the trees by chipping, collecting in cups, and then distilling, in distinction to the wood producers, who steam distill pine stumps for the extraction of the rosin and turpentine.

The gum men are wide-awake to their position, which is not altogether an enviable one. Several of their best, old markets (notably paint and varnish) have been sharply curtailed; their output, difficult to control because coming from many small independent stills, requiring little investment, holds remarkably constant; their prices (though up somewhat recently) have declined to half of the 1926 levels. At the same time, the wood-rosin operations have been expanding, and being large, centralized plants, under strict chemical control, are not only producing cleaner, more sharply defined grades, but also a number of interesting, profitable chemical byproducts.

Among the gum producers there is a growing conviction that their future lies in finding chemical markets where, as in the manufacture of the synthetic camphor substitute, their natural produce will become the starting point for various syntheses. This very plainly points to better standardization of their products, and may in turn force a solution of their old problems arising out of the small-unit methods of production.

Early attempts in improving quality

This is not a new thought. As far back as 1925, Alfred Fendig headed up a group which secured control of 180,000 acres of turpentine woods, and under the name of the "Better Rosin Corporation", built a plant, designed by Kloss and Roy (who are now associated with the Hercules wood operation at Brunswick, Ga.), to operate on a continuous-evaporation system. This plan was later changed to an adaptation of the French process of batch cleaning and distilling. This plant burned after a short operating life, but A. S. Carr and Bryan Brown are working a similar set-up. It is said that by their methods they are able to raise the quality of their rosin about three grades, which in the case of the very lowest grades represents an increase in price of 50 cents a barrel, but in the popular, H, I, K classes only represents about 5 cents or 10 cents. The problem sums up as to the ability of a plant costing, say, $25,000 and with additional transporation costs to compete with a plant requiring a tenth of this investment.

Hercules at their wood plant have found quite a distinct solution. They work a different raw material, pine stumps, bought on cleared land and hauled in by rail, where they are chipped, subjected to steam distillation, and refined, with the production of pine oil, as well as the better grades of rosin. Furthermore, they are extracting the various chemical constituents of both turpentine and pine oil, and securing about a hundred different products, a number of which are already finding growing commercial application.

Principal constituents

TURPENTINE

Hydrocarbons:	Boiling point
70-percent a-Pinene	156° C.
2-percent p-Menthane	170° C.
25-percent Dipentene	176° C.

PINE OIL

Alcohols:
8-percent Fenchyl alcohol	203° C.
12-percent Borneol	212° C.
55-percent a-Terpineol	218° C.

This Brunswick plant, its sister ship at Hattiesburg, Miss., and the Newport operation at Pensacola are furnishing the most uncomfortable kind of competition to the gum producers; but they may be well-disguised blessings showing the way out of the ancient and basic difficulties of this industry. Certainly one need not despair of the future. Naval stores have been too long, a too important part of southern economy, and the materials are too cheap and abundant, and too interesting chemically not to have a very definite place in the chemical operations of tomorrow. They may hold a development similar to the coal-tar industry, where a market for intermediates made the beehive oven obsolete. One of the recent innovations is interesting. Since colonial days rosin has been shipped in wooden barrels weighing about 75 pounds. It is now being shipped in steel one-way-shippers, weighing 15 pounds, with a very considerable freight saving.

Quite a different state of affairs exists down in Florida at another famous southern headquarters of chemical raw materials, the phosphate-rock mines. While four-fifths of our domestic production (normally some 4,000,000 long tons) comes from this region, and consumption dropped a half between 1930 and 1932, nevertheless the average price of "land pebble" for these 3 years was $3.24, $3.39, $3.13, bespeaking eloquently the stabilizing effects of the ability of an industry to strike some reasonable balance between output and shipments. Furthermore, since the early autumn of last year there has been a steady increase in the demand for rock, both from domestic and foreign buyers.

Origin of Florida phosphate deposits

The Florida phosphate fields, centered in Polk County, lie at the old coastline of a prehistoric sea and consist of a rich phosphatic marl in a fine clay. The deposits are largely from the organic remains of the gigantic mammals of that period and the teeth of sharks and the bones of whales, 3-toed horses, and mastodons are not uncommonly found. A commercially workable deposit must be rich enough and large enough and must lie under a thin overburden. The beds run from 600 to 800 feet in thickness and the overburden from 16 to 40 feet, and reasonable expectation is held to be 250,000,000 tons of washed rock.

The mining operation is simple. By dragline the overburden is stripped off, powerful streams of water sluice the rock out of its matrix of clay into pits from which the slurry is pumped to great washers where the phosphate pebbles are cleaned and dried. A recent innovation is the use of a flotation process by the I.A.C. at their mines at Mulberry recovers fines lost in the ordinary water-washing process.

Besides the I.A.C., the A.A.C. at Pierce, the American Cyanamid at Brewster, the Southern Phosphate at Ridgewood, the Coronet Phosphate at Coronet, the Phosphate Mining Co. at Nichols, and Swift at Fort Mead are operating in this field. Most of the companies have built their own towns, housing their employees and providing them not only with supplies but also with hospitals, schools, swimming pools, movies, and what not of modern life usually lacking in communities of their size.

Cyanamid's phosphate operations

After a misty, moisty, and very muddy trip through the fields, we came back to the big, bare office from which H. L. Mead directs the Cyanamid's phosphate operations. On the walls are two great maps of Florida and of the company's property; over by the window an enormous, old-fashioned table desk; around the room four stiff, straight, wooden chairs—all as stark and businesslike as a cold chisel. General Manager Mead, who, besides mining and selling his product, is lord mayor of the city, judicial authority, and spiritual adviser to his 1,200 people, and very obviously granddaddy to all the children of the community, gives you a strong impression of the clean-cut, fit, well-bred efficiency of a British cavalry officer of the old school, and then immediately belies appearances by saying that most of his troubles are due to Army men meddling with business affairs.

"We have been working our men 30 hours during the past 3 years, thus holding down production, but at the same time keeping our forces at work and giving all some income. Now we have a pick-up, and they would be only too glad to get the wages of 50 hours a week. We have always worked this way, spreading the work during dull seasons and getting the men extra money during the busier months. But now we must post a 40-hours-only notice, and the men kick at having to share their own legitimate piece of 'cake' with floaters. From our own point of view, we dislike not keeping the faith of our old custom of taking care of our own people and sharing good times and bad with them, and it is moreover a serious question how much we can afford to pad our pay roll with inefficient men. Our way is proved. It is not only the most efficient but it is the fairest to our men. But the Army man has a thoroughly unbusinesslike conception of labor. He has the made-work notion because he must keep the enlisted men busy. He sends two men to a job and hopes to goodness it will take them a day. The industrialist sends one man and hopes it can be done in 4 hours.

"Most of these Florida phosphate operations are little self-contained communities. The companies stand almost in loco parentis. We run a grade school here and a high school with a principal, nine teachers, and an athletic coach, and our students can go straight to Columbia, or Cornell, or any of the big universities, which cannot be said of high schools in rural districts in any State. We are proud of our death rate of 4 percent, for we work hard to keep it lower than the average of communities with the same industrial risks and the equivalent to our Negro population."

One only need drive through the various phosphate towns, with their well-painted houses, their neat lawns, and attractive public squares, to see the difference between living in them and in the ordinary small southern village. It is very easy to believe that good men, black and white alike, eagerly seek jobs with these companies, and that when one of them falls from grace, his wife and children beslege the office with protestations and pledges. That is the best proof I could find that the mutual interests of men and management are skillfully guarded in the phosphate fields.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the pending bill will pass. We will take one more significant step toward relieving the Congress of its legislative power. It may not be long before the country is treated to the amusing spectacle of Republicans dining in memory of Jefferson, and the former adherents of that noted statesman may decorate the table of a Hamiltonian festival with the donkey. Jefferson's idea was that governments are based upon the indvidual, who must have the largest freedom, with the fewest possible restrictions and the least possible legislation. If he lived today, he might foresee full realization of the latter part of his philosophy, for before long there may be no need to legislate. We will have bestowed our last vestige of power upon the Executive. Hamilton believed in a strong central government, and this administration apparently feels that the great Secretary of the Treasury was too conservative in his philosophy. The principles of Jefferson have been so completely shelved by his followers that it might become necessary for the Republicans to campaign to rescue a few vital liberties from an impending dictatorship.

O shade of Jefferson, tell me now
Is this a donkey or a purple cow?

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, we should think not only of our own State but also of our country. Yesterday, while listening to the eloquent Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I heard him speak of his great love for his State, and of his amendment to protect the people of his State. I come from Rhode Island, where I was born, and a State whose welfare I have equally at heart; but, Mr. President, our thoughts must be national, not local. I know no East nor West, no North nor South, but think first of my beloved country, and lament we now no longer can truly sing:

My country 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty.

A good government requires good leadership, and the evidence of good leadership is found in those men who execute the mandates of the leader. This administration has garnered from all corners of the land men with new and abstract theories. College professors and economists have been called from the colleges to an extent that might imperil the very existence of our institutions of higher learning. Employees of the Federal Government have been dropped by thousands, and the patronage machine has evidently been working in violation of the patronage code, if, indeed, there is one, to take care of deserving Democrats and professors.

There is naught so funny in any clown
As a donkey in a cap and gown.

[Laughter.]

During the month of February more than 20,000 new employees were given jobs in the executive civil service, in addition to those who filled vacancies. All semblance of the civil-service merit system was junked in dispensing this patronage. It would be of great interest to deserving members of the Democratic Party to know that in September, 10,017 new jobs were created and filled. In October, 10,314 new employees were hired. In November, 10,925 were hired. In February of this year came the magnificant accomplishment of the greatest patronage machine of all times, when the Federal pay roll was increased by 20,639 in a period of 4 weeks. All these positions were in the executive civil service. I understand that one deserving Democrat waited for 30 days to see the liaison officer appointed, either by the chairman of the Democratic National Committee or the Postmaster General, to handle patronage matters between the departments; and after failing to interview this most important gentleman left Washington, disgusted with the whole business.

O Jefferson, where are you today
When many Democrats are led astray?

[Laughter.]

The cost of government is necessarily reflected in the cost of commodities. Commodities which must absorb high taxes must compete with those from foreign countries; and yet at a time when the people are bearing a tax load greater than at any other time in our history, we propose to reduce tariffs. On March 31 of this year 20,616,000 persons were receiving pay from some branch of the Government. The practice of camouflaging the ordinary Budget of the Government by creating another has reached startling proportions. We propose now to lower prices by reducing the tariff and to increase them by cheapening the dollar. We have one part of the Department of Agriculture buying up pigs for slaughter and another part teaching the farmer how to grow larger and more prolific ones. Many branches of the Government are in absolute contradiction, but nothing that has been done is a greater contradiction to the whole social and economic structure of this country than this bill. The reduction of tariff rates is of great importance, but the most damaging thing of all will be the constant fear hanging over the industrial regions of the United States, of a sudden stroke which might destroy their market, imperil the jobs of thousands of their workers, and render their capital worthless. We can have no prosperity without confidence. There can be no confidence when power of this kind is vested in an administration which vacillates in its policies with the regularity of a pendulum.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, starting a number of years ago, a real effort was made to give some protection to agricultural products. I remember very well when the first farm-relief legislation was proposed. Its sole purpose was to give American producers of farm products the domestic price for the portion consumed in this country. The first legislation of this character contemplated the old export-debenture program. That was entirely dependent upon the tariff. It was for the purpose of trying to maintain our domestic prices for the portion or the percentage of our products consumed by our own people. The next proposal was the McNary-Haugen bill, which had a similar purpose. All this legislation was dependent upon the protective-tariff policy. We had been fighting for a good many years here to try to get agricultural products under the protective-tariff system, and I think we have fairly well succeeded.

We first put a tariff on wheat. We have it now on vegetables; we have it on citrus fruits; and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] yesterday made a statement with reference to the protection that has been given the products of his State. We now have it on live cattle. We had a serious fight to get it on live cattle in the last tariff bill. I remember very well when we attempted to get a tariff on hides, and how it was said a tariff ought not to be put on hides, but a tariff was finally put on hides for the protection of the cattle producers of this country. We increased the tariff on chilled meat, on raw meat, on poultry products, on eggs, on fresh milk, all for the purpose of giving the domestic market to the producers of our own products in our own States without interference from imports.

This movement has been going on for a number of years, but now we find that we are considering a measure which will upset the whole program. Why? Because if we ever delegate the authority proposed to be delegated by the pending bill the first interest to be affected will be agriculture. I wish to take a little time to discuss that phase of the subject for a few minutes.

First, I want to consider the suggestions of the various officials who had to do with the presentation of this bill and the reasons for it to the various committees. Secretary Wallace, before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, at page 45 of the hearings, said:

Speaking purely from the standpoint of agriculture, I wish to say it is exceedingly desirable that purchasing power, foreign purchasing power, for our agricultural surplus be restored; and if, in the judgment of Congress, it cannot be restored, then we should like to know it, so that we can nerve ourselves up to continuing with the present exceedingly difficult job of retiring surplus acres.

I believe recent developments and recent events have demonstrated that we do not need to retire any surplus acreage. The Lord has taken a hand in the matter. It is my understanding that now an order is about to be issued by the administration canceling all restrictions with reference to the production of corn on western acreage, for the reason, it is said, that so much of the crop has been destroyed by drought that the farmers have to put all their acreage into such crops as now may be planted in order to be assured of sufficient feed for their livestock.

In addition to that, I find the Department proceeding to purchase thousands, yes, two or three million head of cattle, in order to save them in drought areas on account of the shortage in feed and lack of water. In other words, we find, after we have this splendid scheme all arranged, there is no necessity for it by reason of the fact that conditions have changed from what they were a little while ago.

Quoting further from Mr. Wallace, at page 48 of the hearings, he said:

The chairman has suggested that the situation today is materially different from what it was in those lovely days previous to 1914, and I should like to call the attention of the Congressman [Mr. BACHARACH] to the fact that after the war closed, there was a certain inability to perceive the nature of the post-war situation, and this inability characterized the actions of Congress during the period, especially from 1921 to 1933.

I want our good brethren on the other side of the aisle, who were serving here from 1921 to 1933, to get this point:

This inability characterized the actions of Congress during the period, especially from 1921 to 1933, and that inability to understand the nature of what had happened has been largely responsible for our present situation.

In other words, it is a direct indictment that the Government, the Congress, the legislative authority of the country, failed to comprehend the situation then confronting us, and failed to do the things that should have been done in order to bring about what Mr. Wallace calls a condition which would be ideal under the "brain trust" and under the present regime of socialization or social planning or whatever it may be called.

I continue to quote from Mr. Wallace:

I should like to say the outstanding thing that was not recognized by the Congress, and perhaps cannot be recognized by the Congress, because of the way in which it is constituted, is the fact we had suddenly become a creditor Nation and that, therefore, a radical change in our tariff policy was essential.

Let me suggest that we were becoming a creditor nation. Why? Because we loaned money to foreign countries, by which we created a market for materials manufactured by industries largely, and, therefore, we were largely responsible by that program for an overexpansion, the results of which we will not overcome for years and years. One of the prime motives behind the pending bill is the fact that the General Motors Co., the International Harvester Co., and various similar organizations, which no longer are satisfied with the domestic market, are insistent that they have a world market. They are going to secure that market if they can, regardless of its effect on the domestic market.

I think Congress fully realizes this condition. I think it is a fact that we have been heading into this condition, not because of Congress, but because of a desire on the part of certain interests in the country to extend their markets and to extend their credits and to make banking profits, and that is the underlying principle in the whole program.

Therefore, I want to go a little further and quote a little more from Mr. Wallace. Before the Senate Committee on Finance he said, at page 27 of the hearings:

Because of that situation we have felt it essential in the Department of Agriculture to engage in many direct activities, many crop-production programs, which most men would feel under any ordinary conditions to be highly artificial in nature and unwarranted.

The situation, to my mind, is of such extreme seriousness that it should not be considered from the standpoint of partisan politics. On the contrary, it would seem to me that the right-thinking men in both parties should try to discover that policy having to do with the tariff and with the agricultural control, if you please, that may be necessary, pending the building up of a sufficient volume of foreign purchasing power. That policy should be of such a broad-gaged nature that it could be continued in its broad outlines across the administrations.

In other words, such a policy should be carried into effect not only by this administration but also by those which are to follow.

In order that we may understand the situation it seems to me we should look at the practical application of this matter. I know of no one who makes a more thorough study of the agricultural interest of the country than the several farm organizations of the United States. Under date of April 8, 1934, according to Clarence L. Linz, in the New York Journal of Commerce, the representatives of those organizations held a meeting here. That meeting was for the purpose of determining how and wherein agricultural products would be affected by such a foreign tariff policy as is now proposed. Those leaders were intensely concerned. Why? If the farmer is not able to pay his adjustment fees or membership fees, they can no longer have any organization, and in a little while some of these men would be looking for other jobs. They were meeting in Washington for the purpose of determining how the program would affect the farming interests of the country. From the first report I quote as follows from the article of Mr. Linz under date of April 8:

Alarmed at the attitude of the administration toward their demands for complete protection for domestic oils, fats, sugar, and all other agricultural products, representatives of organized agriculture plan to meet here April 11 to voice their protests and to consider generally the administration's new foreign-trade policies.

Further on the article reads:

The leaders have scanned the list of "dutiable articles more or less noncompetitive and with respect to which foreign countries possess advantages" prepared by the Tariff Commission as a guide to the selection of commodities considered suitable for rate reduction.

Get that: "Considered suitable for rate reduction"!

Out of the several hundred commodities contained in this list, in his appearance before the House Ways and Means Committee, Tariff Commission Chairman O'Brien selected a group of representative articles, among which were the following agricultural products: Long-staple cotton—

It seems to me I can remember that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in the discussion of the late tariff bill, said there must be a tariff on long-staple cotton or there would be no tariff bill. That is item no. 1.

Cane and beet sugar—

That is of interest to the Senators from Louisiana, to the Senators from Michigan, to the Senators from Utah, and to the Senators from Minnesota, as well as to those of us representing the State of Iowa.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wonder if the Senator from Iowa thinks that the Senator from Mississippi may think he is in the same position as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] with reference to wool—that they are not going to touch his long-staple cotton?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to have the authority of the Senator from Wyoming for the letter he has written to his constituents in which he practically pledges that wool is going to be exempted. I read the letter inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. But in that letter the Senator from Wyoming did not say what his authority was. I should like to know whether it was a telephone conversation, whether it was a letter signed by the Secretary of State, whether it was an Executive promise, or what kind of promises are being made with reference to which items will be in and which items will be out when the bill shall be passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that the Senator should not place too much credence in that letter because, among other things, the letter will show he quoted Secretary Hull as promising public hearings ahead of any rate changes, whereas, when we asked for public hearings to be provided textually in the provisions of the bill, the recipient of the letter voted against it.

Mr. DICKINSON. This next item is soybeans. The next items are oil cake, oil-cake meal, and then comes cheese. I wonder what the Senators from Wisconsin and the Senators from Minnesota and the Senators from New York think about that? I am sorry the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has just left the Chamber. I wanted him to be here in order that I might ask him about cheese, which is being produced in the State of New York. This is one of the items the Tariff Commission said could be eliminated from protection, and yet we have been working for at least 15 years to get a proper protective tariff on dairy products and on fresh milk.

Crin vegetal, carpet wool, cigarettes, wrapper and filler tobacco, edible olive oil, olives, grapes, limes, peaches, beans, peas, tomatoes, cucumbers—

I wonder what the Senators from Florida will say with reference to eliminating the vegetable schedule as it now exists for the protection of the people who are producing vegetables in Florida against the importations from Bermuda. I wonder what the Senators from Texas will say when it is shown that there is danger of their protection being reduced so that the Mexican producers across the Rio Grande can bring in their vegetables to compete in the vegetable markets with the products of Texas. That applies to all the various products in the southern and the southeastern section.

Eggplant, flax, hides—

I wonder what the Senators from North Dakota have to say as to whether or not flax ought to be one of the products on which there shall be a reduction in the tariff.

The next item is hides. We have been working for a tariff on hides for a great many years. The number of cattle per farm in the livestock-production area of this country has been diminishing for years, and one of the reasons for it is that the production of livestock has not been profitable. Here is one item that we tried to get in under the protective tariff, to prevent competition from cheap land areas such as those of Canada and Mexico; and now we find hides listed as one of the items that ought to be eliminated or the tariff reduced.

Eggs—

The poultry production of this country is worth a great deal more than the wheat production; it is worth practically as much as the cotton production, and worth practically as much as the corn production; and yet we find eggs listed here by the Tariff Commission as one of the items that ought to be subject to this kind of regulation.

Other commodities which he suggested were dyes—

I wonder what the chemical interests of the country think about that—stains, and colors, menthol, cosmetics, and toilet preparations, china, and porcelain ware.

There we have the great earthenware schedule involved. Well do I remember, in a tariff debate in Sioux City, when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who was talking, said he would specify the schedules that ought to be reduced, and the first one he named was the earthenware schedule, all along the line.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Is the Senator speaking of pottery and china?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I was talking yesterday to Mr. Duffy, the president of the union of workers in those industries. It is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Duffy tells me that in normal times the pottery and china industries of America employed 25,000 persons, but that today they are employing less than 7,000, owing to the fact that their market has been taken largely by Japan and European nations.

Mr. DICKINSON. In other words, if the provisions of this bill are to be carried out and the suggestions of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are to be adopted as to earthenware, it simply means that the earthenware industry of this country will be eliminated. Can the Senator from West Virgina tell me the total number of people who are employed and the total investment in earthenware production?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa further yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am told that 25,000 persons are dependent solely upon the pottery industry of America. About 17,000, I may say to the distinguished Senator, are employed ordinarily in the Ohio section and the West Virginia section—the northern panhandle of my State.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my understanding that earthenware is produced from the city of Pittsburgh clear down the Ohio Valley on both sides—on the West Virginia side and on the Ohio side—to a point below Cincinnati, and that it is the outstanding product of that particular area of this country.

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say to the distinguished Senator that it is one of the outstanding products. I think the production does not quite extend to Cincinnati, however; but it is a very important industry, and the largest pottery and china plant in the world is located in the northern panhandle of West Virginia.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Senator.

The next items mentioned are—

Graphite, optical instruments, stained and painted glass windows, marble in blocks, manganese, and tungsten ores, woven wire cloth.

I also remember that in the debate to which I have referred, woven wire cloth was mentioned as one of the items on which there ought to be a reduction in tariff; and yet, as I understand the matter, the woven wire cloth industry is running at a very small percentage of capacity, and a great many of its workers have had only about 1 day's employment per week .

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa further yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I understand that had it not been for the action of the Tariff Commission, the woven wire cloth industry would not be in existence at all today. An increased tariff rate on woven wire cloth was necessary after the passage of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Senator.

The next items are—

Pocket cutlery, razors, surgical instruments, shotguns, watch movements, cotton handkerchiefs—

And here I desire to read something concerning cotton handkerchiefs. I know nothing about the industry; but here is a letter from the Acheson-Harden Co. of New York. The letter is dated May 24, 1934. It is signed by the Acheson-Harden Co. The second paragraph of the letter is as follows:

This serious menace of cheap handkerchiefs coming into this country from Japan is causing our industry a great deal of concern, and is not helping us to aid the Government in its recovery program. In fact, it is operating quite to the contrary. It is also causing us to be very cautious about placing forward commitments for our raw materials.

In this correspondence I find a statement of fact that this organization gave to a person who was accumulating evidence with reference to the production of these particular articles. I read from this statement, which is dated May 11, 1934:

The handkerchief industry is suffering severely at the present time from competition on cheap cotton handkerchiefs coming into this country from Japan.

Our industry is one of considerable size, employing many thousands of workers.

While this competition from Japan is directly affecting all domestic handkerchief manufacturers in the cheaper field of cotton handkerchiefs, it is indirectly affecting many other industries furnishing the handkerchief industry with raw material and other supplies. I will mention below a few of the types of supplies to the handkerchief business which are being indirectly affected by this Japanese competition:

Spinning and weaving mills furnishing cotton cloth to the industry.

Bleaching and printing mills engaged in printing and bleaching the cotton cloth.

Ribbon manufacturers supplying ribbon with which the handkerchiefs are tied.

Box manufacturers supplying paper boxes to the industry.

Thread manufacturers supplying thread by which the handkerchiefs are stitched, and many others too numerous to mention here.

For your information, I wish to give you below some of the high spots in reference to this Japanese competition.

This correspondence shows that when we enter into a negotiation with a country such as I have suggested, we will not only be affecting the production of cotton handkerchiefs, but we will also be affecting the concerns which are interested in the production of all the other commodities that go into the production of handkerchiefs.

The following completes the list of articles as considered by these farm organizations:

Silk fabrics, straw hats, brooms, dolls and toys, machine-made laces, women's and children's gloves, sponges, crayons, and cameras.

A little bit later, and under date of April 13, I find another article by Clarence L. Linz from which I desire to read. It tells about the meeting of these farm organizations and their consideration of this question for days and days; and then I desire to read their conclusion at the end of the meeting:

After debating the matter for 2 days, officials of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, Farmers' National Grain Corporation, National Cooperative Council, and the National Farm Editors' Association stopped short of adopting a resolution commending the President for the helpful consideration he had given agriculture and demanding outright exemption for the products of that industry from all tariff bargaining.

They did not adopt the resolution, but the whole sentiment of the meeting was that they be exempted from the negotiations of the President in connection with tariff schedules and trade agreements with the rest of the countries of the world. That shows the trend of these particular organizations.

Continuing to quote:

Unconvinced by oral promises from administration leaders—

And there comes in the letter that has been read here. It seems that some promises have been going around executive circles here that some of these commodities shall be exempt. I want the commodities of my State exempted, and that is the reason why I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Unconvinced by oral promises from administration leaders that it is not the intention to disturb agricultural products in their present protected status, the farmers' representatives reviewed the statements made by Government officials in their various discussions and writings on the subject.

The opposition of the State and War Departments to the proposed processing taxes upon vegetable and fish oils, the former coming largely from the Philippine Islands, was reviewed. It was asserted by some of the speakers, it is said, that if the President is given the powers proposed for him in the pending tariff bill, despite denials to the contrary, he would have authority to suspend the tax and he would be upheld in any court action because the real intent of the tax is to limit imports for the benefit of the domestic dairy cattle and cottonseed-oil industries.

The attitude of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in respect to the demands of the sugar-beet and beet-sugar industries for a guaranteed share of the domestic market, was brought forward as another example of how the administration views sections of agriculture.

I next quote from the Journal of Commerce under date of April 17:

The national agricultural conference, comprised of officers and directors of leading agricultural organizations of the country completed 5 days of deliberation upon the Roosevelt tariff policies and adjourned without being able to come to an agreement as to its desirability.

Although extremely friendly to the idea of reciprocal trade agreements with foreign nations if they provide markets for agricultural surpluses, representatives of organized farmers were apprehensive on the program to give the President the broad powers he has asked of Congress for manipulation of the tariff laws of the United States.

* * * * *

"Regardless of how we balance advantages and disadvantages, the fact remains that the foreign market is not so desirable as a home market either for capital or for labor. After all, our problem is that of extending home-consuming power in view of the constant losses which our producers of cotton, wheat, lumber, and other products have suffered and will increasingly suffer in the world markets by reason of the growing competition of other nations."

A flood of amendments have made their appearance in the Senate. Senator VANDENBERG (Republican, Michigan) proposes that there shall be exempted from the proposed tariff-bargaining privileges all basic commodities covered by the Agricultural Adjustment Act and all commodities covered by codes under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. President, that shows the conclusion of the agricultural organizations with reference to what they thought should be done as to this important matter now pending before the Senate.

I desire to go a little further and consider what is being proposed. In today's copy of the Daily News, in an article by Ruth Finney, I find the following:

According to present indications, tariff bargaining is to assume the major place in the recovery program this summer that N.R.A. occupied last year.

If it is going to make the record N.R.A. made, God pity the interests of this country involved in this important piece of legislation.

The administration hopes it will put an unspecified but large number of men to work in factories whose products will be sold abroad, and will prove helpful to agriculture.

First trade bargains will be made with Latin American countries.

What do the Latin American countries produce? I shall show in a few moments what the principal exports of the Latin American countries are. I continue the quotation:

Changes in foreign policy announced within the last few days removed the final barriers standing in their way. Monetary policies of the past 6 months apparently have been shaping toward this end.

Certainly; get a dollar that is cheap enough, so that the other fellow does not know what it is worth, and you are always safe in dickering with him. I continue to quote:

Last July President Roosevelt picked five countries and proposed to them that exploratory studies be undertaken to see if negotiation of trade agreements would be possible.

I should like to know how that proposal was made. How does it happen that we are negotiating with other countries long before there is any prospect of this tariff policy's being adopted?

I continue to read from this article in the Daily News:

The five were Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Portugal, and Sweden. All responded favorably.

We have heard a great deal about the Colombian Treaty. I should like to know whether the other countries mentioned are involved in the same treaty. I do not know why this information should not be available to the Senate, so that we might be permitted to know whether or not the products of our respective States are to be bargained away under some sort of secret agreement such as is suggested here.

Later conversations were begun with half a dozen other Latin American countries.

Last December the United States actually negotiated a new commercial treaty with Colombia, a first step which was possible because practically all products sent to this country from Colombia are on the free list and no tariff changes of the sort the new bill will authorize were necessary.

Coffee is the biggest item in our trade with Colombia, and it comes free. A press statement issued at the time the treaty was signed indicated that the United States has promised—

Promises were made before any authority was given—to continue giving coffee free entry in return for tariff reductions on our products. Heretofore Colombia has been levying duties against all principal exports from this country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. If, in order to get concessions from these countries, we propose not to impose a tariff on coffee for 3 years, does that mean that the policy of the Government, if we do not get what we want, is to be changed, and we are to tax all the people who drink coffee merely because we demand that some other country give us some concession which they themselves do not want to give? Who is to be benefited by that?

Mr. DICKINSON. Nobody. In other words, what we are asked to do is to impose a penalty on every coffee drinker, in order to obtain a market in the South American country, which amounts to only a few million dollars, for a limited number of products. But Colombia is not so short-sighted that she will be convinced for a moment that there is any danger of America's putting a tariff on coffee. We have been going along for all these years, and never has it even been suggested that we were considering putting a tariff on the importation of coffee into this country.

Mr. FESS. There will not be any such tariff. There is not a man, woman, or child who would agree to it today.

Mr. DICKINSON. What kind of a bargain could the representatives of our Government, including the Assistant Secretary of State, possibly drive with Colombia, when Colombia knows that this condition exists, and is going to continue to exist? It is an insult to the intelligence of the representatives of that foreign country.

I continue to quote:

Brazil, Portugal, and Sweden apparently were selected for first bargaining conversations because most of their products, likewise, now come into this country free.

What particular bargain can we drive with a country which has had its products imported into this country free of duty, when there is no possible expectation that any tariff is proposed or will be proposed on their particular line of importations?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, it would appear that our keeping coffee on the free list, according to this idea, has been a benefit to the other countries, instead of a benefit to the American people. We have never put a tariff on commodities such as coffee, tea, and spices, things we cannot produce, because it would be that much of a tax upon the necessities of our people.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. We refrain from imposing a tax, not because we favor the other people, but because we favor our own people.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct. I read further from the article by Ruth Finney:

Recently the State Department sent the White House a detailed report on trade bargaining, presumably summarizing progress already made and preparing the way for final completion of agreements.

Let us take up some of these countries. I will first turn to Argentina. Under the item of domestic exports, I find we have no figures later than 1932.

The first item of export is chilled beef, $32,000,000 worth. What trade relations is it desired that we make with Argentina so that we can import chilled beef into this country in competition with the meat producers of this country?

The second item is wool. We import some wool. Are we to make a trade agreement relating to wool, when we can produce more wool in this country than we use? That is why the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] wants to have wool exempted, so that it will not be subjected to any agreement made under the provisions of the bill.

The next item is wheat. I wonder how many people think we ought to have keener competition in the production of wheat, when the carry-over of last year was some 300,000,000 bushels?

The next item is corn. I know something about the corn production of this country, and I want to show that we need no further competition, so far as corn is concerned. Yet these are the principal commodities produced in Argentina for export. But it is said that in order to increase our foreign trade, in order to sell agricultural products, we should negotiate a secret trade agreement with this particular country, which is producing for export, in major products, the very commodities which are produced for export in this country of ours.

The next country is Brazil. We have just discussed the item of coffee, which is the major export product of Brazil.

The next one is cocoa beans. We do not produce cocoa beans. That is a bean, however, from which oil is produced. It is subject to many of the conditions we tried to impose under the vegetable-oil provision of the Philippine bill.

The next item is chilled meats, and that is the very item about which I have been objecting, because all over the State of Iowa this past year one could go into practically any grocery store and buy chilled canned meats produced in Paraguay, Uruguay, Brazil, Argentina, and other South American countries.

Why should the meat producers of the United States be subjected to that type of competition, when as a matter of fact we have the capacity in this country not only to produce all the meat we can consume but also to produce a surplus, if opportunity were given and proper encouragement afforded?

So what do we expect to gain by extending our trade relations on a negotiation basis with a country in South America which produces for export the same commodities we produce?

Next I will turn to Colombia. What is the principal export of Colombia? Coffee. In this case exactly the same conditions apply as we have been talking about in relation to Brazil. The next item is mineral products. There we have an exactly similar condition. Next is petroleum. I wonder if the oil-producing organizations of this country desire additional competition; I wonder if they want trade relations so modified with Colombia that they will have keener competition in the production of oil.

Next I will take Denmark. I find that the general exports from Denmark are pork and bacon, meats of different kinds, dairy products, including butter. I wonder how many of those interested in dairy products and meat products think we ought to have negotiations with that country whereby it will be made easier for them to sell their export products in America.

These are the types of commodities which are produced in surplus. Therefore I say that this program is impractical and unworkable. Why? Because the great majority of the countries with which we expect to deal export in surplus the very products which we ourselves produce in surplus. I do not believe it will be possible under those circumstances to make a trade agreement which will be other than detrimental to the interests of our own country. That is a phase of this question to which I think we ought to give consideration.

I note that the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] provides that the provisions of this bill with respect to any agricultural or horticultural product, include the commercial articles or materials made therefrom by usual first processings.

I believe that leather would be included within the terms of that amendment and that if agricultural products and horticultural products are exempted leather would be exempted. If leather would be exempted, I am wondering whether the State of Massachusetts, the State of New York, the State of New Jersey, and the State of Delaware would not be intensely interested in this amendment. I am wondering whether any State where hides are processed into leather—because the hide is an original article from the animal—will not be interested. The production of leather is a first process, and, therefore, leather clearly would come within the provisions of this exemption.

I believe we should have some clear understanding with reference to these various items, and for that reason I suggest that leather should be one of the products we should think about when we vote on this bill.

This bill is very far-reaching. The bill will have an effect to discourage business everywhere. It will create a lack of confidence. It will create an element of uncertainty. People will not know what their commitments for the morrow can be.

In order to suggest the reaction, I quote from an address by Mr. Monro on the American tariff, delivered in New York on January 21, 1932, in which he said:

> The most persistent of these attacks centers around the alleged effect of the tariff on our foreign trade. Very rarely is any mention made of the extent to which our tariff has prevented a complete collapse of American business and industry.
> In the first place, according to the census data compiled by the Department of Commerce, our export trade amounts to between 8 and 10 percent of our total annual production. The corollary of this is that over 90 percent of the goods we annually produce are sold right here in this country to the American people. To propose or even suggest that we deliberately adopt a policy which will sacrifice to a greater or lesser extent our 90-percent domestic market in favor of a nebulous possible gain in our 10-percent foreign market is to me short-sighted in the extreme.

I quote further from another article by the same writer, dated January 18, 1934, in which he says:

> Higher prices for American-made products are a direct invitation to increased importations of competitive foreign-made products. In other words, to the extent that the national recovery program is successful, it will raise the whole level of costs and prices in this country still higher above what these are in foreign countries. To the extent that this happens, to that extent must industries secure increased tariff protection, limited, however, as previously stated, at least to the difference in the costs of production in this country and abroad.

In other words, this whole program of tariff reduction and exploitation and planning for expansion of foreign trade is absolutely contradictory to the very policy proposed in the National Recovery Act, upon which this administration depended for the recovery of this country during the past year.

Furthermore, the proposed tariff policy goes to the extent of making an economic dictator of the Chief Executive. In that connection, I desire to read a short paragraph from a distinguished Democrat. This is an address by Senator WILLIAM H. KING, Democrat, of Utah, given over the radio October 25, 1931, and this is what he said in that address:

> In periods of economic depression, as in periods of war, the forms of government, if not their foundations, are challenged. We are now confronted with demands from all parts of the land for legislation and the execution of policies which are at variance with democratic institutions and our form of government. Fantastic and visionary schemes and plans are urged with fanatical zeal. Communistic, socialistic, and paternalistic programs are presented and demand made that they be carried into execution. It matters not that many of these suggestions ignore individual rights and the duties and responsibilities of the States, nor that they are in contravention of positive inhibitions in the Federal Constitution. The swirling waters of unrest and discontent are beating against the foundations upon which rest democratic institutions, the indefeasible rights of individuals, and the sovereign rights of States.
> Unfortunately we are cursed with a Federal bureaucracy more powerful, more penetrating, more exasperating than that which afflicts any country on earth. Nearly a million Federal employees operate this bureaucratic machine which oppresses the people, limits individual rights, interferes with local self-government, impinges upon the rights of the States, and, paradoxical as it may seem, while aggrandizing the Federal Government and aiding in its usurpatory activities, it sows the seeds of socialism.

Remember, Senators, that statement was made in 1931. If that was true then, what must be the views of the distinguished Senator from Utah with reference to what has happened since March 4, 1933?

It seems to me that the distinguished Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], summed up under date of June 9, 1933, what will happen under this bill very conclusively, and I now read his conclusions:

In conclusion, I wish to summarize my objections to the Democratic reciprocity tariff proposal as follows:

First. It contemplates an unconstitutional delegation of the power of Congress to lay and collect duties and imposts and to regulate commerce with foreign countries.

Second. It would destroy the principle of the protective tariff and substitute a competitive tariff or tariff for revenue, which can only result in a flooding of the domestic market with cheap foreign goods with which domestic producers cannot compete.

It seems to me that what will happen under this tariff bill has been shown here not only by the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee that the whole purpose was to reduce tariffs, but it has also been shown by the testimony and by the questioning of the distinguished Representative DICKINSON, of Missouri, in the Ways and Means Committee, where he showed that the principal intent of this bill was reduction of tariffs.

I continue to quote:

Third. The granting of reciprocal concessions to foreign countries would result in destroying one domestic industry in an attempt to benefit another.

Fourth. The reduction of our own tariff rates would not insure greater foreign purchases from us, because foreign countries will buy in the cheapest market, no matter how much of their goods we import.

Are we going to tie up a reduction of rates with a reciprocal trade agreement whereby we try to coerce the other country into trading with us? That is not practical. Our country cannot survive under a policy of that kind for the reason that there are now 20 or 25 countries which want to deal with us. Most of them are not so insistent upon what we can sell them as they are insistent upon what they can sell to us. Our markets are wanted by the countries of the world. Our markets are what the countries of the world seek. Our markets are at stake in all these negotiations. Therefore, we will have representatives of the various countries of the world centering on our representatives for the purpose of seeing how much of our markets they can secure rather than how much of our goods they will be compelled to buy.

I continue to quote:

Fifth. In order to obtain greater foreign markets, we must meet world prices. To do this we would have to reduce production costs to world levels, which would involve lower wages to labor and longer hours of employment.

Sixth. The purpose of the bill is inconsistent with the present policy to increase wage levels, because without tariff protection our higher standard of living cannot be maintained in competition with the cheap labor of Europe and the Orient.

Seventh. Buying more goods abroad will not help to reopen our own factories producing the same merchandise.

Eighth. The importance of our foreign trade has been overemphasized, since our exports even in normal times only amount to about one-tenth the value of our domestic production.

Ninth. What this country needs is more purchasing power, and this cannot be brought about by denying American workmen and producers the right to produce the goods consumed in the home market.

Will it be contended that an increase in quantity of imports in 10 months over the same period of the preceding year of 33⅓ percent is low?

Mr. President, the compilations of the Department of Commerce, table 16 of the Summary of the United States Trade with the World, 1933, shows that while the volume of imports had fallen to an index of 79 in 1932, that they had increased in 1933 to an index of 86.

The same Department also shows that while the index of imports for the first 3 months of 1933 was at 73 our imports had so increased that for the 3-month period of 1934 the index had reached 87. A compilation of our imports for the first 9 months of the present fiscal year, the last figures available, show that the import index has now reached 92, or only 8 points below normal.

At this point, Mr. President, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks two tables showing our imports and our exports for the 10-month periods, July 1, 1932, to April 30, 1933, and July 1, 1933, to April 30, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

Total exports by months, 1932, 1933, 1934

	1933	1932	Increase (+) or decrease (−)
			Amount	Percent
July	$144,109,000	$106,831,000		+34.9
August	131,472,000	108,600,000		+21.1
September	160,119,000	132,037,000		+21.3
Total, 3 months	435,700,000	347,468,000	+$88,232,000	+25.4
October	193,070,000	153,089,000		+26.1
November	184,256,000	138,534,000		+32.7
December	192,619,000	131,613,000		+46.4
Total, 3 months	569,945,000	423,536,000	+146,409,000	+34.6

	1934	1933	Increase (+) or decrease (−)
			Amount	Percent
January	$172,224,000	$120,589,000		+42.8
February	162,805,000	101,515,000		+60.3
March	190,000,000	108,015,000		+75.9
Total, 3 months	525,029,000	330,119,000	+$194,910,000	+59.0
April	179,444,000	105,217,000		+70.5
May		114,203,000
June		119,791,000
Total, 3 months		339,211,000

Increase first 10 months, $503,778,000, or 41.8 percent.

Total imports by months, 1932, 1933, 1934

[General imports]

	1933	1932	Increase (+) or decrease (−)
			Amount	Percent
July	$142,980,000	$79,421,000		+80.0
August	154,916,000	91,102,000		+70.0
September	146,641,000	98,411,000		+49.0
Total, 3 months	444,537,000	268,934,000	+$175,603,000	+65.3
October	150,857,000	105,499,000		+43.0
November	128,505,000	104,468,000		+23.0
December	133,217,000	97,087,000		+37.2
Total, 3 months	412,579,000	307,054,000	+105,525,000	+34.4

	1934	1933	Increase (+) or decrease (−)
			Amount	Percent
January	$135,513,000	$96,006,000		+41.1
February	132,656,000	83,748,000		+58.4
March	158,000,000	94,860,000		+66.5
Total, 3 months	426,169,000	274,614,000	+$151,555,000	+55.2
April	146,517,000	88,412,000		+65.7
May		106,869,000
June		122,497,000
Total, 3 months		317,778,000

Increase first 10 months, $490,788,000, or 52.3 percent.

Mr. DICKINSON. These tables, Mr. President, show that our imports have increased $490,788,000, or 52.3 percent. During the same period our exports have increased $503,788,000, or 41.8 percent.

During this 10-month period, which includes the last figures available, our foreign trade increased $994,566,000, or almost a steady increase of $100,000,000 each month.

This increase in foreign trade is not due to any legislative enactment or to any action on the part of the present Chief Executive.

These figures, showing an increase in our foreign trade of $100,000,000 per month, indicate that what we need is not tariff-rate reductions, which instill fear and will result in greater unemployment, but a substantial improvement in our domestic trade.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. While our imports have increased to the point the Senator has just indicated, our home trade has increased only 5 percent. Is not that true?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. President, it is my hope that the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will prevail. I believe there is no protection whatsoever for agriculture in the proposed legislation. There is protection in exempting all agricultural products, and agricultural products through the first processing, from the provisions of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9322) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. BACHARACH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 41, 86, 92, and 118 to the said bill, and concurred thereon, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 39 to the bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MONETARY USE AND ACQUISITION OF SILVER

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that House bill 9745 may be read twice and lie on the table.

The bill (H.R. 9745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably the bill (S. 3533) to amend the act entitled "An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its powers and purposes", approved February 25, 1929, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand there will be no discussion on the bill?

Mr. NORBECK. If there shall be any debate I will withdraw the request. I merely desire to make a brief statement explanatory of the bill.

The bill would correct a complication growing out of the death of Calvin Coolidge, who passed on before the inscription for the entablature was completed. The present law names him as the author. The bill does not change the authorization of $250,000 carried in the present law. It removes the requirement of immediately matching Federal funds. It will make immediately available the appropriation of about $50,000 already made, which, together with balance on hand, will be sufficient to complete the figure of Thomas Jefferson on the mountain.

The Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission are firmly of the opinion that they can raise additional funds by private subscription if given a little more time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its powers and purposes", approved February 25, 1929, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If by reason of death, disability, or other cause, any individual to whom functions are assigned under this section has been or shall be rendered unable to perform such functions, the Commission is authorized to designate or employ such other person as it deems competent to perform such functions."

SEC. 2. Section 5 of such act of February 25, 1929, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of not to exceed $250,000 for the purpose of defraying the cost of such memorial and landscaping. Such sums as may be appropriated pursuant to this act shall be advanced to the treasurer of said Commission from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury upon requisition of the executive committee provided for by this act."

SEC. 3. Any funds heretofore made available for expenditure under the provisions of such act of February 25, 1929, are hereby made available for expenditure under such act as amended by this act.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the securities exchange bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will there be any discussion involved?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think not. I know of no opposition. I think we can dispose of it in a very few minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will ask unanimous consent instead of moving to proceed to its consideration, so as not to displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). It will not displace the unfinished business if taken up by motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon taking up the conference report now. I should like to have an opportunity to go over the report. I have not had an opportunity yet to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been on the desks of Senators since yesterday. It was reported yesterday, and the report was printed at length in yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not a very long time to consider it.

Mr. FLETCHER. We have not a very long time to be here, either. The conference report has to be acted on in the Senate before it can be acted on in the House. It is a unanimous report of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to consider the report is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

(For conference report, see RECORD of Wednesday, May 30, 1934, pp. 9930–9942.)

Mr. FLETCHER. I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection——

Mr. HASTINGS. I object, Mr. President, until I have an opportunity to read the report.

May I inquire of the Senator from Florida whether he does not intend to make any explanation to the Senate of what was agreed upon and why certain amendments were made?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to making any explanation or answering any questions about the report. I do not wish to consume time unnecessarily by reviewing the whole report. It is a pretty extensive report. I can, I think, satisfy the Senate very briefly as to the principal features dealt with by the conferees, and where the principal changes were made in the Senate bill and in the House bill. I do not desire to put myself in the position of understanding or overstating anything, because I do not wish to give an opportunity for some malicious, unscrupulous propagandist to say that I deceived the Senate about something.

The principal features are these:

The Senate receded from its amendment as to section 2, which was the provision with reference to the purpose and object of the bill, and adopted the House provision as to that section.

The House receded from its disagreement to the Senate provision which establishes an independent commission of five, and the Senate provision on that subject was agreed to.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to the House provision with reference to margin requirements, and we agreed to the House provision on that subject, perhaps with an amendment; but, at all events, the report leaves the control of margins as fixed in the House bill and leaves the control of credits in the Federal Reserve Board.

Those were the main features, as I think the Senator will agree. As to some other amendments, the House receded with an amendment here and there through the bill; but not as to very vital or essential provisions.

The House receded from its disagreement to the provision of the Senate bill which transfers to the Commission the administration of the Securities Act, and puts in the hands of the Commission both the administration of this measure and the administration of the Securities Act.

The Senate receded from the provision as to the salaries of the Commissioners. The Senate bill fixed their salaries at $12,000, and the House suggested $10,000; and we agreed on salaries of $10,000.

I think there were some other not so very important provisions—for instance, with reference to the statute of limitations. The bill now provides that any suit for damages brought under the sections of the bill with reference to misleading or false statements as to registration or application must be brought within 1 year after discovery of the facts constituting the cause of action and within 3 years after the cause of action accrued, instead of within 10 years and 5 years, respectively, as I think the other provisions were.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida that one of the important changes made in the bill was as to the question raised particularly by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] with respect to having the Commission come under a budgetary plan, rather than to rely upon the fees collected from the stock exchanges.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. The Senate bill provided that all expenses were to be paid by the exchanges. The House bill provided for a fee of one five-hundredths of 1 percent to be levied on the exchanges when they register; so that the expenses are intended to be taken care of, so far as possible, in that way. In other words, the Senate bill provided that all expenses should be met by the exchanges. The conference report provides for a registration fee of one five-hundredths of 1 percent on the amount of business transacted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Since it is 15 minutes after 5 o'clock, I was wondering whether we could not let Senators look over this conference report tonight, and vote on it tomorrow, and save a great deal of time. We have already reached our usual adjourning time. I think I understand the conference report, but perhaps I have been paying closer attention to it than some other Senators.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we can dispose of it in a very few minutes. If the Senator from Delaware wishes to inquire about any particular provision, I shall be very glad to answer his questions.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am not prepared to discuss something I have not read. It will be necessary for me to read the report in order to understand it, and it will also be necessary for me to read it if I desire to discuss it. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist upon action tonight, because I do not want to be put in the position of having voted for this important conference report without knowing what is in it.

If the Senator will let the report go over until tomorrow, I am quite certain we shall not lose any time. I may not have anything to say about the report, but I do want to have an opportunity to read it before the report is adopted by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I can only proceed in accordance with the rules. The report was presented on yesterday, was printed, and was placed on the desks of Senators. I cannot help whether or not Senators read it. I should like to dispose of it. I do not believe the Senator from Delaware will find anything of any consequence in the report that is not in either the House or the Senate bill; and we certainly have had enough discussion with regard to the measure.

I should like to accommodate the Senator from Delaware, but we must try to dispose of our business in the regular order. The rules require that a conference report shall be presented one day, and lie over until the next day, and then it can come up at any time on call.

Mr. HASTINGS. I had not supposed that this conference report would be presented to the Senate at quarter past 5 in the evening of a day that began at 11 o'clock with a discussion on the tariff, to which I have given all my attention. I have no doubt that the Senator is within the rules, and I appreciate that he is anxious to have the report adopted; and I have no inclination at all to delay the approval of the report. I merely desire to have an opportunity to read it, and if I find in it anything that I think is objectionable and that I ought to point out to the Senate, I should like to have an opportunity to do so.

I assure the Senator that if he will agree to let the report go over until tomorrow it will not delay the ultimate disposition of the measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the trouble is that we shall have the tariff bill before us tomorrow, and perhaps the next day, and if we wait until something else happens we never will know where we are.

I have waited all day today to have this report considered. I did not press it early this morning. I wanted to do so, but I yielded that opportunity, if I had one. In any event, I did not press it this morning, expecting to bring it up before adjournment this afternoon. I was perfectly willing to wait, and did wait, until we were almost ready to adjourn this afternoon. I cannot see how I could very well consent to having the report go over until tomorrow. I think it ought to be disposed of now.

I am sorry the Senator from Delaware has not read the report, but it has been here for 24 hours or more. I am sure he will not find anything particularly new in it. We reconciled the differences between the House and the Senate. All the Senate conferees signed the report, and all the House conferees signed it except one Member, who had to leave before the papers were ready for signature. The report is a unanimous one.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Personally I have no objection to the present consideration of the report. The Senator from Delaware and one or two other Senators have indicated to me a desire to read the report this evening. They did not know it had been published they were so busy with the tariff bill, and I think time would be saved if we could go over until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow, which hour I have agreed on with the Senator from Mississippi, and the Senator from Florida can present his conference report at that hour. There will be no objection to its consideration then.

Mr. FLETCHER. With the understanding that it will come up at 10:30 tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Oregon that it was my intention to move a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. I have explained to the Senator from Mississippi personal reasons why I did not want to have the Senate meet until 10:30 o'clock. I am satisfied he understands and appreciates the reasons.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am satisfied there is some good reason or there would not have been an understanding reached by the Senator from Mississippi with the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am agreeable to accommodating the Senator from Delaware. I do not believe he will find anything in the conference report to discuss which has not already been discussed. I am willing to let the matter rest until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope that no matter will be brought up which will bring on any discussion until we get the tariff bill out of the way. There are Senators remaining in Washington who have important matters at their homes demanding their attention, who are anxious to get away, and I am getting the blame because we are not having night sessions. Let us get the tariff bill out of the way and take up these other matters in an orderly way. I shall interpose no objection to any conference report or any other matter coming up which does not lead to discussion.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am not sure, but I do not believe that the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill will provoke much discussion, and, if it be agreeable, I should like to have that considered and, if possible, disposed of at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report in charge of the Senator from Florida is the matter before the Senate at this time. It has not as yet been disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me suggest this procedure: I suggest that the Senator from Florida withdraw his request and renew it in the morning. In the meantime we can take up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and after that shall be disposed of recess until 10:30 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. With the understanding that it will be taken up at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate has voted to take up the conference report on the securities exchange bill. There is no occasion for setting aside the order. We may by unanimous consent proceed to the consideration of other conference reports, and then, at the conclusion of that business, I will move a recess until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. That is very agreeable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for several days I have been attempting to get action on the conference report on the air mail bill, and I believe that all are agreed that it may now come up, unless the conference report referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma takes precedence. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not insist. We can dispose of the air-mail conference report in a very short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the request of the Senator from Oklahoma that unanimous consent be granted to take up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is it the understanding that by unanimous consent the conference report on the securities exchange bill will go over until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be before the Senate when it meets in the morning. The Senator's motion was agreed to, and the conference report is before the Senate at this time, and will be before the Senate when it meets tomorrow.

Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, as requested by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 9, 11, 14, 17, 24, 25, 26, 28, 33, 36, 43, 44, 45, 47, 56, 57, 61, 62, 65, 67, 68, 69, 74, 77, 79, 81, 88, 93, 98, 99, 103, 105, 119, and 121.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 8, 10, 12, 13, 16, 18, 20, 21, 23, 30, 32, 35, 37, 38, 40, 46, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 63, 70, 71, 73, 75, 76, 78, 83, 84, 85, 87, 89, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, 100, 101, 102, 104, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, and 112, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "a sum equal to $5,700,000 less a sum equal to 70 percent of the amounts expended under the allotments from the Public Works Administration of $1,759,500 for sewers and $148,650 for park improvements"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,492"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,626"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$83,754"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$716,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$768,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and on page 32 of the bill, in line 10, after the word "therewith", insert "including the Shaw Junior High School,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,184,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That no part of this amount shall be obligated or expended unless and until the Jefferson Junior High School site shall have been acquired within the sum contained in this act for such purpose"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$105,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For 2 combination hose wagons and 1 pumping engine, triple combination, all motor driven, $23,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,998"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$240,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$324,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "trucks, and motor vehicles such as are now owned"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$310,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. No part of the funds appropriated in this act for any activity shall be available for transfer to any other activity or between subheads of the same activity unless specifically authorized by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 39, 41, 86, 92, and 118.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the report just submitted was arrived at after several sessions of the conferees on the part of the Senate and of the House, and was signed by all the conferees.

One amendment was transposed from one section to another section, which made it necessary to refer the amendment back to the House, and I desire to make a motion that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39. The only difference is that it transfers an amendment which the Senate placed in the bill from one section to another section where it was thought it might be more appropriate. It is an amendment relating to education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the report is agreed to, I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

I have understood there was very serious objection to one provision in the report. I myself am not informed as to the merits of the contention, but I am advised that even the Senator from Oklahoma is of the opinion that there is one part of the report which is perhaps unsatisfactory and may cripple some of the activities of one of the various boards here in Washington. I had supposed someone else knowing more about the matter than I do would take it up. I am not prepared to debate it, or even object.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will make a statement, and from my statement the Senator from Nebraska will get the facts as they were laid before the committee of conference.

The item the Senator has in mind is the appropriation for the Public Utilities Commission. The Budget estimate was for $86,823. The House reduced that to $50,000. In the hearings before our committee some evidence was introduced which convinced the committee that the amount should be restored to the Budget estimate, and we so recommended. The Senate accepted our figure, and the bill was passed containing the figure suggested by the Budget.

In conference, the House conferees would not agree to any sum in excess of $50,000, and after the matter was held in abeyance for two or three sessions, desiring to reach an agreement, the Senate conferees finally yielded to the House figure of $50,000. That is the way the matter stands today.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand that the amount agreed upon is about $37,000, or $38,000 less than the Budget estimate. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a reduction of the amount provided in the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct. The Senate accepted the Budget estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the Senate conferees yielded in toto on this amendment, and took the House figure?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. As I said a while ago, I am not sufficiently conversant with the matter to discuss its merits. I had supposed someone on the Committee on Appropriations who was better informed would enlighten the Senate on the question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senate conferees made all the arguments they were capable of making, and used all the arguments submitted to them in the hearings, but the House conferees were adamant.

Mr. NORRIS. If it be true that this reduction will seriously cripple this Commission, it is a very grave matter. As I understand, the Commission has very important functions to perform, and I understand that if those functions were not performed, there would be very serious difficulty in the District of Columbia. I have been told that the amount agreed upon, $37,000 below the Budget estimate, would bring about that result.

I realize that at this date, when almost every Member of Congress is anxious to adjourn, it probably would be futile to oppose a conference report, especially if the opposition should come from one who is not a member of the committee, and who is not well posted on the subject matter of the division between the two Houses. If I am correctly informed, however, the amount agreed upon will seriously cripple and interfere with the proper functioning of this particular Commission, which everyone admits is a very important one. I myself do not feel disposed, however, under the circumstances, to oppose the report. I presume it would be a futile thing to do. However, I wanted to call attention to the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The District of Columbia appropriation bill formerly carried an appropriation of $40,000,000. It has been reduced to $30,000,000; in other words, a reduction of $10,000,000 in the past few years. Many departments will claim that they will be ruined by the cuts which have been made. One is the recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia. We tried to have the amount raised substantially, but we failed to do so. We had to stay within the Budget estimates. Even the amount in this bill exceeds the Budget estimate by some $200,000. It is the best the Senate committee could do without holding out indefinitely. After holding out for about a week we thought we had better bring the measure back to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 41, 86, 92, and 118 to the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and concurring therein; and receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 39 to said bill, and concurring therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert "$5,763,960, of which not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for compensation to be fixed by the Board of Education and traveling expenses of educational consultants employed in character education."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39.

The motion was agreed to.

THE AIR MAIL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 3170, relating to air-mail contracts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated earlier in the day that I should have to object to the consideration of this report until the conclusion of the debate on the tariff bill. There is considerable further debate to be had on this side. I desire to cooperate with those who have the tariff bill in charge, and I asserted so this morning. Upon inquiry I find that there are Members who wish to discuss it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator realizes that the conference report can be brought up at any time.

Mr. McNARY. Without objection, it can. I appreciate that. I am telling the Senator frankly that it will lead to debate, and a great deal of debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been assured that the only speech which would be made would be that by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and he said he did not think his remarks would take very long. It seemed to me we might dispose of the report this afternoon.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggested to the Senator from Tennessee that my remarks would take 30 or 40 minutes, but I did not speak for anyone else.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the Senator did not; but I have spoken to the other Senators who are interested in the report, and, so far as I know, the only one who intends to make a speech is the Senator from Ohio. There are no speeches to be made on this side of the Chamber. I see no reason why we cannot allow the Senator from Ohio all the time he desires and still dispose of the report this afternoon. As I said, there are no speeches to be made on this side of the Chamber; so I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object to the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon object?

Mr. McNARY. I object, for this reason——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Later on I shall move to consider the report.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AT GETTYSBURG

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the President at Gettysburg on yesterday.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

My friends, on these hills of Gettysburg two brave armies of Americans once met in combat. Not far from here, in a valley likewise consecrated to American valor, a ragged Continental Army survived a bitter winter to keep alive the expiring hope of a new Nation; and near to this battlefield and that valley stands that invincible city where the Declaration of Independence was born and the Constitution of the United States was written by the fathers. Surely, all this is holy ground.

It was in Philadelphia, too, that Washington spoke his solemn, tender, wise words of farewell—a farewell not alone to his generation but to the generation of those who laid down their lives here and to our generation and to the America of tomorrow. Perhaps if our fathers and grandfathers had truly heeded those words we should have had no family quarrel, no Battle of Gettysburg, no Appomattox.

As a Virginian, President Washington had a natural pride in Virginia; but as an American in his stately phrase, "the name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discrimination."

Recognizing the strength of local and State and sectional prejudices and how strong they might grow to be, and how they might take from the National Government some of the loyalty the citizens owed to it, he made three historic tours during his Presidency. One was through New England in 1789, another through the Northern States in 1790, and still another through the Southern States in 1791. He did this, as he said, "in order to become better acquainted with their principal characters and internal circumstances, as well as to be more accessible to numbers of well-informed persons who might give him useful advices on political subjects."

But he did more to stimulate patriotism than merely to travel and mingle with the people. He knew that nations grow as their commerce and manufactures and agriculture grow, and that all of these grow as the means of transportation are extended. He sought to knit the sections together by their common interest in these great enterprises; and he projected highways and canals as aids, not to sectional but to national development.

But the Nation expanded geographically after the death of Washington far more rapidly than the Nation's means of intercommunication. The small national area of 1789 grew to the great expanse of the Nation of 1860. Even in terms of the crude transportation of that day, the 13 States were but within "driving distance" of each other.

With the settling and the peopling of the continent to the shores of the Pacific, there developed the problem of self-contained territories because the Nation's expansion exceeded its development of means of transportation. The early building of railroads did not proceed on national lines.

Contrary to belief, the South and the West were not laggard in developing this new form of transportation; but there, as in the East, most of the railroads were local and sectional. It was a chartless procedure; people were not thinking in terms of national transportation or national communication. In the days before the brothers' war not a single line of railroad was projected from the South to the North; not even one from the South reached the National Capital itself.

It was an inspired prophet of the South who said: "My brethren, if we know one another, we will love one another." The tragedy of the Nation was that the people did not know one another because they had not the necessary means of visiting one another.

Two subsequent wars, both with foreign nations, measurably allayed and softened the ancient passions. It has been left to us of this generation to see the healing made permanent.

We are all brothers now in a new understanding. The grain farmers of the West do not set themselves up for preference if we seek at the same time to help the cotton farmers of the South; nor do the tobacco growers complain of discrimination if, at the same time, we help the cattlemen of the plains and mountains.

In our planning to lift industry to normal prosperity the farmer upholds our efforts. And as we give the farmer a long-sought equality the city worker understands and helps. All of us share in whatever good comes to the average man. We know that we all have a stake—a partnership—in the government of our country.

Today we have many means of knowing each other—means that have sounded the doom of sectionalism. It is, I think, as I survey the picture from every angle, a simple fact that the chief hindrance to progress comes from elements, which, thank God, grow less in importance with the growth of a clearer understanding of our purposes on the part of the overwhelming majority. These groups are those who seek to stir up political animosity or to build political advantage by the distortion of facts; those who, by declining to follow the rules of the game, seek to gain an unfair advantage over those who live up to the rules; and those few who still, because they have never been willing to take an interest in their fellow American, dwell inside of their own narrow spheres and still represent the selfishness of sectionalism which has no place in our national life.

Washington and Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson sought and worked for a consolidated Nation. You and I have it in our power to attain that great ideal. We can do this by following the peaceful methods prescribed under the broad and resilient provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Here, in the presence of the spirits of those who fell on this ground, we give renewed assurance that the passions of war are moldering in the tombs of time and the purposes of peace are flowing in the hearts of a united people.

NERO, N.I.R.A., OR DARROW—EDITORIAL FROM AUTOMOTIVE DAILY NEWS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Nero, N.I.R.A., or Darrow", which appeared in the Automotive Daily News.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Automotive Daily News]

NERO, N.I.R.A., OR DARROW

What about N.I.R.A.? This question has been raised this week in Washington through the publication of the 50,000-word report of the Darrow Board. Fifty thousand words are a lot of words, either figuratively or literally. We feel that the Darrow report could have been much more devastating, if it were intended so, had it been less hysterical and its suggestions for correcting the errors of N.I.R.A. more coherent.

Taken by and large the sole purpose of N.I.R.A., as we see it, was to bring about cooperative effort on the part of all our people to the end that we might bring about recovery in our industry and on our farms and thus throw off the pall of depression which was rapidly heading us for God knows where. If this principle of cooperation is opposed to the American spirit, then surely Benjamin Franklin was wrong when he said, "We must hang together or hang separately." It is unfortunately true to an extent that some labor leaders construed N.I.R.A. as meaning "we must hang on together."

When the spring of 1933 came, we were faced with a national spirit verging on panic. In any panic it is every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. It was necessary that some immediate steps be taken to bring people to a point of working together against the common enemy which was causing the panic if any semblance of order was to be restored.

This could be accomplished in two ways: One by setting up a Nero—an absolute dictator, who would tell industry and individuals what they could or could not do. The second was to bring all business men together in their respective trades and ask them to set up rules for themselves which would end the unfair practices which were disturbing and hamstringing their trades. These rules would be supported and enforced by the Government. This was N.I.R.A.

N.I.R.A., therefore, is not in any sense a form of dictatorship, since the rules governing an industry are drawn up by the members of the industry governed. It is true, perhaps, that in some cases the stronger members of certain industries dominated to an extent the committees drawing up the rules. But this in itself is not a criticism of the principle of N.I.R.A. It is rather a criticism of individuals who sought to make capital for themselves on the willingness of others to cooperate. The relaxation of the antitrust laws returned the control of industry to industry. It was a carte blanche to industry to govern itself within itself. If industry has failed to do this fairly, as Mr. Darrow charges, then the inference is that industry is not fit to govern itself—and a Nero is necessary. On the other hand, if industry has worked out an equitable self-government under the codes, N.I.R.A. has succeeded.

The choice, then, seems open. Either we must continue with N.I.R.A., move more radically to Nero, or revert to Darrow, who advocates scrapping N.I.R.A. and returning to the old days of open, unhampered competition, which Mr. Darrow himself admits is, and always has been, and always will be, wolfish—the same type of competition that brought us to our fall in 1929.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be placed on the calendar.

IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably the nominations of sundry midshipmen to be ensigns in the Navy and of several midshipmen to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps. I make the unusual request that action be taken at once.

I may say as a preliminary statement that these nominations are all those of midshipmen who are graduated today at Annapolis. A few days ago the President submitted the names of 50 percent of the class who, under existing law, were entitled to commissions. Since that time we passed, a few days ago, the act providing for the commissioning of all the members of the class. These nominations are of the remaining 50 percent of the class who are graduated today.

I ask immediate action on the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry midshipmen to be ensigns in the Navy and second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with, and that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done; and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the action taken by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified. The calendar is in order.

TREATY WITH CUBA

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] desires to consider Report No. 30 on the calendar, being the treaty relating to Cuba.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is correct. The other treaties might require some explanation, and I ask that they be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, other treaties on the calendar will be passed over.

Mr. PITTMAN. The treaty with Cuba was read twice a few days ago, but I did not ask for its consideration at that time. The report of the committee is unanimous. We simply surrender our contractual relations under the Platt amendment and resort to international law. That is all there is to the treaty. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider Executive Q, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a treaty of relations between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba, which was signed at Washington on May 29, 1934, which had previously been read the second time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the island of Cuba is only a very short distance from the continental boundary of the United States. While the character of populace is not the same as that of the United States, it is similar in certain elements to ours. We are similar not so much racially as we are in our interests.

Anyone who has studied and is familiar with the 400 years of background of controversies involving Cuba must realize the volatility of the Cuban mind. Anyone who has any familiarity whatever with the history of the Cuban people will notice and cannot avoid noticing numerous episodes which indicate that their stability is a matter of doubt.

Anyone who is at all familiar with our relationship with Cuba in our efforts to prevent filibustering on the part of American citizens in the islands, which several times led to very strained relations between us and Spain, must realize that our interests are so interwoven with the interests of Cuba that it is a question of very grave doubt, in my opinion, whether we should have written into the organic law of Cuba the right to interfere when the question of her independence is at stake, so that anything we might do would be regarded as within the limits of the law written under that agreement.

Any interruption of that relationship I fear is going to invite what most of us believe is inevitable. It will be interesting to watch the developments of the next 10 years in Cuba, having in mind the volatility of temperament and mind of the Cuban people, divided into very rabid factions, and to see just what effect the future will have upon the stability of their Government.

We wrote into our relationship with Cuba in the organic law not only a right of interference, as I have already suggested, but also an inhibition against the Cuban Government incurring any obligations with any foreign country that might involve some difficulty with us. I know it is a little inconsistent with the idea of independence for us to hold any such power over Cuba as was written into the organic law. I had thought, both for our own people and for the people of Cuba, that the relationship which has always existed subsequent to the Spanish-American War, after which we granted limited independence to Cuba, had better not be interrupted.

I stated to the committee that while I questioned the wisdom of the treaty, I did not feel like objecting seriously further than simply to say that if I had my way about it I would not interrupt this relationship at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive Q, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a treaty of relations between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba, which was signed at Washington on May 29, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on page 2 of the Executive Calendar is the nomination of Hans E. Eiel to be postmaster at Buffalo Center, Iowa. I ask that the nomination be withdrawn at the request of one of the Senators from Iowa, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the other postmaster nominations on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. That completes the calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

GEORGE E. Q. JOHNSON

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 4460) to provide for the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson. I beg to say to the Senate that there are many reasons of urgency why the bill should at once be passed; and I ask the Senate, as an accommodation to me, that it be done at once.

I ask the Senate's indulgence for possibly one-half a minute to explain what I feel is of necessity an injustice done to a citizen of the city of Chicago.

Mr. Justice Johnson, an eminent citizen of Illinois, was named Federal judge. He served, as the record shows, about 5 months. He was not confirmed. He never has been paid. The House has passed the bill giving him this money. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] has reported, with an amendment, the bill appropriating the money.

May I take the liberty of asking the Senate if it will allow me to have the bill taken from the table and passed at once so that this gentleman may have his money? The Attorney General recommends it; the House approves it; the Senate committee has approved it. There is no dissent from any source.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 4460) to provide for the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "is", to strike out "authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act" and insert "hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, George E. Q. Johnson shall be paid the sum of $5,500 as compensation for services for the period from August 17, 1932, to March 4, 1933, both days inclusive, during which time he held the office of United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BRUMM

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolutions from the House of Representatives, which were read:

House Resolution 402

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable GEORGE F. BRUMM, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 253) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE F. BRUMM, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints as the committee of the Senate to attend the funeral the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

RECESS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate now take a recess until 10:30 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, June 1, 1934, at 10:30 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D.D., of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, with the din of clamorous voices in our ears, we would hush earth's noises and wait in this quiet moment for the still, small voice of the Eternal Spirit, lest we forget whose servants we are. Amid the tumult and shouting of troubled days we would lift our eyes to the eternal verities. In our bewildering doubt and darkness lift upon us the light of Thy countenance, Thou God who hast been our help in ages past, Thou who art our hope for years to come. Breathe through the heats of our desire Thy coolness and Thy balm. In discordant and disordered days may our ordered lives confess the beauty of Thy peace.

We pray for new insights and for larger sympathies. Recognition of our oneness in Thee makes vivid our realization of the oneness of humanity across all separating barriers of border or breed or birth. Lift the levels of our thinking and living above the fog of blinding prejudice and selfish seeking.

As we look to Thee now in this national shrine of each patriot's devotion, inspire these servants of Thine and of the people to face the vast needs of the present and of the future with dauntless courage and that brotherly compassion for the baffled and discouraged multitudes which moved the heart of that Lord and Master of us all. We ask it in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 9322. An act to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. STEPHENS, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. MCNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 785. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Bolger;

S. 2002. An act for the relief of R. S. Howard Co., Inc., and

S. 2342. An act for the relief of I. T. McRee.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a minute?

Mr. McGUGIN. I will withhold it.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION AND AGRICULTURAL RECOVERY

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of farm relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, a little more than a year ago President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an Executive order creating the Farm Credit Administration, consolidating the then existing Federal financial agencies making loans to farmers and cooperatives, and setting up new agencies required to make the system effective.

It is not given to us to read the history of our times as posterity will see it, but I venture the prediction that this Executive order, backed by the legislation this Congress enacted to make it effective, will be pronounced one of the outstanding achievements of this administration. It was created at a time when agriculture in practically all its branches was prostrate. Foreclosures were the order of the day, and farms all over the land were being sold at sheriffs' sales for a tithe of their values because private sources of credit had dried up and there was no way in which land mortgages could be refinanced.

Today that tide has been stemmed in most sections, and with lower interest rates, temporary postponement of principal payments, and longer terms for amortization, made possible through this agency, farmers who have been advised and availed themselves of its operations are enabled to resume normal agricultural activities, freed from the fear of homeless old age. In some communities, I grant you, the relief has not been as extensive as in others, nor as great as the emergency seems to warrant. But bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the organization now functioning under Gov. W. I. Myers is endeavoring to correct a maladjustment which grew up over a period of years when administrations here in Washington, devoid of either vision or understanding, were willing to let things drift, hoping conditions would right themselves. Instead, they grew steadily worse until the Nation itself was almost on the verge of collapse, and it took the strong hand and clear head of President Roosevelt, backed by an aroused electorate and a loyal Congress, to save the situation.

I submit that it is being saved, Mr. Speaker, and in proof thereof point to the fact that in the first 12 months after its creation the Farm Credit Administration made loans to farmers aggregating $1,273,000,000. Of this amount $791,000,000 represented loans made by the Federal land banks and the Land Bank Commissioner in saving 316,000 farms from foreclosure. Ninety percent of this went to pay old debts, due in a large part to local creditors, and the usefulness of the money loaned was thereby multiplied, giving direct support to reviving business activity throughout the agricultural sections of the Nation.

A break-down of these figures shows that $218,230,000 of this vast sum was paid to commercial banks in the communities where the farms were located and which were themselves oftentimes in distress; $82,480,000 was paid to insurance companies; $21,900,000 for payment of delinquent and current taxes; and $381,540,000 to private mortgage companies, retired farmers, dealers, and other local creditors.

In taking over these mortgages the Government followed sound business principles and where prior loans were deemed excessive insisted on their being scaled down. In this way, during the first year of its existence, the Farm Credit Administration has reduced the total of outstanding farm mortgages $46,000,000. This was done by the voluntary action of the creditors, many of whom no doubt realized that with changed conditions they could not hope, even through foreclosure, to obtain the full face value of their loans, and they willingly accepted the Government securities based on the new appraisal. In this manner the Farm Credit Administration is now making farm-mortgage loans at the rate of $5,000,000 per day. Even though there is no increase in this ratio, which is likely as the organization begins to function more perfectly, this gives a total of probable loans during the next year of $1,825,000,000 and takes no account of the easier situation borrowers from private agencies find as a result of this broad avenue of credit opened to them.

In addition to advances made on farm mortgages the Farm Credit Administration also provides credit on short-term loans at low rates of interest. It now has in operation something more than 650 production-credit associations, organized during last fall and winter, and they are now functioning in every county in the United States. These associations provide credit for farmers and stockmen until their products can be marketed, and already they have advanced $27,000,000 with the certainty that this will be largely augmented during the coming summer and fall.

These loans are made on a strictly business basis; but since the Farm Credit Administration makes the discount services of the intermediate-credit banks available to such borrowers, the loans can be made at the rate of 5 percent, whereas many heretofore have been paying from 10 to 15 percent for similar services through private agencies.

I think we should not lose sight of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that these are all loans, legitimate loans, based on the best security in all this world—fertile farms and their products. We have heard much and will hear more during the approaching political campaign as to how the Federal Government is squandering untold millions of the people's money in socialistic schemes and half-baked enterprises. These plaints will reach their crescendo just before the election and may fool some people who do not take the trouble to investigate. One of the agencies which will thus be an object of attack is the Farm Credit Administration. It will be labeled socialistic and the charge made that the Government is pouring money into a rat hole.

As I said before, these are honest loans on unquestioned security which are being and will continue to be repaid with interest sufficient for their amortization and the necessary carrying charges. They are self-liquidating, and no amount of breast beating can get us away from that fact.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, they are not nearly so revolutionary as these critics would have us believe. Agencies similar to this one have been in existence in Denmark and Holland for more than a generation, and the prosperity of these little nations has been built up by this means. England, Belgium, France, Sweden, and Norway are among the more conservative nations which have undertaken to model their agrarian policies after those of Denmark and Holland; and, observing the success they attained, we are doing likewise.

With us, however, this is not wholly an untried experiment. The Farm Credit Administration was not called into being by the much-maligned "brain trust." It has been an evolution, and I am proud of the fact that it was another Democratic administration, that of President Woodrow Wilson, which saw the inception of this program culminating in creation of the Farm Credit Administration. It was in 1916 that the Farm Loan Board was organized, then a division of the Treasury, and the first emergency seed, feed, and fertilizer loans were made to farmers by the Department of Agriculture during the Wilson administration.

The Republican Party, whose spokesmen are now so critical of our agricultural policy, was in power for 12 years, from 1921 to 1933. Did it do away with the Farm Loan Board? No, indeed; it did not. Just the reverse. It sought to expand that agency, gave it an independent status, together with millions of dollars, direct grants from the Treasury, with which to go out into the open market and seek to control agricultural surpluses by the purchase of millions of bushels of wheat and thousands of bales of cotton. It set up the agricultural credit corporations and farm-land banks in districts all over the land, as well as seed-loan offices in certain cities.

However, all this did not work. There was no cooperation between these loosely jointed organizations. They left the farmer baffled and confused, wound up in yards of red tape and restrictive regulations. It took an expert to tell to just what agency and where the needy farmer must apply for a particular type of credit sought.

The creation of the Farm Credit Administration cut the redtape. It provides for a complete and coordinated system, retaining the useful and discarding the useless features of those previous agencies. There is an administration organization in Washington giving supervision to all these facilities and regional units in each of the 12 farm credit districts, to which a farmer may apply for any form of credit to which he may feel he is eligible. Each of these regional units has four permanent branches; namely, a Federal land bank, an intermediate-credit bank, a production-credit corporation, and a bank for cooperatives. The policies of these four organizations are unified. They have one board of directors and one general agent.

The whole spirit of this organization is based on cooperation. Every borrower from whichever one of these agencies supplies the credit must be a stockholder therein. He subscribes to stock equal to 5 percent of his loan and thus becomes a part owner of the institution, having a voice in its management. Ultimately it is assumed that control of these institutions, these banks and corporations, will pass into the hands of the men who use them. Now they are partners with the Government which has advanced the initial funds with which to launch their activities.

There is one thing, Mr. Speaker, that cannot be stressed too strongly. It is the fact that the Farm Credit Administration is not loaning Government money. True, in a few instances some small advances have been made, but in the main these organizations are financed through the sale of their own bonds and debentures, secured by the farmers' notes and warehouse receipts. However, through the agency of the Farm Credit Administration the money required is obtained in the investment markets at the lowest possible rates of interest. These bonds have found high favor with the investing public and now command a premium.

Mr. Speaker, during my long years of service in this body with which the people of my district have so kindly honored me, I have often been considered conservative rather than radical. I believe thoroughly in the fundamental principles of our Government and the institutions built up under them by our fathers. But conditions change with the times. This is no longer the day of the stagecoach and the pony express. Our progress and communications now are by airplane and radio. We must meet the changed conditions as they come; and when I find all private avenues for farm credit dried up and men threatened with the loss of their homes and heritages to become wanderers upon the face of the land, I see no reason why the Federal Government should not be called upon to lend its aid. Home ownership and good citizenship go hand in hand, and together they offer the best insurance against the spread of socialism and the radical ideas which for a decade have threatened to engulf at least one-half the civilized world. I want to do my part in preserving this Nation of free men, and I believe the Farm Credit Administration is a mighty instrument to that end. The best insurance for good citizenship is to insure the farmer and home owner, preserving his home.

COMPARISON OF FARM COMMODITIES FOR 1933 AND 1934

As the best possible evidence that the Farm Credit Administration and the farm-relief policies of President Roosevelt have borne fruit, I submit the following table of prices of some of the major farm commodities for March 15, 1934, as compared with the low prices for the same commodities March 15, 1933.

These comparisons are as follows:

Commodity	Mar. 15, 1933	Mar. 15, 1934	Increase
	Cents	Cents	Percent
Cotton, pound	6.1	11.7	91.8
Corn, bushel	20.6	47.1	128.6
Oats, do	13.7	33.9	147.4
Barley, do	18.3	43.7	138.8
Wheat, do	34.5	70.9	105.5
Rye, do	22.8	53.1	132.9
Potatoes, do	39.0	92.0	135.9
Apples, do	70.3	[1] 1.04	47.4
Cottonseed, ton	[1] 9.22	[1] 20.84	126.0
Hogs, hundredweight	[1] 3.22	[1] 3.88	20.5
Beef cattle, do	[1] 3.42	[1] 3.79	10.8
Eggs, dozen	10.1	14.4	42.6
Butter fat, pound	15.1	23.5	55.6
Whole milk, hundredweight	[1] 1.10	[1] 1.50	36.4

[1] Dollars.

All farm commodities advanced, on the average, 52 percent from March 15, 1933, to March 15, 1934. In contrast to this all commodities that farmers buy advanced only 20 percent during the same period and the farmer's purchasing power, therefore, increased 26 percent.

In addition to the increased prices now being received for farm products as compared to the prices that were received a year ago, farmers who cooperate with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will receive during the years 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 rental and benefit payments estimated at $1,003,600,000. (Data from U.S. Department of Agriculture.)

HEAVEN OR HELL IN THE NEW DEAL

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, as the Congress is about to adjourn without having enacted adequate legislation to provide employment for our millions of distressed citizens, I feel it my duty to call attention to actual conditions existing in my own district and county. Official reports show that more than 431,000 persons in Los Angeles County are on public relief. These figures do not include the hundreds of thousands of other individuals who are on part-time employment and the additional thousands who are being maintained through private charity or who are being assisted by their relatives, who, likewise, find their resources rapidly diminishing.

Pending the determination whether or not the experiments in the new deal will be effective, I suggest that Federal relief appropriations be doubled over the President's recommendation. We cannot afford to permit human misery to continue to exist among our people, inasmuch as we have it within our power to grant them additional relief.

As we are engaged in a war on depression, we owe it to ourselves to expend every farthing of our resources for our own citizens, considering how liberal we were during the World War, from which we emerged with our allies and the war profiteers as the sole beneficiaries. Billions for relief and succor to our own citizens is more important to me than billions, plus hundreds of thousands of lives, sacrificed under the guise of making the world safe for democracy, when the truth is we have made it safe for dictatorships such as are personified in Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, in an address before the Presbyterian assembly, is quoted as saying that the new deal is based on the fundamental tenets of Christ, and that "the new deal is an opportunity to the Christian church." He further states that "we can make of this life a veritable hell."

I agree with Mr. Ickes in his statement and here offer a suggestion to free the American people from the "veritable hell" into which the international bankers have cast them, through their control of finance and credit. The Secretary speaks of "fools dwelling in air castles in a fool's paradise", which prompts the question whether or not he himself may not be said to be dwelling in an air castle, indicated by his failure to recognize and quote the tenets of Christ expressed in His condemnation of hypocrites and money changers. The only time that Christ is mentioned as having expressed His anger and resentment in a physical way was when He drove the money changers from the temple.

The new deal will never be a success, except in a transitory and partial way until we, in America, drive the money changers from the temple; that is, until we, through the Congress, exercise the authority granted in our Constitution and coin money, regulate the value thereof, and extend credit direct to the individual. As long as we permit the private monopolistic control and coinage of money, we, as a people, will continue to pay unnecessary tribute to this special, select group which is the exact counterpart of the type Christ drove from the temple. We, as Americans, will not attain complete economic salvation in the new deal or any deal until we are freed from the financial domination of the plutocratic groups which amassed their wealth principally through inheritance, the fruit of exploitation of our natural resources by their forefathers, or through the usurpation of special privileges.

PROGRESS BEING MADE IN THE NEW DEAL

No one can deny that our Nation is marching forward hopefully under Roosevelt, but, in the opinion of many Congressmen who have actively supported the new deal throughout, we have as yet accomplished very little for the permanent rehabilitation of trade and industry in America. We Democrats have as yet not fought a pitched battle. We have won innumerable skirmishes, such as gold devaluation, the reciprocal tariff, and the impending silver legislation, plus other features of a lesser beneficial nature too numerous to mention here, but as yet the basic causes and results of the depression have not been attacked.

While we have made progress with the P.W.A., C.W.A., and F.E.R.A., such progress has been a costly victory because of the fact that we have added approximately $7,000,000,000 of additional indebtedness to the burden of the present and future citizens of America. We cannot borrow our Nation into prosperity. We have, however, within reach every facility to solve our economic problem. Despite the advantages which would accrue to the people, the President has not yet evinced a desire to eliminate the "privately owned" Federal Reserve Banking System by the establishment of Government control of our banking structure for the well being of all Americans.

THE ROOSEVELT SPECIAL

By analogy, the new deal, with its problems, appears to me somewhat on the order of a railroad train. We have thrown out, and that rightly, the tried-and-found-wanting principles of the Republican Party, with its policy of inaction and waiting for prosperity to come around the corner. We have taken aboard as master engineer the courageous, honest, and sincere Roosevelt. Since that auspicious day of March 4, 1933, our railroad train, with Roosevelt as engineer, has moved forward, but because of the inordinate load of public and private debt which has oppressed and which continues to oppress the American people, both as to principal and interest, the journals of our coaches have developed one hot box after another. The two methods available to railroad men in eliminating the hot box have not been adopted. We should either reduce the load of public and private indebtedness and interest which is weighting down the coaches or we should utilize the oil of Government credit through nationalization of banking in order to eliminate the hot box of depression. Instead of following either of these procedures, we have followed the old-deal methods and are continually pouring the water of high-interest-bearing, tax-exempt securities on the red-hot journals, which only temporarily relieves the overheated bearings. We appear oblivious of the fact that this increased indebtedness adds weight to the vehicle, and the hot box becomes hotter as we proceed.

Traveling with the Roosevelt special as crew is the Congress of the United States which appears to have abrogated its legislative power by permitting the "brain trusters" in the Administration—appointed officials—to write and present legislation of their choice to the Congress for enactment. The new-deal special, despite the handicap of the issuance of tax-exempt securities to cool the bearings, proceeds forward, but not directly along the main line as it should. It is diverted from time to time to a side track, suggested by a "brain trust" experimenter who, through the experience gained in the classrooms of privately endowed schools wherein the capitalistic attitude was continually absorbed, appears to consider that he thoroughly understands the problems of the universe and the method of reaching utopia.

CAPITALISTIC SYSTEM FAULTY

There is no criticism of the capitalistic system, provided it is modified to give the producer, as well as the consumer, a more equitable share of the profits of labor. The "brain trusters", no doubt, are sincere according to their lights, but lacking actual experience and intimate contact with labor and with the problems of the common man, they radiate their influence, perhaps unconscious that the shadow of Wall Street envelops them. We need more practical men rather than theorists to advise the President. Traveling forward, the President's advisers, perhaps innocent of the influence which has contorted their viewpoint, fail to take cognizance of the red lights ahead, which we find indicated in the increasing strikes, the continued unemployment situation, and the criticism of various groups which are dissatisfied with the progress thus far attained.

I have voted for every measure which has been presented as an Administration measure, with the exception of an increased tax on liquor and the granting of authority to the privately owned Federal Reserve banks to coin money on securitites and collateral of questionable value. This latter measure, in my opinion, is in direct contravention to the precepts of the Constitution, as in our democratic form of government no private financial group should have the right to coin money at the mere cost of printing and lend such money to the private citizen at an exorbitant rate of interest.

While I opposed some of the so-called "Administration measures" in the special session, I have had the pleasure of noting that the Administration and the Congress have reversed themselves on at least three fundamental bills which were enacted in the special session, thus vindicating my position in opposing these bills.

It is my sincere hope, in the interest of our distressed citizens, that the President will cast out some of his economic advisers—Baruch and others, with the Wall Street taint—and that he will not permit our vehicle of progress, the new deal, to be side tracked further by additional experimentation.

Having the fullest confidence in the President, I feel that he will exercise the authority granted to him in the reciprocal tariff legislation to advance the interest of the American agriculturalist and manufacturer through barter or trade agreements.

NATIONALIZATION OF BANKING ESSENTIAL

I look forward to a recommendation from the President which will assure to the American people the financial freedom granted them under the Constitution through the absorption by the Government of the private banking structure in the nationalization of banking. If the Government would take over the banking structure and extend credit to the citizens at the rates of interest now charged by the private bankers, there would be practically no necessity for any further Federal taxation except through inheritance, estate, and gift taxes, and, if necessary to keep the Budget continually balanced, an income tax for those in the higher income brackets.

In the event of nationalization of banking and the extension of credit direct to the individual, another tremendous advantage to the citizen would be the extension of such credit at cost, or in no case at more than 1 or 2 percent. The American people today pay approximately from $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 annually in interest to private bankers and to the money hierarchy. With credit at cost, or even at the low rate of 1 or 2 percent, the citizens would save directly approximately the amount which today they pay as tribute to the financial barons. With this increase of purchasing power saved to the American people, our economic problem would be practically, if not completely, solved.

SILVER REMONETIZATION HELPFUL

While I am an advocate of the remonetization of silver, I am convinced that remonetization of silver is not vitally necessary to our economic rehabilitation, provided the Government will take over and nationalize all banks. The mere fact, however, that the Bank of England and the international bankers of Europe and Wall Street are so much opposed to the remonetization of silver is conclusive evidence to me that remonetization on the part of our Government would be in the interest of the people.

England is today profiting to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars annually due to our devaluation of the gold dollar, because of the fact that England produces 73 percent of the gold of the world. As the Americas produce 75 percent of the silver of the world, it is self-evident that the remonetization of silver will add to the wealth of the Americas and stimulate trade between them and the 31 silver-standard nations of the world. There is absolutely no danger of inflation in silver remonetization. The total available silver in the world is far less than 12,000,000,000 ounces, which amount, distributed in the channels of international trade, is infinitesimal compared with the bank credit in the United States alone (with no value except the bankers' promise) which, in 1929, approximated $40,000,000,000.

The principal advantage offered by silver monetization is that the private banker cannot manipulate the amount of actual money in circulation if we have a bimetallic standard of gold and silver. Under the single gold standard and with the control of all moneys and credits resting in the hands of the "private" Federal Reserve System, these "bankeeters" can expand or contract the volume of currency in circulation at will through the purchase or sale of Government bonds and lately through the purchase or sale of collateral of dubious value, such as the R.F.C. accepted in extending aid to the Dawes bank of Chicago, whereby the defunct Insull securities were accepted at face value for cash from the Treasury.

If we have a circulating medium of both gold and silver instead of gold and paper, as we have today, the private banking groups cannot take this silver out of circulation as they do paper money by destroying it. If they should withdraw silver from circulation, they would lose the interest accruing to them, which any fair-minded man knows the New York banking buccaneers would not forfeit.

We should further consider the fact that the present Government policy of borrowing on its own credit from the "privately owned" Federal Reserve System is making misery for the masses while, at the same time, it is a veritable harvest for the rich. The printing of paper money by the "privately owned" Federal Reserve System creates no values at all. The remonetization of silver will stimulate mining and thus help relieve the unemployment situation. By establishing suitable values for silver, such as we have for gold, we will have tangible assets which are indestructible and thus add to our permanent circulating currency. The Government today has established a standard value for silver bullion. The Administration is to be commended for this pronounced progressive step.

UNIFORM SILVER PRICE ATTAINABLE

Importations of silver bullion could carry an impost tax of sufficient amount so that in no event would the actual price of such silver be less than the price of American-mined silver. Under the present Government standard of 64¼ cents per ounce for domestic silver bullion, the Government could coin silver and establish for such silver dollars a value of $1.29 per ounce, thus giving a 100-percent profit to the Treasury for every ounce of domestic or imported silver bullion.

Foreign silver coins in the international channels of trade should be accepted reciprocally at their face value or by agreement at a value of $1.29 per ounce. This would stimulate trade with the silver countries, and because of the fact that the United States produces at least 25 percent of all silver mined and the Americas produce 75 percent of all silver mined, the control of international currency would pass to the Americas. Under the present gold standard the control of international currency rests with Great Britain, the leading gold-producing country of the world.

Under this procedure, the profits accruing to the Government in the coinage of silver at the value of $1.29 per ounce could be applied wholly in the interest of public works or direct credit to the individual, and thus lubricate the wheels of industry and commerce and start our Nation forward to a permanent prosperity in which all the people would share rather than merely a small banking hierarchy in the Wall Street group.

The threat of uncontrolled inflation would be effectively removed through the nationalization of banking and the adoption of a bimetallic standard. There would be no further necessity for the issuance of tax-exempt bonds which, as the name implies, continue to put the American taxpayer in increasing bondage. Interest on money is a direct tax on industry and should not be permitted to any agency except the Government itself.

It is my sincere hope and belief that our President is striving toward this objective, and I am convinced that if he would suggest this plan either to the Congress or to the American people, he would find an almost spontaneous acceptance of this principle. In history and in the hearts of the American people he would hold a place equal, if not superior, to that of Washington or Lincoln. Lincoln freed the individual from chattel slavery. May we trust and pray that Roosevelt will free the free-born, worthy American from the slavery of the private money ring whose success is dependent entirely upon periodical depressions which it engineers in order to entrench itself more firmly in its ill-gotten wealth at the expense of the unfortunate citizen who is caught in the maelstrom of its machinations.

NEW-DEAL OBJECTIVES

Notwithstanding the fact that the nationalization of banking and the remonetization of silver are the backbone of our economic recovery, there are other features which should be adopted in order to brighten the lives and provide for the future welfare and prosperity of our citizens. The machine age has aggravated the employment problem of the worker in practically every avenue of industry. The profits of the machine are absorbed by the patentee or manufacturer. The number of workers has been reduced to the barest minimum, without a compensating increase in pay, with the result that millions who were heretofore employed have been displaced entirely and are now without employment.

Various socialistic panaceas have been advanced to correct this situation but it is doubted whether any idea yet advanced would measure up in practical importance to the proposed 30-hour week. It is self-evident that any effort on the part of the Government to place the entire industry of America on an arbitrary 30-hour-week basis would disrupt our industrial life and perhaps be a menace to recovery, if it would not entirely defeat the objective. The small business man must be protected against the encroachments of the larger interstate monopolies and chain stores. The N.R.A. has encountered these same difficulties because of being too comprehensive and therefore is being subjected to criticism, notwithstanding that it has some outstanding features which should be retained as basic reform.

I would favor the adoption of a 30-hour week in the basic interstate and international industries, including the railroads, in order that more men may be employed without a diminution of salary which should be maintained at all times at the highest possible standard. The Steel Trust, the railroads, and other basic industries, which are highly overcapitalized and which are endeavoring to pay inordinate profits on their watered valuation, should be submitted to a physical revaluation and their incomes adequately checked to ascertain their ability to pay a saving wage to their employees.

Capital is entitled to a fair return on its real, physical valuation—that is, on the actual cost of duplication of the industry. If profits were predicated on this basis, capital would be in a position to pay a just wage to its employees under a 30-hour week and, at the same time, more men would be absorbed in industry. The taxpayer would thus be relieved of the burden of public relief, abhorred by the worker himself, as is evidenced in his appeals to his Government for remedial legislation which will give him the opportunity of earning his daily bread.

INTERESTS OF YOUTH AND AGED PARAMOUNT

While I am very solicitous in behalf of the aged, I am equally, if not more, solicitous in behalf of the youth of America who, under the present engineered depression, are stunted in their economic and social development. As the future of America rests in the hands of its youth, every facility and encouragement should be extended to them in order that they may take upon themselves the responsibilities of parenthood and become satisfied, useful, prosperous, and optimistic citizens.

Our educated young people are especial victims of the depression, and because of their higher degree of sensibility and understanding, their brave buoyancy of spirit under the adverse conditions which confront them is particularly commendable. While hope may spring eternal, it is my opinion that we owe it to the youth of our Nation to reward their hope and confidence in government by the adoption of laws which, in the most expeditious manner, will relieve them from the unfortunate plight in which they now find themselves.

As the United States today is paying almost $1,000,000,000 every year in interest to the coupon clippers of Wall Street on tax-exempt securities, I can see no reason why we should not expend sufficient funds to pension and brighten the lives of our aged citizens who are unable to provide for themselves. The public records will show that it would actually be an economic asset to our Nation to provide adequate pensions for our aged citizens. Many States have recognized this axiom which is especially applicable in the case of husband and wife who, in too many instances, because they are unable to provide for themselves, are torn from each other in their last days—and we call ourselves civilized!

Many other innovations of a helpful character could be mentioned but my time is too limited. Before concluding, however, I do wish to call attention to another question which demands prompt action. Believe it or not, under the new deal we have 42 additional bureaucracies, each of which is an added weight on the backs of the taxpayers, considering the high salaries paid to many of the Government employees.

Consolidation was on the agenda of the Republican Party, and is also on the agenda of our own party. As yet, however, we Democrats have failed to consolidate various permanent departments in government, and as a consequence the taxpayers continue to suffer. The profiteering politicians and the selfish individuals in government have, up to this time, frustrated consolidations which, with doubt, should save millions upon millions to the taxpayers. I shall merely mention one consolidation of many which could be effected economically and in the interest of increased efficiency. The Navy, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Lighthouse Service, and Army Transport Service should be consolidated under one head. These agencies are all within the same category and pertain to shipping and the sea. As a typical instance of losses to the taxpayers, we find in some cities each of these agencies paying rent for or owning docks and other sea appliances, while, if consolidated, all might utilize the same facilities.

As another evidence of the political hold of the profiteer on our Government, we find that the Navy Department, after selecting outstanding young men in America for the Naval Academy and educating them at a cost to the taxpayers of at least $16,000 each, is under present laws retiring many of them in perfect physical condition, with high retired pay for life, merely because they have not been selected for promotion.

We already have 182 of such physically fit officers on the retired list at a cost to the taxpayers of $668,000 annually. Instead of utilizing these educated men as they could be utilized in the Lighthouse Service, Transport Service, or for shore duty, they are retired to civil life with high pay and immediately enter other governmental departments or private pursuits, taking jobs from worthy citizens, and they continue to receive their retired pay plus their Government or civil remuneration.

BUREAUCRACY ABSORBS LIFEBLOOD OF NATION

Washington, D.C., with its myriad of bureaus, many of them absolutely unnecessary because of duplication, is in a sense a sponge which is absorbing the economic life of our Nation. The poor farmer or worker who has a mere pittance of income would be dismayed could he but visit Washington and note the large numbers of individuals receiving fabulous salaries who spend hours at a time in their offices smoking and entertaining, utterly oblivious of the desperate plight of the people on the farms and in the industrial centers of America who are being unduly taxed to support them.

Washington is filled with cheap politicians and lobbyists, who find the new deal a profitable deal for them. Senior Members of Congress have told me that never in their experience have they witnessed anything of the nature which I here only partially describe. The high-class apartments are filled with this easy-money gentry, who cannot visualize, and many of whom do not care to visualize, the desperate plight of our suffering unemployed. Verily, I may say that we also need a new deal in the city of Washington in the various bureaus which are choking the lifeblood of the people through their inordinate extravagance.

Finally, since I have mentioned the new deal, I may say that there is no hope for America in the ghost of republicanism. I am confident that we will march forward to ultimate success in the new deal. This happy solution will be ours with permanency once we utilize the constitutional provision for coining money, regulating the value thereof, and extending credit directly to the citizens without the intermediary of the "private" Federal Reserve System.

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an address by my colleague [Mr. MUSSELWHITE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to include the following address delivered by my colleague Mr. MUSSELWHITE at Muskegon yesterday, Memorial Day:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, permit me first to assure you of my very deep appreciation of the honor shown me by inviting me to participate with you in the observance of this Memorial Day. I am not unmindful of this honor any more than I am aware of the regretted fact that due to the stress and demands upon one's time incident to the gigantic legislative program which is being rushed through the American Congress, I have been unable to give the time and attention to preparation that your courtesy on this occasion justifies.

Today, under auspices of all veterans' organizations of Muskegon, we are assembled to pay homage to our soldier dead. We bow our heads in sorrow for those who have gone on the "great adventure." We mourn the loss of those who, seeking the "bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth", have gone through the valley of the shadow of death. The men of Michigan have earned enviable praise and esteem for gallantry under fire and for bravery under trying conditions. But such bravery and such courage is paid with a terrible toll. The price is dear. When rank upon rank stand their ground with unblanched faces against withering fire, then jealous death spreads its encompassing wings around many a loved lad.

We do well to honor these men who have laid their lives upon the altar of liberty and patriotism. Appomattox, Chancellorsville, Bull Run, Manila Bay, San Juan Hill, Flanders Field, Belleau Woods, St. Mihiel, Argonne, are names written on the hearts of all Americans. Yet the signs and evidences of battle at those historic places may have gone.

The trenches and breastworks that gave our men a measure of protection may now be leveled by plow or tractor. The little streams that were dyed with blood from soldier hearts may now slake the thirst of lowing kine. Wheat or barley may cover the level which battle bathed in blood. The sciences of war have given way to the arts of peace. Where was carnage and destruction and ghastly death is now peaceful industry and quiet husbandry. Thank God that it is so, and pray God that it may remain so.

Though the battle wounds be healed the scars cannot be obliterated. The memories that are ours today of what "our boys" did in the War of the Rebellion and on foreign soil impinge on our very souls. They fought a haughty foe and wiped out their foul footsteps' pollution. As the immortal Lincoln said at Gettysburg: "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here."

As a Member of the Congress of the United States, it has often occurred to me that when legislation is being enacted in this present strife, I wonder if, after all, we are as appreciative, as grateful as we should be to those heroes who so valiantly fought the Nation's battle in the recent World War and our other wars. May I digress here to state in passing that the apparent injustices which were threatening to result to our veterans from certain legislation have been to a considerable extent righted? And I am glad to inform you that I voted for every constructive measure designed to benefit deserving war veterans, whether they be of the Grand Old Army of the Republic, the Spanish War men, or the veterans of the World War. I say this as one who in this great crisis in the life of this Nation has steadfastly and consistently as a Member of the Congress supported the President, the Commander in Chief, in his war against the depression. With a love for the cause of the veterans of all wars surpassed only by the love and devotion which I harbor for my own immediate family, I have reason to believe, after discussing these matters with leaders of the House and high officials authorized to speak for the President, the present occupant of the White House, that he has a heart as full of gratitude and sympathetic understanding as it is of courage and devotion to country, and that he will take steps to see that no deserving veteran is slighted or uncared for.

On this Memorial Day I have left my desk in Washington to gather with you to pay tribute to the heroes of 1861 who held our Nation together; to those who gave their lives for us in the Spanish-American War in 1898; and to those who went to the front in 1917 and saved the world for democracy.

Everywhere throughout the Nation our citizens today are voicing their tributes of respect and affection in fond memory of those who in the discharge of duty paid the supreme sacrifice. You citizens who have gathered here today would, were it possible, broadcast throughout the land the deep feeling of honor and reverence which is due every American who dies for his country; but we are here today to pay tributes to our own, to voice our appreciation and devotion to those Michigan boys who went forth in 1861, in 1898, and in 1917.

Possibly some are here today who remember the call to arms in 1861. Many of us recall the mustering of troops in 1898, but all of us remember the call that went flashing over the land in 1917, the declaration that a state of war existed between the Imperial German Government and the peoples of the United States.

Our hearts swell with pride at remembrance of the prompt response of our own Michigan boys. In the ranks of the Army and on ships of the Navy were sons, brothers, husbands, fathers; none were more fearless; none were more loyal; none had a deeper love of country; and none were more loyal or more loved than your own boys of Muskegon. Cheerfully, willingly, they entered the combat against the common foe; manfully and unflinchingly they endured the hardships and rigors of war. These men not only lived for our Nation, they died for it. They were our brothers, our friends, our neighbors when peace prevailed, but when the hour of national peril came these quiet, peace-loving citizens were transformed into heroes. From the sphere of the citizen they rose to the plane of the patriot.

We cannot add to the glory or honor or renown of those whose death saved for us our country. We cannot make sacred the ground wherever they lie. We may adorn with tender, loving tributes the resting places of our beloved dead; the flowers that are strewn over their graves may symbolize the living fragrance of their memory. But we shall honor them most by having their example teach us to love our country more, to prize its manifold blessings more, and to advance its glory and greatness more. These brave men stand in history and in the hearts of a grateful people where you and I may never stand. It was to save the flag from dishonor, the world and the Nation they loved from destruction that they gave their lives. Of the millions that engaged in the great conflict some lived to see the victory for which they periled so much, and returned in health and strength to receive honor and praise from a grateful people. Many, too, returned maimed and sick, but living to see the land they loved redeemed, to realize the Nation's gratitude, and to be welcomed once more to the bosoms of loving friends. But those we mourn today passed away before the hour of triumph, in the darkness of the night before the bright rays of the morning came. Some sleep at home beneath the canopy of Heaven in their own beloved land, while others lie in scattered graves in foreign fields, each resting from his fierce toil. It is to them we scatter wreaths and flowers; for their loss we shed our tears.

My deepest sympathy goes out today to the mothers throughout the land whose aching hearts feel the keen pang of the thought of lost sons, to those whose thoughts are of lost brothers, husbands, and fathers who went forth in defense of our honor and did not return. Let us, the survivors, then appreciate our destiny and above all, let us never forget that to these brave defenders in the hour of the Nation's deadly peril and under a Divine Providence we owe the blessings we enjoy today.

And you who reap the benefit of these sacrifices, whether you share them or not, never forget to hold in grateful remembrance the deeds of those who fought and bled in our country's cause.

Because of the courage of these men our honor is unimpeached, and this flag, which I now have the pleasure of presenting to the veterans' organizations of Muskegon, this flag which has flown over the National Capitol, and by special favor over the White House, and which I was fortunately able to secure for you—continues to fly in undisputed supremacy, respected in every land. And may peace, prosperity, and happiness abide with it.

If we are to show our true appreciation of the sacrifices these men made for us, we must with renewed effort uphold the traditions that made ours a Christian Nation. We must remain steadfast and true in upholding the Constitution of our country and the honor of the flag we love so well.

And what lessons we may read in that flag. Its white teaches us purity of purpose; its red typifies the blood which has so often been shed in its defense; and its blue, that its constellation reminds us of the starry canopy of heaven, behind which is the eternal camping ground where the pure and good, when discharged from service here, are mustered into the mighty army of saints who guard the throne of the Most High God.

And thus as we bare and bow our heads to the heroes' honor on this commemorative day, may we appreciate more everywhere those priceless privileges for which they sacrificed all they had—home, happiness, and life.

In conclusion, my friends, I wish I might pay individual tribute to some of your city's highly honored heroes, such as Merritt Lamb, for whom your American Legion Post is named; and to all the venerable gentlemen who survive from the days of the Civil War; the Spanish War veterans, and those of the younger generation who fought for us, suffered for us, and, all too many, died for us in the World War. Time will not permit such digression.

And may I, without impropriety, say a word for that great humanitarian organization, the American Red Cross, which is working so zealously in your interests. Muskegon is fortunate in having a chapter of this organization under the capable administration of Helmer Berg, to whom I pay tribute, and who I particularly wish to thank for extending to me the invitation to speak on this occasion.

This is a day when political lines are forgotten; it is a day when community interests are welded together as one; a day when ancestry fades away, leaving none but Americans; a day when rich and poor alike bow in meek humility; a day when religious differences cease to exist as we pay tribute to those of all bloods and all creeds who, mindful of the supereme sacrifice on Calvary, proved true to His divine idea of patriotism when He proclaimed:

"Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

I thank you, my comrades and friends.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman from Kansas reserve his point?

Mr. McGUGIN. I reserve it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order tonight to move to take a recess until 7:30 o'clock for the purpose of calling the Private Calendar and considering bills unobjected to, beginning where the House left off the last time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, that gives us no opportunity whatever to make special preparation for this night session other than the general preparation we have already made. We ought to have at least a day's notice of a night session devoted to the Private Calendar. The Member who has a bill on the calendar does not need notice, but those who work on the calendar to stop bad bills and have to prepare themselves should have at least a day's notice. Does not the gentleman think he should ask this for tomorow night instead of tonight? Some of us have made appointments for tonight in our offices.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman wishes to keep his social engagements.

Mr. BLANTON. Social engagements have no interest for me. Since I have been here in Congress it has been nothing but hard work, day and night.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I will change my request for Friday night.

Mr. SABATH. Many of us have engagements for tomorrow night.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if there is to be objection to that, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. I am willing to follow my leader, regardless of personal inconvenience.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order to move to take a recess until 7:30 o'clock tonight for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, beginning at the star. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

SILVER

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, due to my occupancy of the chair yesterday in Committee of the Whole, an honor I deeply appreciate, I could not properly participate in the rather acrimonious debate on the silver bill on which we are about to vote. I heard gentlemen whom I know to be sincere friends of genuine silver legislation, and gentlemen who are opposed to such legislation, bitterly assail or deride this bill on the ground that it is an empty gesture or a mere sop to silver. I know other Members who are in doubt as to the benefits of this legislation and as to how it will be administered. I just want to say this, that if this bill becomes a law and the administration of it goes as far as the law, that will be far enough, but if the administration of this law does not go that far, then there will be another Secretary of the Treasury going back to little old New York. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 seconds more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask all Members who favor a reasonable expansion of the currency on a sound metallic base to vote for this bill, and let us see where we go.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SILVER SPECULATORS AND HOARDERS

Mr. Speaker, if I could have come down out of the chair, I should have liked particularly to answer some of the objections to the bill made by Members in debate on the floor, and I shall take the opportunity now to discuss a few of them. The able gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] read some names from the list of silver holders furnished to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury, and he was followed by a Member who stated that he was for the remonetization of silver until the disclosure of these lists by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The silver survey made by the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the quantity of silver holdings in the United States is a surprisingly strong corroboration of the claims made by bimetallists that vast quantities of silver are not available in the event of the passage of a genuine silver remonetization bill.

A tabulation of the lists of silver holdings submitted to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury as reported by the Associated Press amounts to less than 100,000,000 ounces. In view of the prospects of major silver legislation by this Congress, three times this amount of accumulated silver holdings would not have disconcerted the supporters of silver. It is only natural that the prospects of such legislation should have attracted silver to this country, just as the gold-purchasing program has attracted gold. The surprising thing is that the quantity of available silver at this time is not very much greater. The investigation of the Secretary of the Treasury may be dismissed as a water haul.

The great question which has revolved around silver has been the silver supply. The greatest handicap to the attempted rehabilitation of silver has been the picture built up in the mind of the country and in the mind of the world that silver is an overly plentiful and cheaply produced metal. I made a radio talk devoted exclusively to this subject on March 9, the result of considerable study of reliable statistics. These statistics show that these great supplies of silver do not exist. When men base their opposition to this legislation on this expressed fear, they shut their eyes to all the facts to be had on this subject. It was stated in a sentence by Mr. F. H. Brownell, chairman of the board of the American Smelting & Refining Co., which handles three-fourths of the silver output of the world, when he stated to the House Committee on Coinage, and I quote his exact words:

At the present time you could not get a billion ounces of silver to save your life—I say, to save your life.

The Secretary of the Treasury will now have in his hands the decisive means of determining the silver supply, its alleged availability and cheapness.

DEATH BLOW TO GOLD STANDARD

The very able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] opposes this legislation on the ground that it had its origin in Great Britain. I have here in answer to that charge an item that gives me a lot of satisfaction. It adds to my pleasure in voting for this bill. It is in the shape of an Associated Press cable from London, picturing British financial circles as being thrown into gloom by it. The cable is as follows:

BRITISH FINANCIERS FROWN ON SILVER SUCCESS

LONDON, May 23.—British financial leaders were pictured in well-informed quarters today as being highly alarmed by the prospect that President Roosevelt's silver-monetization program will blast their hopes for the return of Great Britain to the gold standard in the near future.

Despite the nonchalant attitude they assumed toward the American President's message, financial circles were pictured as being thrown into gloom.

"Financial leaders here have been hoping for some time that President Roosevelt would head off the silverites so there would be no further steps in the direction of world-wide bimetallism", said a well-informed observer.

"Roosevelt's capitulation to the silverites will only give new impetus to the two-base currency movement, which the British distinctly do not want. If bimetallism becomes popular it may be good-bye forever to the gold standard."

Opponents of this legislation have indulged in much derogatory speculation as to the origin or authorship of the bill. This cable makes it quite clear where it did not originate, and the same may be said of the entire Roosevelt monetary policy. England is just about as responsible for the Roosevelt monetary policy as it was for the Declaration of Independence, and in the same way.

The British reaction to this legislation is not surprising in view of the fact that the world's first great banking house, established in London, was the author of the single gold standard. Its very origin is enough to condemn it in the minds of thinking people as a standard for the money of the people. Since when was any great banking house concerned in a plentiful, cheap money?

The first great banking system did not invent a monetary system for the benefit of the people, with which it was doing business and out of which it was making money. This is self-evident. Yet this is the system that has spread over the world and which is today strangling it, producing the misery which was predicted by John G. Carlisle on the floor of the House of Representatives on February 21, 1878, when discussing the demonetization of silver in 1873. More than a half century has elapsed since the great Kentuckian delivered the prophecy which is reflected in the condition of the world today, and since the language of the prophecy is a philippic perhaps without equal in the annals of debate on this question, I shall favor the Membership of this House by quoting it here. Mr. Carlisle said:

I know that the world's stock of the precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce, and industry. According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half of the metallic money in the world. With an ample currency, an industrious and frugal people will speedily rebuild their works of internal improvement and repair losses of property; but no amount of industry or economy on the part of the people can create money. When the Government creates it or authorizes it, the citizen may acquire it, but he can do nothing more.

FARMER BACKBONE OF SILVER STRENGTH

The next objection to the legislation I wish to note came from the distinguished and very useful Member from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, to the effect that the demand for this legislation comes from the mine owners and is for their benefit. This objection might have had some point 40 years ago, but the day of the bonanza king has long since passed. He has faded from the picture. It is nothing short of ridiculous to attribute the movement for the remonetization of silver to the unknown owners of closed mines in a half dozen States, in all of which agriculture has long since surpassed mining as a major industry.

There is no more foundation for the charge that great mining interests are the power behind the remonetization of silver than there is for the equally misleading propaganda that there is available such great stores of cheaply produced silver as to destroy our monetary system if it is admitted to coinage and circulation.

The truth is that the farmer is the backbone of the silver movement. He is not interested in mines or mining. He is not trying, to use the current phrase, "to do something for silver." He wants to use silver to do something for the monetary system of the country, to expand the currency, to put money in circulation, to raise and stabilize the prices of farm products, and to restore the impoverished agriculture of the country. Despite its present low estate, as compared with tax-free interest-bearing Government bonds, the land is still the foundation of the national structure, the one indispensable asset in the inventory of the national wealth, and prosperity can never return with agriculture in bankruptcy.

Considered as an industry, the production of silver, like the production of gold, is a minor industry. In my State, which is a silver State, its annual output does not compare with that of agriculture, and it is the same in other metal-producing States. Without checking the figures, I feel safe in saying that the annual world output of both gold and silver would not buy half the annual output of automobiles in the city of Detroit. These metals are to be measured by no such standard. If the mints were thrown open to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1, there are farming counties in my district which would never know it in direct results. Let me repeat, these farmers are not interested in silver from the standpoint of the mining industry. They are interested in silver only from the angle of a sufficient circulating medium which cannot be controlled as gold has been. If it were not for this interest, there would not be one farmer in a thousand in the United States in favor of the remonetization of silver, whereas the great majority of all farmers are in favor of it, and in favor of it as the first of all remedies to restore and maintain prosperity.

BUSINESS SEEING THE LIGHT

Contrary to the views of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, I draw some comfort and reassurance from another objection to this legislation urged by him, to wit, that it is recommended by the Committee of the Nation, made up of 1,000 leading industrialists and business men. This shows that silver is becoming respectable, breaking into society like the Ford car; that in addition to the mine owners and the farmers, even big business men are beginning to see the light and to see that a nation cannot carry on a business turn-over of two to three billion dollars daily and in 1929 as high as $4,000,000,000 a day on a circulating medium of five or six billion dollars. The velocity of the turn-over of money is being considered in connection with the quantity of money in order to determine the necessary volume of money, but such a turn-over as is involved in a money base of five or six billion dollars to handle an annual business volume of twelve hundred billion, would require such a velocity as to make it invisible, and that is just what happened in 1929. I shall go more fully into this in another section of my remarks.

THREAT IN PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Another objection to this legislation is that it is not needed; that the President now has plenary powers under the so-called "inflation" amendment to the farm bill to authorize the unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio he may fix. The same was true of gold under the inflation amendment, but the President saw fit to come to Congress for specifications to carry out this general grant of power, and these specifications were given him by an act of this session of the Seventy-third Congress. Now he is doing the same thing in the case of silver. The President, it may be observed in passing, is a unique type of dictator. He is granted plenary powers and then comes to Congress for a bill of particulars. Such a policy should serve to allay the oft-expressed minority fears about dictatorships. And the fact that the President asks for these specifications ought to be an assurance that he contemplates a substantial fulfillment of them.

In this connection I want to point out and stress what to my mind is a very significant paragraph in the message of the President to Congress asking for this legislation, in that portion of the message dealing with the necessity of concerted action by all nations, "if a permanent measure of values, including both gold and silver, is eventually to be made a world standard." The President said:

> To arrive at that point, we must seek every possibility for world agreement, although it may turn out that this Nation will ultimately have to take such independent action on this phase of the matter as its interests require.

Let the world take notice of the not too thinly veiled threat in this highly significant sentence. The United States is no longer a debtor nation and a suppliant to England as it was in 1896. The United States is now the creditor of the world in an amount almost beyond the comprehension of the human mind, an amount now approximating $30,000,000,000 of public and private foreign indebtedness to the United States and its people. In my opinion this country has but to exert its leadership and its power to establish a monetary system which will place something more substantial under the business system of the world than bookkeeping and fictitious credits.

HOW CAN WE SPEND THE MONEY?

Some objections to this legislation border on the ridiculous. One such was, how this new money would be put in circulation. It occurs to my mind that the Treasury could use it in payment of the contribution of the Government to its national roads and public-works program generally, that it could use it to pay its conservation army, that it could use it to pay salaries and expenses of the Government, that it could use it for all these outlays instead of using credits on the books of the Federal Reserve banks in exchange for more billions of tax-free 4-percent bonds. Personally, I should be willing to undergo the sacrifice of a lifetime job on the pay roll and accept silver certificates every pay day. The easiest question the administration should have to answer at this time would be how to spend the money.

LEGISLATION IS MANDATORY AND FAR-REACHING

Mr. Speaker, two viewpoints have been expressed concerning this legislation. One is that it is a gesture, the other that it is the greatest advance for silver since its demonetization in 1873.

If I did not hold the latter view, I would not esteem it a great honor to have presided over the Committee of the Whole during the passage of the bill.

Since demonetization but two silver measures have become law—the Bland-Allison Act and the Sherman Act. These limited silver-purchase acts were foredoomed to failure by their very limitations.

This bill, while limited in words and figures written in the law, is unlimited in practical effect. Silver can be purchased and money issued against it until it reaches $1.29 per ounce, or until the silver reserve reaches 25 percent of gold. The first objective—$1.29 per ounce—will not only restore silver as an industry but will restore price levels as well; and no bimetallist believes the second objective—the 25-percent reserve—calling for something like 1,500,000,000 additional ounces of silver, will be reached in years, if ever. If the Treasury were thrown open tomorrow to silver at $1.29 per ounce, it would not produce 1,500,000,000 ounces. The fallacy of an unlimited and cheap silver supply will be demonstrated under this bill.

This bill is reaching by an oblique movement an objective which could not be taken by frontal attack. Those who fear unlimited silver are reassured by the limits in the law; those who believe in complete bimetallism are confident that that result will arrive before the limitations in the law are reached.

The vital features of this bill are sections 3 and 5. To those who look upon the legislation as a mere gesture, I want to direct brief attention to these sections.

In section 3 the Secretary of the Treasury is not only authorized but directed to purchase silver at home or abroad up to a price not in excess of the monetary value thereof; that is, $1.29 per ounce, or up to the point where the monetary value of the stocks of silver equal 25 percent of the monetary value of the stocks of gold.

This section fixes limitations or objectives both as to the price at which silver may be purchased and the quantity which may be purchased to furnish a fair demonstration as to what silver will do when relieved of the law-made discrimination which has worked continuously against it for the past 60 years.

One cannot study the history of silver since it was stricken down as money by the United States, England, France, and Germany, and at their behest by other nations of the world, without wondering what would have been the result on silver and on the money system of the world if as much had been done to preserve silver as to kill it.

The killing of silver reminds me of the essay of the English schoolboy on the Conquest of Ireland. His essay had the merit of more than brevity. The boy wrote: "The conquest of Ireland began in the year 1066 and is still going on." The killing of silver began in the year 1816, and, like the conquest of Ireland, is still going on. And in the year 1934 its resurrection is not only the livest of issues in the United States, but is an issue among the nations of the world.

WHAT IS PRIMARY MONEY?

In section 5 the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue silver certificates at not less than the cost of all silver purchased under the act, and maintain in the Treasury, as security for the silver certificates, silver bullion, and standard silver dollars of a monetary value equal to the face amount of the silver certificates issued, which certificates are made legal tender for all purposes, and are redeemable in silver.

Under this section silver may purchase itself with silver certificates issued in payment for it, which certificates are redeemable in silver, and the coined dollars and the silver certificates being made full legal tender for all debts, public and private. I say all this could be done under this section. If this is not primary money, what is primary money? Silver will stand on its own bottom. It will not lean upon or be redeemable in gold. It will expand the currency by giving gold a legal competitor. In my opinion, instead of artificially increasing the price of gold from $20.67 per ounce to $35 per ounce and then devaluing the gold dollar 40 percent, gold should have been left where it was and silver moved into the picture as a competitor. This would have been my method of reducing the value and the purchasing power of gold.

However, that is water which has run over the wheel. What we are now undertaking is less experimental and less of a departure from long-fixed standards than the gold policy. If silver, given a fair opportunity, does not accomplish for itself, for our monetary system, and for commerce what we expect of it, it will be the principal sufferer and a great issue will have been settled.

SILVER DEMAND NATION-WIDE

Mr. Speaker, if substantial silver legislation fails in this Congress, not legislation "to do something for silver" but legislation to do something for the monetary system of the country, something to put new life into it, or—if this bill is enacted and fails of administration, it requires no prophet to predict that in the next Congress action may be forced by the obvious Nation-wide demand for such legislation restoring silver as a primary money metal. All these bills were not introduced merely that a Member might get his name on a silver bill. They reflect a back-home sentiment for such action.

Nothing can stop silver in the Seventy-fourth Congress but a return of prosperity in 1934 without it. World-wide gold discoveries stopped it at the close of the last century, thus vindicating the quantitative theory of money held by Bryan. Mining experts, the leaders of the mining world, predict no such discoveries now. Bond issues and credit, the present media of exchange, cannot stop it; rather they accentuate the demand for it. In the minds of millions and in many sections of the country it is the most vital issue now before the Congress, the most potential of major political results.

THE ANVIL CHORUS

Another evidence of the great interest in silver is to be found among its enemies. You may follow the many financial writers whose columns, many of them sent out from Washington, fill the daily papers, and what is the chief burden of their refrains? It is true they swell the anvil chorus—in fact, they are not only the sopranos, but also the tenors, the altos, the bassos, and the fortissimos of the chorus—against N.R.A., A.A.A., the "brain trust", and all the activities of the recovery program. The ring of their hammers and chisels is heard throughout the land and furnishes brain food, or at least vocal food, for the reactionaries in both Houses of Congress.

All this is true, but if you will put a measuring stick on the columns you will find that the theme of "sound money" equals or exceeds in volume all other themes, and that the silver menace is threat no. 1 against sound money. I shall show later, out of the mouth of authority, what this sound money consists of; that it is a myth; that it is an abstraction; that it is a system of bank accounting based on debt and on confidence that the material resources of the country will one day enable the debts to be paid.

These financial columnists, who constitute themselves the watchdogs of the golden bull, although, perhaps, they have collars around their necks, seem to be obsessed with the delusion of an impending deluge of silver. To their distorted vision, silver is the crowning disaster which threatens the future prosperity of the country and the stability of its institutions. They have been having a hectic time of it. They were shell-shocked by the repeal of the gold-payment clause and went into delirium tremens with the devaluation of the gold dollar. But the sum of all villainies would be the remonetization of silver. Their poison pens flood the land. They emit endless columns about the freedom of the press, when what they mean is its freedom to perform the function of a loudspeaker on the cash register of big business. They know better than J. Pierpont Morgan what he wants, because Morgan has to put in a lot of time attending to his own business, while they make a living worrying about his troubles. They run to anticipate his wishes. If I only knew what they do not about money, I would consider myself an authority.

So both the friends and the enemies of silver, by their numbers and their activities, attest the vitality of the issue. Dead issues do not fill the calendars of Congress and the columns of the daily press.

NOW NO MONEY OF REDEMPTION—CREDIT ONLY, BASED ON DEBT

The opponents of silver legislation, as a last resort, claim that silver is not needed as money, and they point to the four and one-half billions of gold locked up in the Treasury and mathematically increased to seven and one-half billions by the devaluation act. They ignore the fact that this gold has been stripped of all monetary functions except its use in settling international trade balances by an act of Congress, not by Executive discretion, and the much more important fact that this gold had to be demonetized and locked up to prevent its flight from the country in the universal scramble to get hold of a wholly insufficient money metal. The demonetization of gold leaves the country without any metallic monetary base or money of redemption.

There is now no money in the sense of a currency having any intrinsic value. Intrinsic value! How that term carries the mind back to the days of the establishment of the gold standard. What a sweet morsel it was under the tongues of the advocates of the gold standard. Our money must have intrinsic value, and that was gold.

Now, a nation with double the population and 10 times the volume of business it then had, functions without any intrinsic-value money whatever. The money of intrinsic value has been demonetized and locked up in the vaults of the Federal Treasury. As a statutory fiction, the gold standard still prevails, because we can have a gold standard without a dollar in gold behind it, but the gold has been legally separated from the standard. Young America does not know what a gold coin looks like. Young America does not know except by hearsay that any such thing exists. All young America knows as money, and all that old America has as money, is a discredited metal called silver and printed paper, based on public debt and irredeemable in any kind of coin, excepting the silver certificates, which are redeemable in silver dollars worth about 40 cents.

THE EXPERT ON THE STAND

A most interesting discussion of money took place recently before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. Mr. A. E. Goldenweiser, director of statistics for the Federal Reserve Board, was a witness before the committee. The committee was following a suppositious transfer of $1,000,000 from the First National Bank of Chicago to the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago by means of a check or draft on the Chase National Bank, of New York City. When the check or draft finally reaches the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, the following colloquy occurs:

Senator THOMAS. When the reserve is finally located definitely in the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, where is that $1,000,000?

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. Well, the $1,000,000 never existed except as a credit.

Senator THOMAS. Who carries the credit at that time?

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. It would be the credit of whatever bank—the First National Bank of Chicago, you said? It would be a credit to the First National Bank of Chicago and would count as part of its reserves, and the First National Bank can draw it out if it wants to or it can use it as a reserve in case it desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the actual currency, the actual physical monetary value? Where is it located against that transaction? Who holds it? Where is it?

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. It does not exist, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Good Lord. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. Because we are doing a business in this country of $600,000,000,000 a year——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). With no money.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. With nothing but five billions of currency So that you can see that the great mass——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Then suppose that five billions of currency was withdrawn; suppose Senator THOMAS and I, or a group of us, could get hold of that five billions of currency, then what would become of all this credit business you have got?

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. If you took it out and kept on taking it out, the credit system would collapse. No system which is based on credit, the system that is functioning in this country, can exist if everybody wants to have cash.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have got exactly to the point that I have been sitting here waiting for you to get to. We have an expanded currency credit system based on such a small amount of actual existing money that if you see fit to withdraw or hold it you have just got to what we had here in this miserable money panic, because in your first chart you show that as the collapse of prices went on your so-called "circulation" increased.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, at the very peak of what you said was the actual currency in existence held by individuals; when that was at its peak commodity prices were at their very lowest.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. Correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Showing that confidence was destroyed and those that really owned the currency had withdrawn it; therefore you had no credit. That is as obvious as can be (pp. 77, 78).

Prior to this colloquy it had been pointed out by Mr. Goldenweiser that more than nineteen-twentieths of the business of the country is done by checks and with only about five billions of currency in existence at the time of the panic, but about sixty billion in bank deposits, or $12 on deposit for every dollar in existence. To carry the situation a bit further, the banks had in their vaults at the time of the panic less than $800,000,000—to be exact, 1⅓ cents per dollar. Perhaps the cent and a third is an exaggeration, as shown by the following question and answer:

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. If I recall correctly, all of the banks, member banks, and nonmember banks, and all the little banks, I think somewhere around a billion is what their till money usually amounted to.

Senator THOMAS. Two or three years ago the banks altogether had on deposit approximately 60 billions, a little less than 60 billions.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. Yes, sir.

Senator THOMAS. At that time the banks had in their vaults less than $800,000,000.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. That is right.

Senator THOMAS. Under our system no depositor has a single penny in any bank in America. Isn't that correct? He has a credit there for money.

Mr. GOLDENWEISER. I think that is essentially true; yes, sir.

He stated, however, that there was at least a billion dollars of excess currency now in the Federal Reserve banks, and that with the enormous money-issuing resources of the banks in the way of Government bonds, tens of billions of dollars in currency could be issued before bringing about an inflation such as they had in Germany and Austria and Russia. The Federal Reserve expert made it clear that Government bonds are money and that drafts and bills of exchange and checks are money; that any piece of paper that passes from hand to hand and is accepted as money, is money; and viewing money in this light the banks of the country are in a position to throw billions of dollars into circulation any day there is a call for it. It reminded me of "pigs is pigs."

Now, here is the fatal flaw in this great superstructure of credit, based on debt, and with such an immense debt base that the superstructure may overtop the Empire State Building. It is all stated by the expert in a seven-word sentence:

In the end it rests on confidence.

So here we have the great national asset, confidence. It is all a matter of promises to pay, whether promises of the Government, the bank, or the individual. When something happens to shake confidence, as it did in 1929, the structure is found to have no foundation. Everybody wants his money at once and nobody can get it. There is vastly too great a reach between cash and credit; 120,000,000 people to whom individually and collectively have been extended a credit estimated at more than $200,000,000,000, carrying on a business even in bad times reaching $600,000,000,000 annually, and in 1929 twelve hundred billion dollars, on a cash account of $5,000,000,000, all of which cash was only printed promises of the Government and of the banks to pay. At this point the credit system collapses, because, as explained by the expert, "no system which is based on credit, the system that is functioning in this country, can exist if everybody wants to have cash."

Just at this moment my eye fell on the following paragraph in a newspaper:

The real-estate-mortgage debt in the United States is $43,000,000,000, Frank C. Walker, director of the National Emergency council, estimated today.

The public debt—National, State, and local—is another $40,000,000,000. The industrial, commercial, and other debts exceed the sum of these fantastic figures. This enormous mass of debts is based on something more than confidence; it is based on mortgages on every tangible asset in the United States. It was explained by the Federal Reserve expert that the Federal Reserve has never turned down any demand for currency. All it wants is good collateral. The astronomical proportion of the debt structure of the United States throws some light on the trouble with the collateral. It is already mortgaged for more than it is worth. Obviously some other method must be devised to put cash in the dried-up arteries of credit. The issue is between the school which proposes a transfusion of new blood in the shape of silver and the school which proposes that the patient shall linger through a long period of convalescence from so-called "natural causes" and subject to the same diseases that brought him low.

ONE HUNDRED BILLIONS OF MONEY

I cannot dismiss this question of credit money, whose intrinsic value is 19 points confidence and 1 point cash, without one more reference to the testimony of the Federal Reserve expert. On page 92 of the hearings is to be found a chart which shows that in 1922, on reserves of $1,780,000,000, the banks were carrying $38,000,000,000 in deposits; that in 1929, on reserves of $2,360,000,000, they were carrying a deposit structure of $55,000,000,000, and that if these reserves were to be increased to $5,000,000,000 they would carry a deposit, meaning purely a book deposit, meaning merely a debt to depositors, in the inconceivable sum of $106,000,000,000, or $21 to $1, and this with no real money whatever under it. When the top blew off of that volcano, it would make the 1929 eruption look like a pinwheel. Like the explosion of Krakatoa, its dust would be settling over the world for a generation.

STUDY OF MONEY HAS JUST BEGUN

Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the history of monetary legislation money and commodity prices are being considered in connection with each other. The monetary policy is being studied and directed toward the goal of raising and stabilizing the commodity price level. It is clearly perceived that we cannot restore prosperity and a normal and healthful economic life with a hundred and fifty-cent dollar and a fifty-cent commodity. On March 4, 1933, the dollar, compared with the normal 1926 commodity price level, was worth $1.67, while the 800 commodities going to make up the price level were worth about 50 cents. It was with the avowed objective of bringing the dollar down and the commodity up to the 1926 price level, that the present gold policy was put into effect. The gold content of the dollar was cut to a fraction under 60 cents; that is, from 23.22 fine grains to 13.71 fine grains of pure gold. In other words, the value of the dollar was cut 40 percent. This had the effect of cheapening the dollar on foreign exchange, but so far as raising the domestic price level is concerned it produced results identical with taking the British pound sterling off the gold standard, which in a period of 2 years reduced the pound sterling 40 percent, but raised domestic commodity prices in England only 50 percent. A somewhat similar experiment in Sweden had the same result.

FROM WALL STREET TO WASHINGTON

The gold policy of the present administration has been a great, daring, and worth-while experiment. This policy, along with the stock-exchange and securities legislation and the rest of the recovery program, is accomplishing something momentous which perhaps many people do not realize. It is in effect removing the Capital of the United States from Wall Street to Washington. Whatever else may be said about the monetary policies and the other policies of the present administration, it cannot be said that they are being dictated from Wall Street. That road to ruin has been abandoned, although at a cost greater than all the wars in our history.

At the same time it must be said that the advocates of an enlarged currency through the remonetization of silver did not anticipate the reaching of the 1926 price level through gold devaluation, and are therefore not disappointed. It is their belief that it would have been less experimental, more susceptible of a return to what lawyers call the "status quo ante" in the event of failure, had gold been left just as it was and silver moved into the picture; that the best way to have cheaper gold was to give it its age-old competitor, silver—silver standing on its own bottom; silver purchasing itself and redeeming itself; silver not tied to or dependent upon gold. If such a plan had been tried and failed, God would still reign and the Government at Washington still live. Silver could be removed from the picture, and one more issue in American politics would be finally settled.

Mr. Speaker, I have injected very little partisanship into my utterances and actions in the Seventy-third Congress. I do not believe that I have once used the word "Republican", and certainly not in a derogatory sense. I have felt repeated irritation over the pettifogging and the piffling partisanship so dear to the hearts of certain Members on both sides of the aisle and so often in evidence in the debates—what I call wash day, when the dirty laundry is brought out and displayed to the galleries. I propose to use the word, however, and use it in a critical sense in connection with the minority report on this bill. The minority report is signed by 8 of the 9 Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means. Their main complaint is that the bill was not given sufficient consideration by the committee. This complaint was made about all the other major acts on the recovery program. Admitting the complaint to be true, I want to say two things: First, silver legislation has been debated in Congress for 60 years. It has been a subject of consideration throughout this Congress. The Member of Congress who does not know whether he is for or against silver legislation does not know enough to be a Member.

The House of Representatives has passed the Dies bill, the first silver bill to pass either branch of Congress since the Sherman Act 44 years ago, and passed it by an overwhelming majority. The Committee on Coinage favorably reported the Fiesinger bill over 2 months ago. The Senate in the special session only defeated the Wheeler complete remonetization bill by a vote of only 44 to 33, and in this session the Wheeler amendment was defeated in the Senate by the slim margin of 45 to 43. Silver legislation has been considered in the House Committees on Foreign Affairs, on Banking and Currency, and on Coinage, and in two or three Senate committees. There is no subject before the Seventy-third Congress which has received more consideration than the rehabilitation of silver.

Secondly, the same objection of want of committee consideration, and indeed of House consideration was made regarding the passage of the legislation repealing the gold-payment clause in $100,000,000,000 of bonds and contract obligations and the legislation demonetizing gold and reducing the value of the dollar 40 percent. Both of these radical departures from the fixed monetary policy of the past was opposed by the Republican minority as destructive of money and of the national credit. They were destructive of neither. All the dire prophesies made against the gold legislation have failed to materialize.

The outstanding comment on the action of the Republican minority on the Ways and Means Committee remains to be made. That comment is that they are opposed to all legislation for the expansion of the currency. They are for the gold standard, established by their party. They struck down silver and they want to keep it down. Their idea of sound money is a piece of paper signed by a bank president, and their idea of fiat money is a piece of paper signed by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. They believe the banks should issue and control money instead of the Government. They would have been opposed to this bill no matter how long it was considered, or any other bill seeking to add silver to the monetary system of the country. They dream of a return to normalcy, which was defined by the author of the "New Dealers" as "a return to predatory corporate chicanery on a planetary scale." They yearn for the good old days when these predatory interests financed national campaigns in exchange for the privilege of plundering the people. It is my firm conviction that, in the language of an old cartoon, "Them days is gone forever."

The real issue which should concern the Republican Party is whether it can change its course. It cannot survive as the political agent of a dead order. It is unthinkable that the people of the United States should again suffer the reign of wealth in government. This reign and Republicanism have been synonymous. All things come to an end. Can the Republican Party adapt itself to change as has the Democratic Party? What field will it occupy? Today it stands athwart the unmistakable trend of the times. There is nothing new in its opposition to this legislation. It is opposed to all legislation seeking new ways out. It is a house divided against itself, one half moving toward a field which is already occupied and the other clinging to a position which is already lost. This is the issue of issues confronting the Republican Party.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this Congress left to its own resources would have passed a complete remonetization bill. This fact should be borne in mind in the administration of this law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader in respect to the program for the remainder of the day?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The first order of business is the vote on the silver bill.

Mr. SNELL. I just want to ask the majority leader about the program this afternoon after we vote upon the silver bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be called up, and that after that probably the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] will call up the rule upon his bill. After that the rule making in order the bill authorizing the District of Columbia Commissioners to borrow money from the P.W.A. will be called up.

Mr. SNELL. Since the majority leader received unanimous consent for an evening session to call the Private Calendar tonight, Members on this side of the aisle who look after that calendar have informed me that they are not ready to go forward. They did not know that the matter was coming up and they have not prepared the bills for tonight. Under those circumstances I think it would be foolish to have a meeting, because probably we would not get very far.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, we do not want to meet here and not do business as we did the other night.

Mr. SNELL. These gentlemen have been pushed pretty hard and if the gentleman could put it off 1 night there would be no objection. Of course, the gentleman has already obtained unanimous consent for the session tonight. I did not object at that time, but none of those gentlemen were on the floor at the time. They have since come to me and have told me that they are not ready and cannot proceed tonight.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, there are some of those private bills to which there is no objection and they can be disposed of in no time. That will give us that additional time. I think we ought to go on and get these little things out of the way.

Mr. BYRNS. Perhaps we can get together and talk about it later today.

Mr. SNELL. They say they will be ready by tomorrow night.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the time for the minority leader to have made the observation that he has was when the question was under consideration. The majority leader has arranged for tonight. We who had other engagements tonight have broken them, and we have arranged to be here tonight and have transferred those engagements to tomorrow night.

Mr. SNELL. No one knows better than the minority leader when the time to object is, but I wanted to cooperate, and I am telling the gentleman from Tennessee what the situation is at the present time so that we may cooperate. If the gentleman does not want to do that we can take care of our side all right.

Mr. BLANTON. All right, and we will take care of our side and we will be here tonight.

Mr. SNELL. I have not asked the gentleman from Texas any questions. I was talking to the majority leader.

Mr. BLANTON. And I have not asked the gentleman from New York any questions; I do not have to. I think I know as much about the situation as he does. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

A GOVERNMENT MARKETING CORPORATION FOR AGRICULTURE

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I call attention of the Members to a marketing bill which I have introduced, which is of great importance to the farmers and consumers of the country. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, the Agricultural Adjustment Act has now been in operation long enough to indicate how it is going to work. With the National Industrial Recovery Act it forms the major part of the administration's plan in the drive to lift the Nation out of the depression. Under the plan in its simplest terms industry is authorized to fix a reasonable price, based on cost, on all its products by reason of the codes, and is protected in that course from any price-cutting and underselling of competitors. It is a cost-plus proposition under Government supervision.

The effect of this has been that all factory products in the main have been stepped up in price, some 20 to 30 percent, and even higher, during the past year. On the other hand, the farmer has been asked to reduce his acreage in order to wipe out some of his surplus production, and he is paid a rental for these acres taken out of production. The money to pay this rental comes from a fund created by processing taxes on the commodity. This plan will increase prices on the whole that the farmer receives for his crops. It will likewise increase the price of all processed farm products to the consumer. The ultimate object to be attained is to give the farmer a parity price on his crop equal to that which prevailed between the years 1909 to 1914, inclusive.

WHY RECOVERY PLAN HAS FAILED

When this legislation was first proposed over a year ago, it was expected that a billion dollars could thus be transferred in each year from the consumers to the pockets of the producers of all farm crops. This, in fact, is the purpose of the allotment plan. There is no doubt but that this would have been the result had industry stood still during this period. However, the industrial recovery law was also enacted, which made it possible for all business and industry also to increase prices. Since industry is far better organized than agriculture, the effect was immediately felt by higher prices in business 3 months before agriculture could get started under its plan. What happened, as far as agriculture is concerned, was well expressed by a farmer constituent of mine, as follows: "When the whole recovery program was worked out, and got under way about mid-July last year, overalls were selling at the store for $1.05 a pair, and wheat was worth at the elevator 64 cents a bushel. Today overalls are worth $1.49 a pair, and wheat has gone down to 59 cents a bushel." The economic benefit is pretty hard for the farmer to see under these conditions.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics recently reported that the index of prices received by farmers declined 2 points during the month ending April 15. The index was 74 on April 15, 1934, compared with 55 on April 15, 1933. The index of prices paid by farmers was 120 on April 15, 1934, which was exactly 19 points higher than a year ago. Thus practically every advantage so far obtained by the operation of the crop-reduction laws has been wiped out for the farmer by the workings of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

LIMIT COSTS OF DISTRIBUTION

A second and more important reason for the failure of the program to be of greater aid to the farmer is the fact that no method has been provided to lessen or control the costs of distribution. Instead, costs have been added to this operation. Both producers and consumers have long complained against the charges and commissions of middlemen. The principal incentive for the organization of the cooperative movement among farmers has been the elimination of this cost. Yet, under the administration act, as now enforced, this spread, or cost has grown greater, rather than diminished. Not only does it cut down the total amount paid producers in the aggregate for their products by limiting total production but it also reduces the buying power of their customers by raising the price. In other words, the recovery program, when viewed as a whole, is somewhat of an anomaly, or self-contradictory proposal. Congress has given industry the right to fix prices on its products to include all costs and a reasonable profit—a sort of cost-plus guaranty. On the other hand, it has given agriculture a hoped-for parity price as of the pre-war period without regard to the increased overhead of debts, interest, taxes, and all other living expenses. Under these circumstances, and unless further steps are taken, the experiment seems bound to fail in the long run.

CREDIT FOR FARMERS

Congress has also set up the Farm Credit Administration, which proposes to refinance all farm debts, both on land and chattel security, and guarantees the payment of interest and principal to the investor. Today, the Government finds itself in this position: Its most productive plant is engaged in a work, farming, which cannot help but operate at a loss under existing laws in the recovery set-up, and it obligates itself to pay those losses insofar as they are represented by farm loans. Of necessity, many of the farmers must default in payments of their interest and principal as it falls due, if they are forced to operate on a restricted parity price for the crops they sell, while everything they must buy in order to produce these crops is sold to them at a profit. The selling and buying prices are upon two different bases, and the farmer is at a constant disadvantage.

There has long been a wide margin between producer and consumer in the prices of farm products. Even before the World War, farmers protested against the low prices paid them for many of the things they raised. They realized that they did not receive a sufficient share of what the consumer paid. At the same time the consumer felt that he was being overcharged. Studies made by economists at various times indicate that the farmer received, on the average, about one-third of the consumer's dollar. Or, putting it another way, for every dollar of food products sold by the farmer, the consumer had to pay about $3. In 1929 the consumers of the United States paid approximately $24,000,000,000 for their food products. The producers received but $9,000,000,000 for those same products, and the difference in price was added by the distributors.

Many people are of the opinion that the largest part of this marketing bill is due to exorbitant transportation charges. This we find is not the case, however, for freight charges are one of the lesser items of distribution costs. They amount to less than $4,000,000,000 annually for the Nation. While the disparity in prices has been noticeable for years, it has grown markedly of late years. It is a fundamental cause for the failure of agriculture to operate on a paying basis.

STUDIES OF CONSUMERS' COUNSEL

A division known as the "Consumers' Counsel" has been created within the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, at the head of which is Dr. Frederick C. Howe. Under his able direction some very valuable work has been done for both consumers and farmers in studies of the marketing problem. Not the least important of the disclosures made is the fact that during all this depression, while both producer and consumer have been suffering, the middlemen, the distributors, and processors have been making substantial profits. Back in the boom days of 1928 and 1929 the distributors and processors were getting 52 cents out of every dollar spent for 14 of the most necessary food products. With the depression, prices and wages fell. The income of laboring men of the United States was $22,000,000,000 less in 1932 than in 1929. This reduced pay roll for labor did not seriously affect the profits of middlemen. They continued to get about the same profit each year. The distributors paid the farmers less money for the food they raised and also took a greater profit from the consumers. In March 1933 the distributors took 69 cents of the consumer's dollar and, in the main, increased their percentage of profits, even at the lowest point of the depression. Prices of food products have gone up slightly since 1933, owing in part to Governmental influences, and we find that the distributor's share of the consumer's dollar in March 1934 was 62 cents, a slight drop in his profits from the previous year. Of course, this amount is out of proportion to the service performed.

In many cases the farmer does not receive the benefit of the processing taxes placed on the basic commodities and paid by the consumer. Too often it is taken out of the farmer's price, while at the same time it is added to that charged the consumer. Some distributors have used it as an excuse for increasing their profits instead of merely passing on the exact amount of the tax to the final consumer.

When we break down the principal food products into classes, we find a wide disparity in the amount the producer receives of the consumer's dollar. For instance, in poultry and eggs 56 percent of the dollar paid is returned to the farmer, probably due to more direct marketing methods. Likewise, on dairy products he gets about 50 percent, but on wheat and other grains we find the greatest disparity. In these commodities the farmer gets as little as 21 cents of the dollar paid by the consumer.

RESTORE AGRICULTURE WITH BETTER PRICES

The Department of Agriculture has submitted figures which show that the processing tax on wheat amounts to the value of about an ordinary slice and a quarter of bread, but that in the larger cities the bakers have increased their prices because of the tax, they say, enough to cover not only the tax but the entire cost of the whole loaf. The effect of the present system of marketing, coupled with low prices, has been to break down all agriculture.

Farmers have been forced to produce crops at a loss, have been forced to go into debt, and have been unable to buy the usual quantity of factory goods. They have almost ceased to be consumers of industry except for the most meager necessities. They have quit building new homes, so are not in the market for lumber, hardware, cement, and other building materials. They are making the old machinery do a few years more, and are wearing the old clothes far beyond the normal length of time. And when we reflect that at least 50,000,000 of our people are directly dependent on agriculture for a livelihood, we can well understand the depressing effect on industry when they have to stop or curtail their buying of factory products. It has a direct effect upon labor and upon manufacturing enterprises. The best customers of industry are taken out of the market because of economic stress. I believe it can be truthfully stated that the greatest cause of this depression is due to the economic losses of farmers, and its continuation is augmented by growing and prolonged losses from year to year. There is no doubt that a restoration of better prices for farm products would immediately lift us out of the depression, return industry to its normal capacity, and put to work most of the men now idle.

PRESENT SYSTEM EFFICIENT IN PRODUCTION

There are those who dolefully say that our present economic system is in complete collapse and beyond all hope of repair. They predict that we are "on the road to Moscow", and every move of the new deal and the so-called "brain trusters" but confirms that view. They insist that it will be impossible for us to lift ourselves out of the depression and that such relief as is being extended is only temporary with a probable bigger collapse later on. I do not agree with these contentions. I fully realize that many serious mistakes have been made and vicious practices have crept into the conduct of our business life. Wild speculation and exorbitant profits have been permitted. The wealth of the Nation has become concentrated in the hands of a few men to a degree never known in the history of the world. Despite all these inequalities and the cruelties of the capitalistic system, as carried on by American business, it has, nevertheless, proved to be one of the most effective productive machines ever devised by civilized man. Our present-day efficiency in production is not equaled anywhere in the world. The idea of profit has been allowed to dominate, and in consequence we have failed to improve our marketing and distributing system in keeping with our superior production. The volume of business done in the United States is almost as great as that done by all the rest of the world. In 1929 it amounted to twelve hundred billion dollars' worth. No other nation even approaches this marvelous and astounding total.

The problem facing our economists—and it is a governmental problem—is to lower costs of distribution of our products and at the same time secure a more equitable distribution of our wealth.

GOVERNMENT EXPORT MARKETING CORPORATION IS THE SOLUTION

I have introduced in the House a bill to correct the abuses of our present marketing system, H.R. 8981. This bill was first introduced in Congress in 1923 and was known as the "Norris-Sinclair bill", having been offered by Senator NORRIS and myself. It formed the basis for the several marketing measures that were subsequently considered following that period of falling prices of farm commodities, which finally culminated in the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill. The Norris-Sinclair bill was favorably reported by the Agricultural Committees of both House and Senate, but failed of enactment.

In a speech in the House on May 22, 1924, just 10 years ago, I said:

Unless this bill is passed or something of this kind is done, we are going to see the worst times that the United States has ever experienced.

I do not claim to be a prophet, but I think that everyone will admit the prediction has been fully verified. I have not changed my views as to the urgent necessity for the legislation, and in an effort to be helpful I have again presented my bill, somewhat revised in form, to supplement the legislation already enacted.

It is the duty of the Government to control the profits of distribution, just as it is the duty of the Government to limit and control the charges of transportation, the costs of public-service utilities, and the rate of interest on money. Farmers of the United States must get a price for their products equal to the cost plus a reasonable profit, and this must be accomplished without raising prices to consumers, who are already paying all and more than they can afford. Both must be protected from the inroads of the middleman. A solution of the distributing problem can be had under the provisions of my bill, which proposes to set up a Government export marketing corporation for the purchase and sale of farm products. Under the terms of the proposed legislation profits can be controlled within reasonable limits, congestion of markets can be prevented, and shipments will be directed to centers where the need for them exists. Thus, a great deal of waste can be avoided, and the benefits accrue to both producers and consumers.

CONCLUSION

It is now about 15 years since I introduced in Congress the first bill to stabilize the price of farm products. I think I may correctly say that I am a pioneer in the fight to restore agriculture to a paying basis, and that during all this period no move which promised any relief for that industry has failed of my active support. Despite every effort that could be put forth, both by farmers themselves and their friends here, for economic justice, their condition has grown steadily worse until we are today confronted by a situation so tragic and desperate as to beggar description. I am absolutely convinced that refinancing loans to farmers, no matter how low the rates, is not the solution of the problem. This will help, of course, but in order to pay any interest at all and to free themselves of the staggering burden of indebtedness, they must have a fair price on their products and an honest money system. My bill, H.R. 8981, will go a long way toward assuring fair prices. A sound money system can be had if Congress will exercise its constitutional authority and stabilize the value of money. Such a program will insure the return of prosperity on a permanent foundation, not only for farmers but also for the rank and file of the American people.

REPUBLICANISM AND DEMOCRACY CONTRASTED

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by myself at a luncheon and conference of the Republican Women of Virginia, at the John Marshall Hotel, Richmond, Va., on Tuesday, May 29, 1934:

The Republican Party represents today much more nearly the principles of Thomas Jefferson than does the socialistic Democratic administration at Washington, which stands for a huge centralized bureaucratic government, regimenting and controlling the daily lives and interfering with the business of millions of free Americans.

What has become of the Jeffersonian Democrats of the South, who for more than a century and a quarter have opposed a centralized Federal Government and stood for the rights and liberties of the individual, State rights, and against interference by the Government in the conduct of legitimate business?

I am reminded of the story alleged to have been told by Abraham Lincoln. He said two men started fighting with their overcoats on, and they fought so hard that they fought themselves into each others overcoats. It looks to me as if the Democratic Party has fought itself into the Republican overcoat of centralized government, and, not stopping there, has gone on away beyond that into State socialism, if not actual socialism.

The great State of Virginia gave to the country such fearless and able champions of freedom as Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson. It was Patrick Henry who, denouncing the tyranny of the English Government, uttered the immortal words, "Give me liberty or give me death", and it was Thomas Jefferson who wrote the Declaration of Independence, a new Magna Carta of liberty and representative government.

It was James Madison, John Marshall, and George Washington, all native Virginians, who were the strongest advocates of the Federal Constitution. Madison did more in framing the Constitution and securing its adoption than any of the founders of our Government.

Thank heaven, the voice of Virginia in the Halls of Congress is still fearless and outspoken against those who would tear down the Constitution and destroy the constitutional rights and liberties of the American people. I admire the courage and patriotism of Senator CARTER GLASS, who in the great crisis with which our free institutions are threatened does not hesitate to place the welfare of his country above the socialistic doctrines of his party, even though he stands almost alone. There are only a handful of Senators, including his colleague, Senator BYRD, who dare openly to fight the unsound and un-American projects and brainstorms of the "brain trust."

The Representatives in the House from Virginia, while still giving lip service to Thomas Jefferson, have voted on almost every occasion with the "brain trust" to repudiate Jeffersonian principles. I hope that the Republicans of Virginia will nominate their ablest and strongest candidates for Congress, and come out openly in defense of Jeffersonian principles of government, and, above all, for the preservation of the integrity of the Constitution, to the end that the blessings of liberty and our representative form of government shall be safeguarded and passed on to future generations of free Americans.

I do not believe that Virginians, irrespective of partisanship, will compromise with alien ideals or socialism in any form. Socialism was not voted into power in the last Presidential election. If the American people had wanted socialism they would have voted for Norman Thomas, who received less than a million votes.

We are in the midst of a social and economic revolution, call it a new deal or socialism by another name, in which our free institutions and the rights and liberties under the Constitution are being continually scrapped. The right to ownership in private property and the profit system is being challenged and undermined by various socialistic members of the "brain trust", and for the first time in American political life class hatred is being cultivated and broadcasted from Washington.

Soak the rich, and even the people of moderate means, is the order of the day. Socialism is in the process of being tried out by the Democratic administration under the guise of reform and radicalism. It is perhaps just as well to try out some of the unsound theories of socialism under a Democratic administration, as they cannot succeed in a free country without applying compulsion, coercion, and force.

The Democratic Party is rapidly demonstrating its incapacity to govern within the bounds of reason and moderation. As a national party it has actually shown itself unfit and disqualified for future public support on its record of repudiation of practically all of its campaign pledges, including reduction of 25 percent in the running expenses of the Government, balancing the Budget, and the practice of economy.

The Republican national platform of 1908, in contrasting republicanism with democracy is almost prophetic of the events that have developed a quarter of a century later. The following is an extract from the Republican platform at the end of Theodore Roosevelt's administration—and I only wish we had more men in public life of his high degree of courage and steadfast Americanism; he would have never compromised with the "brain trust", socialism, or attacks on the Federal Constitution:

"REPUBLICANISM AND DEMOCRACY CONTRASTED

"Beyond all platform declarations there are fundamental differences between the Republican Party and its chief opponent, which makes one worthy and the other unworthy of public trust. In history the difference between Democracy and Republicanism is that one stands for debased currency, the other for honest currency; the one for free silver, the other for sound money; the one for free trade, the other for protection; one means doubt and debt, the other confidence and thrift.

"The present tendencies of the two parties are more marked by inherent differences. The trend of democracy is toward Socialism, while the Republican Party stands for a wise and regulated individualism. Socialism would destroy wealth, Republicanism would prevent its abuse. Socialism would give to each an equal right to take, Republicanism would give to each an equal right to earn.

"In line with this tendency the Democratic Party today believes in Government ownership, while the Republican Party believes in Government regulation. Ultimately, Democracy would have the Nation own the people, while Republicanism would have the people own the Nation."

Let us give business a chance, remove the heavy hand of Government control and regimentation. Let the Government encourage business to make reasonable profits instead of placing private enterprise in a strait-jacket. Let the Government say to business, "We are with you and not against you", and stop advocating Government ownership and Socialism. Confidence would be restored overnight and the wheels of industry would begin to hum and provide employment for millions of loyal American wage earners.

The work of the pioneers in our Western States did not spring from regimentation and collectivism but from courage and the indomitable energy of individual Americans. We have already gone too far toward socialism. We should curtail rather than extend the shackles on business, and restore individual effort and incentive which has made our country the greatest, richest, and freest republic in the world.

How shall we regain control of the Nation in 1936? It cannot be done by remaining supine or by looking backward. Times and economic conditions have changed; we must not only look forward, but stand for progressive legislation and for social and industrial justice under the Constitution. We cannot and ought not to succeed on a reactionary record. We should seek a square deal for capital and labor and for all men and women, no matter what their position in life. The public welfare must be our aim and the happiness of the greatest number our goal.

We should recall and welcome to our ranks those millions of voters who, from one cause or another, left us, due to unemployment and financial distress in 1932, and in that way we shall be enabled to restore the Government to a constitutional form based on the traditions, principles, and fundamental ideals as enunciated by Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt.

The sound and constructive principles of the Republican Party are more needed today than ever before to restore business confidence and to start the wheels of industry in order to provide employment for American wage earners, and we shall welcome the support of constitutional Democrats, when they get ready to turn away from state socialism back to the principles of Jefferson and Jackson and the Constitution of the United States.

There are some pussyfooting Republicans who oppose any criticism of the "brain trust" and would adopt a mealy-mouthed, timorous policy on the new deal. The Roosevelt honeymoon cracked up on the Farley air-mail fiasco 3 months ago. It is time that the Republicans exposed the socialistic and unconstitutional features of the new deal. Prominent Democrats are beginning to squirm and to openly protest the radical departure from tried American principle sand ideals of government. Republicans are not the only critics of the administration policies.

In view of the fact that we are in the midst of the baseball season, I submit the following baseball team of heavy-hitting Jeffersonian and constitutional Democrats to stack against the the "brain trust" champions in the new-deal league:

Pitcher—Alfred E. Smith, of New York.
Catcher—John W. Davis, of West Virginia.
First base—William Randolph Hearst, of California.
Second base—Owen D. Young, of New York.
Shortstop—Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, captain.
Third base—Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri.
Left field—Gov. Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts.
Center field—Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina.
Right field—Senator M. M. Logan, of Kentucky.
Manager—John N. Garner, of Texas.
Assistant manager—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland.
Publicity agents—Walter Lippmann, H. L. Mencken, James P. Warburg.
Coach—Joseph P. Tumulty, of New Jersey.
Substitutes—Representative George B. Terrell, of Texas; Representative James R. Claiborne, of Missouri; Hon. Bainbridge Colby; Hon. Newton D. Baker; Gov. Eugene Talmadge, of Georgia; Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York; Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts; Senator Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland; Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma; and Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia.

SILVER

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does that replace the vote on the silver bill?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I made a similar request a few days ago and was denied the privilege. I should like to know whether if we make no objection now I might be granted 5 minutes after the close of business today?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time for the purpose of propounding an inquiry to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] as to what will become of the original Dies bill should the bill which we are now considering and which we are about to vote on be passed by the House and be sent to the Senate and become a law?

What will become of the original Dies bill that was passed by this Congress on March 19?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is within the jurisdiction of the other body. I cannot tell what disposition will be made of it over there. Moreover, I am not prepared to speak for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], who can usually speak for himself. I have no definite knowledge as to what the Senate may intend to do.

Mr. PARSONS. I should like to make the same inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the author of both these bills.

Mr. DIES. Of course, the original bill was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, with the Thomas amendment, and it is now on the calendar. No one can predict what will happen in the Senate. It is impossible to give the gentleman a definite answer as to what the action of the Senate will be.

Mr. PARSONS. I feel very strongly upon this silver question. In my humble judgment, the original Dies bill was a better bill for the agricultural interests of the country than the bill that is now before the House. I am going to support this bill this morning for one reason only, and that is to give the Secretary of the Treasury an opportunity to carry out the provisions and mandatory legislation that we are placing in his hands. I am going to vote for it with some misgivings, but, as I say, with this in mind, to give him an opportunity to see if he will do something with silver. If he fails to carry out the provisions that are placed in his hands, then I prophesy that in the next Congress the silver question will forge to the front, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] stated, or there will be a new Secretary of the Treasury, and there will be different activities as far as silver is concerned, in the next Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman realizes that the Senate has a choice between the two bills. Both of them will be deposited on their doorstep.

Mr. PARSONS. But if the Senate brings forth the original Dies bill, it can also pass it and send it to the White House if it so chooses.

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MOTT. In its present form, I am.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I believe the question should be, "Does the gentleman intend to vote against the bill?" We have had that thrashed out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is true. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill and will he vote against it?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it has been necessary to ask whether he is going to vote against the bill. The only thing that is required is, "Is he against the bill?"

The SPEAKER. That is one way of finding out.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is not opposed to the bill, I will offer the motion to recommit, because I am against the bill and I intend to vote against it.

Mr. MOTT. I am not particular how the question is asked. If it is necessary in order to offer a motion to recommit to say that I intend to vote against the bill, I will say that I am opposed to the bill and that I intend to vote against it.

Mr. SNELL. It never has been asked in this way in the world.

The SPEAKER. That is the way to find out. Gentlemen of the minority have stated they were against a bill and then have voted for the bill. The Chair is going to find out hereafter whether they are against the bill or not.

The Chair understands the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] is opposed to the bill and will vote against it.

The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. MOTT: I move to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back to the House with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 10, after the word and figure "section 3", strike out the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. Whenever and so long as the proportion of silver in the stocks of gold and silver of the United States is less than one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase silver, newly mined in the United States, for present or future delivery, at such rates, at such times, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem reasonable and most advantageous to the public interest: Provided, That all such silver shall be purchased with silver certificates, and not otherwise, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue silver certificates for that purpose in such denominations as he may from time to time prescribe in a face amount not less than the cost of all silver purchases under the authority of this section.

"Strike out section 6 and all subsequent sections of the bill."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion to recommit. As I understood it, it does not state to whom the bill is to be recommitted, or whether it is to be reported back or not.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert, following the word "bill", the words, "to the Ways and Means Committee."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the words will be inserted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCGUGIN) there were—ayes 59, noes 163.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 269, answered "present" 2, not voting 89, as follows:

Mr. BEEDY changed his vote from "yea" to "present."

Mr. DONDERO changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I had an agreement with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. TAYLOR, to pair with him. In order to effectuate that agreement, I now desire to withdraw my vote and pair with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. TAYLOR, he to be recorded as "nay" on this vote, and I to be recorded as "yea" on this vote.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with my colleague from Michigan, Mr. MUSSELWHITE. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if he were present, I withdraw my vote of "yea" and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. SNELL asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 263, nays 77, answered "present" 1, not voting 90, as follows:

Mr. Lea of California with Mr. Gasque.
Mr. Montague with Mr. Jeffers.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with my colleague from Michigan, Mr. MUSSELWHITE. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." Consequently I withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I have an agreement with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. TAYLOR, with reference to a pair. I now ask that my vote be withdrawn and that the RECORD show Mr. TAYLOR paired as voting "yea" and myself as voting "nay."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I cannot qualify; but if permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DOUGHTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CARY, is absent on official business. If he had been present, he would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit, and on the passage of the bill he would have voted "aye."

My BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNING, is necessarily absent today, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HARTER, has also been excused. If they were here, they would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BRENNAN, is necessarily absent. If he had been here, he would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to all this, although it is out of order.

FEDERAL INSURANCE OF DEPOSITS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, with House amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and Mr. LUCE.

EVENING SESSION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, this morning the House agreed to the request I submitted that it should be in order for the House to take a recess until 7:30 this evening for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, unobjected to, beginning at the star. In view of the statement of the minority leader, I now ask unanimous consent that this order be rescinded and that on tomorrow it shall be in order for the House to recess until 7:30 o'clock in the evening for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, unobjected to, beginning at the star.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when on short notice the request was made this morning for a session tonight, I called our majority leader's attention to the fact that some of us had made arrangements to work in our offices tonight, and asked him if he would put it off until tomorrow night. The minority leader was present, because he made some facetious statement about social engagements. The minority leader made no objection, and I stated I would go along with the majority leader, regardless of personal inconvenience. We rearranged our program to be here. The agreement was entered into. Later the gentleman from New York intimated that if we were in session this evening there would be no business transacted.

Mr. SNELL. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Was that intimation made?

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is what the majority leader told me, the intimation meant we would not be able to do business this evening, and whenever the majority leader tells me he cannot do business because you will not let him, I am willing to go along with him and help him.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the regular order is demanded, I ought to object. I should like to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BLANTON. We are going to rearrange our program and we are going along with our majority leader and we are going to see to it that some business is transacted.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

JOHN P. LEONARD

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 541) for the relief of John P. Leonard, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. COFFIN, and Mr. GOSS.

WILLIAM G. BURRESS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2439) for the relief of William G. Burress, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. COFFIN, and Mr. GOSS.

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment insert the following: " : Provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Richard A. Chavis by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admission: And provided further, That he shall be entitled to such medical care as is usually accorded inmates of such home while resident therein."; and the Senate agree to the same.

LISTER HILL,
CHESTER THOMPSON,
VINCENT CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
MARCUS A. COOLIDGE,
ROSCOE C. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis receded and agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment to the Senate amendment. Under the Senate amendment the beneficiary of the bill would have been entitled only to domiciliary care. The amendment to the Senate amendment insures the beneficiary of the bill not only domiciliary care but medical care as well. In view of the fact that the beneficiary of the bill served only a short time in the Army and was absent without leave at the time his company was mustered out of the service, it is felt that the agreement of the conferees accords the beneficiary full consideration.

LISTER HILL,
CHESTER THOMPSON,
VINCENT CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES T. MOLL

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3985) for the relief of Charles T. Moll, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 5, after "Charles T. Moll", insert "who served in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry."

Line 7, strike out "9th day of August" and insert "3d day of January."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

BOARD OF INDETERMINATE SENTENCE AND PAROLE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932, a similar House bill having been passed by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new section to be numbered "10" and to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The Board of Parole created by the act of Congress entitled 'An act to amend an act providing for the parole of United States prisoners, approved June 25, 1910, as amended', approved May 13, 1930, shall have and exercise the same power and authority over prisoners convicted in the District of Columbia of crimes against the United States and now or hereafter confined in any United States penitentiary or prison (other than the penal institutions of the District of Columbia) as is vested in the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole over prisoners confined in the penal institutions of the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRE ESCAPES IN CERTAIN BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2623) to amend the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended, a similar House bill having been passed by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building three or more stories in height, constructed or used or intended to be used as an apartment house, tenement house, flat, rooming house, lodging house, hotel, hospital, seminary, academy, school, college, institute, dormitory, asylum, sanitarium, hall, place of amusement, office building, or store, or of any building three or more stories in height, or over 30 feet in height, other than a private dwelling, in which sleeping quarters for the accommodation of 10 or more persons are provided above the first floor, to provide and cause to be erected and fixed to every such building one or more suitable fire escapes, connecting with each floor above the first floor by easily accessible and unobstructed openings, in such location and numbers and of such material, type, and construction as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine; except that buildings designed and built as single-family dwellings, and converted to use as apartment houses, in which not more than three families reside, including the owner or lessee, or rooming houses in which sleeping accommodations are provided for less than 10 persons above the first floor, not more than three stories, nor more than 40 feet in height, and having a total floor area not more than 3,000 square feet above the first floor, shall be exempted from the provisions of section 1 of this act; and except that buildings used solely as apartment houses, not more than three stories, nor more than 40 feet in height, so arranged that not more than five apartments per floor open directly, without an intervening hall or corridor, on a fire-resistive stairway, 3 feet or more in width, enclosed with masonry walls in which fire-resistive doors are provided at all openings, shall be exempted from the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building already erected, or which may hereafter be erected, in which 10 or more persons are employed at the same time in any of the stories above the second story, except three-story buildings used exclusively as stores or for office purposes, and having at least two stairways from the ground floor each 3 or more feet wide and separated from each other by a distance of at least 30 feet, from one of which stairways shall be easy access to the roof, to provide and cause to be erected and affixed thereto a sufficient number of the aforesaid fire escapes, the location and number of the same to be determined by the Commissioners, and to keep the hallways and stairways in every such building as is used and occupied at night properly lighted, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, from sunset to sunrise.

"SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building used or intended to be used as set forth in section 1 of this act where fire escapes are required, or any building in which 10 or more persons are employed, as set forth in section 2 of this act where fire escapes are required, also to provide, install, and maintain therein proper and sufficient guide signs, guide lights, exit lights, hall and stairway lights, standpipes, fire extinguishers, and alarm gongs and striking stations in such locations and numbers and of such type and character as the Commissioners may determine; except that in buildings less than six stories in height, standpipes will not be required when fire extinguishers are installed in such numbers and of such type and character as the Commissioners may determine.

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to issue such orders and to adopt and enforce such regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes and carry into effect the provisions of this act, and to require any alterations or changes that may become necessary in buildings now or hereafter erected, in order properly to locate or relocate fire escapes, or to afford access to fire escapes, and to require any changes or alterations in any building that may be necessary in order to provide for the erection of additional fire escapes, or for the installation of other appliances required by this act, when in the judgment of the Commissioners such additional fire escapes or appliances are necessary.

"SEC. 5. Each elevator shaft and stairway extending to the basement of the buildings heretofore mentioned shall terminate in a fireproof compartment or enclosure separating the elevator shaft and stairs from other parts of the basement, and no opening shall be made or maintained in such compartment or enclosure unless the same be provided with fireproof doors.

"Such buildings as are used solely for office buildings above the second floor and defined under the building regulations of the District of Columbia to be fireproof are exempted from the requirements of this act as to fire escapes, guide signs, and alarm gongs; but when the face of a wall of any such fireproof building is within 30 feet of a combustible building or structure, or when the side or sides, front or rear of such building or structure faces within 30 feet of a combustible building, or contains a light or air shaft or similar recess within 30 feet of a combustible building, then each and every window or opening in said wall or walls shall be protected from fire by automatic iron shutters or wire glass in fireproof sash and frames.

"SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful to obstruct any hall, passageway, corridor, or stairway in any building enumerated in this act with baggage, trunks, furniture, cans, or with any other thing whatsoever.

"SEC. 7. No door or window leading to any fire escape shall be covered or obstructed by any fixed grating or barrier, and no person shall at any time place any incumbrance or obstacle upon any fire escape or upon any platform, ladder, or stairway leading to or from any fire escape.

"SEC. 8. Any person failing or neglecting to provide fire escapes, guide signs, guide lights, exit lights, hall and stairway lights, standpipes, fire extinguishers, alarm gongs and striking stations, or other appliances required by this act after notice from the Commissioners so to do, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, and shall be punished by a further fine of $5 for each day that he fails to comply with such notice. Any person violating any other provision of this act or regulation promulgated hereunder shall be punished, upon conviction thereof, by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

"SEC. 9. The notice from the Commissioners requiring the erection of fire escapes and other appliances enumerated in this act shall specify the character and number of fire escapes or other appliances to be provided, the location of the same, and the time within which said fire escapes or other appliances shall be provided, and in no case shall more than 90 days be allowed for compliance with said notice unless the Commissioners shall, in their discretion, deem it necessary to extend their time.

"SEC. 10. Such notice shall be deemed to have been served if delivered to the person to be notified, or if left with any adult person at the usual residence or place of business of the person to be notified in the District of Columbia, or if no such residence or place of business can be found in said District by reasonable search, if left with any adult person at the office of any agent of the person to be notified, provided such agent has any authority or duty with reference to the building to which said notice relates, or if no such office can be found in said District by reasonable search, if forwarded by registered mail to the last-known address of the person to be notified and not returned by the post-office authorities, or if no address be known or can by reasonable diligence be ascertained, or if any notice forwarded as authorized by the preceding clause of this section be returned by the post-office authorities, if published on 10 consecutive days in a daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia, or if by reason of an outstanding unrecorded transfer of title the name of the owner in fact cannot be ascertained beyond a reasonable doubt, if served on the owner of record in the manner hereinbefore in this section provided, or if delivered to the agent, trustee, executor, or other legal representative of the estate of such person. Any notice to a corporation shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been served on such corporation if served on the president, secretary, treasurer, general manager, or any principal officer of such corporation in the manner hereinbefore provided for the service of notices on natural persons holding property in their own right, and notice to a foreign corporation shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been served if served on any agent of such corporation personally, or if left with any person of suitable age and discretion residing at the usual residence or employed at the usual place of business of such agent in the District of Columbia: Provided, That in case of failure or refusal of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental ,or control of any buildings specified in this act to comply with the requirements of the notice provided for in section 9, the Commissioners are hereby empowered and it is their duty to cause such erection of fire escapes and other appliances mentioned in the notice provided for, and they are hereby authorized to assess the costs thereof as a tax against the buildings on which they are erected and the ground on which the same stands, and to issue tax-lien certificates against such building and grounds for the amount of such assessments, bearing interest at the rate of 10 percent per annum, which certificates may be turned over by the Commissioners to the contractor for doing the work.

"SEC. 11. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in term time or in vacation, may, upon a petition of the District of Columbia, filed by its said Commissioners, issue an injunction to restrain the use or occupation of any building in the District of Columbia in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 12. As used in this act—

"(a) The terms 'aparment house', 'tenement house', and 'flat' mean a building in which rooms in suites are provided for occupancy by three or more families.

"(b) The term 'rooming house' means a building in which rooms are rented and sleeping quarters provided to accommodate 10 or more persons, not including the family of the owner or lessee.

"(c) The term 'lodging house' means a building in which sleeping quarters are provided to accommodate 10 or more transients.

"(d) The term 'hotel' means a building in which meals are served and rooms are provided for the accommodation of 10 or more transients.

"(e) The term 'elevator shaft' includes a dumbwaiter shaft.

"(f) The term 'fire escape' means an exterior open stairway or arrangement of ladders constructed entirely of incombustible materials and of approved design, or an interior or exterior stairway of fire-resistive construction with enclosing walls of masonry with fire-resistive doors and windows.

"(g) The term 'standpipe' means a vertical iron or steel pipe provided with hose connections and valves, so arranged as to supply water for fire-fighting purposes.

"(h) The terms 'fireproof' and 'fire resistive' have the same meaning as is ascribed to the term 'fire resistive' in the building code of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 13. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALFRED HOHENLOHE ET AL.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1932) for the relief of Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe by removing cloud on title, a similar House bill having been passed by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been passed by the House?

The SPEAKER. A similar bill has been passed by the House and this is a Senate bill.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Senate bill is identical with the bill passed by the House?

The SPEAKER. It is identical with the House bill which has passed the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by appropriate quitclaim deed to Alfred Hohenlohe, for life, with remainder to Alexander, Konrad, and Viktor Hohenlohe, their heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lots 68 and 69 in Abner B. Kelly, trustee's subdivision of part of square 628, as per plat recorded in liber W.B.M., folio 273, of the records of the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia. The true intent of this bill is to relinquish and abandon, grant, give, and concede any and all right, interest, and estate, in law or equity, which the United States is, or is supposed to be entitled to in part of said land by escheat because of the death of Catharine B. Hohenlohe, an Austrian citizen, unto her husband, Alfred Hohenlohe, and her minor children, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe, all Austrian citizens: Provided, however, That said Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe, as such aliens, shall sell or otherwise dispose of said interest within 10 years, as provided by the United States Code, title 8, section 73, or such further period as shall be secured to them by any treaty between the United States and the Republic of Austria, or be subject to the same liabilities of escheat proceedings on behalf of the United States as are provided by title 8, of the United States Code or as shall hereafter be provided by law, said period of 10 years to commence to run from the date on which said quitclaim deed shall have been executed by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant hereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On no. 1: Appropriates a lump-sum contribution amounting to a sum equal to $5,700,000 less 70 percent of the amounts expended under allotments from the Public Works Administration for sewers and park improvements.

On nos. 2 and 3: Appropriates $32,121, as proposed by the House, instead of $33,921, as proposed by the Senate, for personal services in the plumbing-inspection division.

On no. 4: Appropriates $84,672, as proposed by the House, instead of $86,130, as proposed by the Senate, for personal services in connection with the care of the District Building.

On nos. 5 and 6: Appropriates $37,492 for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, instead of $28,352, as proposed by the House, and $55,900, as proposed by the Senate, of which not exceeding $500 is made available for the purchase of samples, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 7: Appropriates $40,626, instead of $39,654, as proposed by the House, and $41,760, as proposed by the Senate, for personal services in the office of Superintendent of Weights, Measures, and Markets, the increase over the House figure being for the employment of an additional laborer.

CLARENCE CANNON,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
B. M. JACOBSEN,
D. LANE POWERS,
J. WILLIAM DITTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name may be included with the names of the other managers on the part of the House in this conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayers back home are patient and long-suffering. They let things go along as they have gone on here because they do not know about them. They do not know that the tax rate here for the Washington people this fiscal year is only $1.50 on the $100, with the assessed valuations reduced this year $80,000,000, and that with no bonded indebtedness, this District has a surplus this year of $5,000,000. They do not know that the gasoline tax here is only 2 cents on the gallon. They do not know that there is no income tax, and no inheritance tax, or that the license tax on trucks and fine limousines is only $1 yer year. They do not know that the 79,000 school children here get everything furnished free, including all books and equipment, from the kindergarten to the highest schools here, with no special school tax at all. They do not know that the water rate here per ordinary family is only about $7 per year, with 10,000 cubic feet the allowance. They do not know that after premises are once connected with the sewer system here, there is never any charge for such service thereafter. They do not know that there is no charge to the people for gathering and disposing of trash, ashes, or garbage. They do not know that in the residential sections and elsewhere the owners are not charged for the beautiful trees, but that same are furnished free, planted, nurtured, sprayed, and cared for and pruned and looked after for all time without any direct cost to the people.

The taxpayers of this Nation, Mr. Speaker, do not know that for many years the United States Government with their tax money out of the Federal Treasury paid half of all the civic expenses of Washington, paving streets, building bridges, street lighting, police service, fire service, school buildings, playgrounds, hospitals, school salaries, and school expenses, court expenses, and all other of the growing expenses of this city.

The people of this Nation do not know that this Government at the expense of the American people maintains here a big colored university, Howard University, upon which it has spent millions; that this Government maintains here a number of fine hospitals, for which Washington people pay nothing; that this Government has about 79,000 Federal employees here whom it pays regularly every 2 weeks with new money that when first spent is spent in Washington, and this big Federal pay roll keeps up the merchants, the theaters, the newspapers, the doctors, the lawyers, the dentists, and all the business interests of Washington.

The people of this Nation do not know that this city is constantly filled with hundreds of thousands of tourists who come here sight-seeing, to visit the various Government institutions, and spend large sums of money here, which is a bonanza for the commercial interests of Washington.

Some of these days these people back home are going to wake up and find out who in Congress is responsible, and they are going to require a reckoning. Some of these days they are going to require their Representatives in Congress to tell these high-hat spenders in Washington, who have been living off this Government for a quarter of a century or more, that, if they do not like the 10-mile square that has been set apart here for the Nation's Capital to transact the business of the Government, if they do not like it, let them get up and move out.

This 10-mile square has been dedicated to the Government's business. And it is going to remain so, and Congress is going to continue to control it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman ever given thought to ceding the 10-mile square back to the States?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it belongs to the United States. Our Government needs it for a Capital, in which to transact our business. We are going to keep it. Incidentally, we allow the people living here to acquire property and grow rich. They have become so arrogant, however, that the tail is wagging the dog. They have gotten so they think the whole District of Columbia is for their pleasure, profit, and benefit.

Now, I want to call your attention to what has been done. You have not an abler Member of this Congress than your chairman of the subcommittee, or a man who is better posted, or a man who is more fearless, or a man who knows more about the District government business, than our good friend the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

I think that he is one of the most valuable men in this Congress. [Applause.] He has brought you a conference report which not a single Member here should vote against.

A few years ago, when the expenses of this District got up to $20,000,000, everybody thought it was outrageous. For the present fiscal year this Congress last session gave to the District government for the fiscal expenses of the District $30,375,000. Congress adjourned after giving them that money.

Just as soon as Members of Congress went home, the Commissioners went down to the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. and altogether got gifts aggregating the huge sum of about $11,000,000 more—a pure gift. Your district or mine did not get that. Your State did not get that. When I say $11,000,000 from the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. that means nothing but public tax money out of the Treasury of the United States. That means the taxpayers' money, for it all comes out of the taxpayer's pocket.

They got $11,000,000 gifts additional to the $30,375,000. Congress did not pass on this $11,000,000; the Budget did not pass on it; the President did not pass on it; they went down here to P.W.A. and C.W.A. and got it.

In addition to that $11,000,000 gift, Secretary Ickes said, "You want $2,000,000 more for improvements, you say. When we let the money out to the States and the municipalities, the Government gives them 30 percent of it, and they have to pay back 70 percent. We will let you have the $2,000,000 more, but you will have to pay 70 percent of it back." Such a notation of having to pay back 70 percent of the $2,000,000 was entered by P.W.A. The P.W.A. expected the Commissioners to fix it up so that Congress would deduct it from the Federal contribution, because they cannot give bonds.

Back in 1878 Congress wisely provided by statute that the District of Columbia could not borrow money, because the District had gotten badly in debt. It was an outrageous debt which they got into, and there were connected with it graft and corruption. As I say, they got into debt and the Government of the United States had to step in and pay off that debt.

Then the Congress passed this law in 1878:

> There shall be no increase in the amount of the total indebtedness of the District of Columbia existing on June 11, 1878, and any officer or person who shall knowingly increase or aid or abet in increasing such total indebtedness shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years or by fine not exceeding $10,000.

Congress was so incensed about having to take this District out of debt at that time that it provided that if the District Commissioners should ever aid or abet in contracting another debt for this District they should be guilty of an offense and be punished with 10 years' confinement in the penitentiary or a fine of $10,000.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. That has been the law since 1878, and this District is a city of less than half a million people. To be exact, the last census gave Washington 486,000 people. A third of that population is colored. They have been drifting in here from everywhere. This is the only city in the United States that has not got an indebtedness. This is the only city in the United States that does not owe a dollar. This is the only city in the United States that since 1878 has not had to provide a sinking fund. This is the only city in the United States that has not got a big tax burden on the people. Since 1878 we have kept the city of Washington and the District of Columbia absolutely out of debt on a cash basis, because your people and mine have been taxed a great big sum to pay for it every year.

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; not at present. I am going to get these facts before you, and then I shall yield. After the people of the District had received this $11,000,000 gift, and after they had received the $2,000,000 advancement which Mr. Secretary Ickes expected Congress would take out of the Federal contribution this year to pay back the 70 percent of it, your committee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] came here and provided $32,650,657 as an appropriation for this year's budget. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate committee amended it 120 times. They put 120 amendments on the bill, and each amendment gave more money. If you were not familiar with District business, intimately familiar with it, it would take you 3 months to find out what all those amendments meant to the taxpayers of the District and the United States.

Mr. COX. And in every instance increased the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; increased the appropriation in every instance, and you can see by the hearings that someone asked the Commissioners, in substance, "Now, can you think of anything else that we can do for the District?" The Senate increased the bill to $37,678,459. I quote from the Senate hearings, which were begun on Wednesday, April 25, 1934, at page 371, from the testimony of Mr. Donovan, the District auditor:

> Mr. DONOVAN. Several days ago, Mr. Chairman, you asked the Commissioners to consider what, if any, further needs be provided for in this bill for 1935. The Commissioners have given consideration to that suggestion.

Just as if they had said, "Come on, boys, and hunt up something else that we can put in the bill in addition to this $37,678,459." That is what that means.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; to my good friend from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman does not mean to intimate that there is anybody in the District who would go out and hunt up something more that they could get out of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. BLANTON. The District administration here in the District Building, unfortunately, for years back, would take every dollar of money that you will give them and spent it each fiscal year. That is why we must protect the taxpayers. When the bill passed the House, we provided that 70 percent, not of the $11,000,000, which was a pure gift, but of the extra $2,000,000 advanced should be paid back to the Government out of the Federal contribution. We took it out of the Federal contribution. Immediately the Washington newspapers began to get busy preaching repudiation, and the District officials went over to the Senate and said, "Why, the District has not any power to borrow, there is no law for it, Congress passed a law that the District could not borrow, and, therefore we considered it a pure gift. We don't want to pay it back." And the Senate committee was willing not to make them pay it back.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says that the House passed a bill of $32,650,657 and that the Senate increased it to $37,678,479. Does not the gentleman think then that the Senate gave it back to them?

Mr. BLANTON. But we managers on the part of the House in behalf of the people of the country forced the Senate to recede and forced the District to pay back this $1,330,000, which would be 70 percent of the approximately $2,000,000 advanced. We took it out of the Federal contribution.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield in a few moments.

The contention was made that we had passed a law that the District could not borrow money, and therefore when the P.W.A. advanced it $2,000,000 we could not provide for them to pay this back like your municipalities in the States are paying it back.

All the money that St. Louis has gotten from the P.W.A. they have had to give bonds to pay it back 70 percent. Your municipalities back home have not gotten very much from P.W.A. Texas has not gotten much from P.W.A. It is 900 miles from Texarkana, where Mr. PATMAN lives, through my home city on Highway No. 1, to El Paso, where Mr. THOMASON lives, in Texas, and 900 miles from where Mr. JONES lives in Amarillo to where Mr. WEST lives in Brownsville.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask him a question on this amendment no. 1 that he is talking about?

Mr. BLANTON. I could not deny my good friend from Missouri anything. Anything I have he is welcome to. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In amendment no. 1 it is provided for a sum equal to $5,700,000 less 70 percent of the amounts expended under allotments from the Public Works Administration for sewers and park improvements. Suppose we pass the other bill that is pending, where a special rule has been provided, to borrow money from the Public Works Administration for the construction of a sewerage system; will this apply?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I thought so.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course it applies.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am glad to have the frank statement from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. This $2,000,000 is money they have already gotten. The other bill seeking to authorize the District to borrow $20,000,000 is another proposition. This $2,000,000 they have already gotten, of which Mr. Ickes said they must pay 70 percent back. They have spent it. We are making them pay back 70 percent. But they got pure gifts aggregating $11,000,000, none of which is to be paid back.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And they ought to pay it back.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course. And we House managers made them pay it back. Anybody except someone who has a special interest must admit that the District should pay back this $1,330,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mention me. I am interested.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that when my friend says that he is afraid the people are to be polluted by the Potomac waters, but George Washington was not polluted. He lived down here below Washington at Mount Vernon on the Potomac. The same system is in vogue here now that was in vogue in George Washington's day. We have been quite healthy here in Washington for the past 100 years.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What was the population of the District when George was around?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, wait, please, just a minute. I have been fair with my friend. I do need my time to discuss these facts.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What was the population of the District then?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that for the present I be not interrupted any further, until I present these facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas does not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. We had to enter that conference over there with a bunch of our Senator friends sitting around the table, all seeking to uphold their 120 amendments, every one of them increasing this bill, and our problem was to try to get together. You know what we had to do to get together. We had to recede and concur on many amendments.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Please let me finish. I do not want to take up too much time. Please let me make a connected statement. The Washington papers said that we were depriving tubercular patients, including little children, of needed facilities to combat tuberculosis. I have here pictures of the new $625,000 tuberculosis hospital that has not yet been opened that we have recently built here. It will be opened next month. I ask you to look at these pictures. We have built it. That is one of the finest tuberculosis hospitals in the country, and it was built at a cost of $625,000. It is brandnew. It will be open next month. It will provide 150 of the most modern beds in the country.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not forget to tell the House the total of the grant Congress has made to the District of Columbia of the people's money.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Ben Johnson, who served here for years, who was the distinguished chairman of the District Committee, who made one of the closest surveys of fiscal affairs any man has ever made, and who was an able man and a fair man, said one evening, "If you would check up all that this District government owes the Federal Government of the United States for funds it has gotten out of the Treasury, it would amount to $581,000,000."

Mr. COX. And that was 10 years ago?

Mr. BLANTON. That was about 10 years ago he made that statement. Do you know how much welfare aid has been given to the city of Washington during the present fiscal year? Eight hundred thousand dollars per month. Your home people do not get $800,000 per month from the Federal Government for relief.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am sorry. I will give the gentleman some facts that he should study over, if he will let me finish. They got $800,000 for April. They have gotten $800,000 for May.

Do you get that much back home? No. No; you do not; and I want to read you excerpts from some of the papers that you may know what they say as to who is getting this relief. I quote first from the Washington Post of April 29, 1934:

District of Columbia relief cost is laid to outsiders. Major Gotwals feels third of those drawing aid not natives.

Gotwals is of the opinion that there are 8,000 families receiving aid who are not entitled to it. The average budgetary allowance is $30 a month, which totals $240,000.

That is $240,000 given to persons not entitled to receive it.

I read now an article from the Washington Herald of April 29, 1934:

Major Gotwals claims a relief racket here. Declares third of 25,000 now on the rolls are not entitled to aid; bases assertion on surveys.

At least one-third of the 25,000 persons on the relief rolls are not entitled to aid, Maj. John C. Gotwals, Engineer Commissioner, said yesterday.

Commissioner Gotwals is confident thousands of persons now receiving District aid have come in here from other cities with the express purpose of living off of the District.

Hopkins yesterday allotted the sum of $400,000 to the District government for the relief needs during the first 2 weeks in May. At the same time Hopkins granted $71,432 for transient relief and $5,780 for student relief in the District.

Now, I want to read from the evidence of the Chairman of the Board of Commissioners in Washington; and I quote from our hearings. This is from the testimony of Commissioner Hazen, who said:

In the fiscal year 1934—

That is the year that will end June 30, 1934—

the tax rate of $1.70 which has been in effect during the fiscal years 1928 to 1933 inclusive, has been reduced to $1.50. This reduction represents a saving to the taxpayers in the fiscal year 1934 of $2,445,000.

This is a saving for Washington people. They talk about the assessed value being high. That is the most foolish yarn I have ever heard.

Last year with the reduced tax rate of $1.50 they also reduced the assessed value of the property.

Listen to this, the testimony of the Chairman of the Board of Commissioners, Mr. Hazen:

In the fiscal year 1934 the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000, a saving to the property owners here of $1,200,000 per year.

I call attention also to the following statement:

For the next year, 1935, it is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made.

They reduced the assessed valuation here for the present fiscal year $80,000,000, and they intend to reduce it again this year another $50,000,000.

Mr. BLOOM. They are not reducing the rents.

Mr. BLANTON. They have not reduced the rents; rents are higher here than in any other place in the country, and Congress is permitting it.

In addition to that Commissioner Hazen calls attention to the fact that the water rate has been reduced 25 percent, and this is in addition to the 10-percent reduction that is given the people of Washington for paying the water bills on time. Down in my State an ordinary family has to pay at least $5 a month for water; that is, $60 a year. Under the present system in the District of Columbia an ordinary family, an ordinary household, pays about $7 a year, or about 50 cents a month.

Let me remind you also that they increased the minimum water allowance to each family at that low rate from 7,500 cubic feet to 10,000 cubic feet, and this for about 50 cents a month per family. Your folks at home are paying for part of it.

Tomorrow a resolution will be presented to the House, adopted by the Committee on Rules by a divided vote of 6 to 5, in the face of that statute which has prevented the District of Columbia from borrowing any money since 1878, that will make in order this $20,000,000 loan bill.

What are you going to do with this bill when it comes up, in the face of all these facts? Here is a tax rate the lowest in the country, but they are fixing to cover up that. The newspapers are trying to arrange it. They are saying that with this Washington tax rate reduced so low the people of the country are going to kick about it; so they have a scheme to take care of it. They say, "We will decrease the assessment; we will cut the assessment in half and raise the rate."

A piece of property worth $20,000 that is now assessed for $10,000 will, under their plan, be assessed for $5,000. Let me show you what the Washington paper said about that. I read from the Washington Daily News.

That is the only other Washington paper, besides the splendid Washington Star, that is a decent publication in Washington. The News, while small, is getting more decent every day. If it were not for the Washington Star and the Washington News, we would not have a dependable paper in the city of Washington. Notice what this News says. In big headlines there is the statement:

Plan offered to end criticism of District of Columbia lump sum. Senator THOMAS advises cut in assessments and tax rate boost.

Larger annual Federal contributions to District expenses are contemplated in a plan outlined to the Commissioners yesterday by Chairman THOMAS, Democrat, of Oklahoma, of the Senate District Appropriations Committee.

THOMAS' plan would provide for a reassessment of property for tax purposes on a lower scale.

This would mean that in the case of property now valued at $100, on which $1.50 in taxes is paid, the property might be assessed at $50 and the tax rate increased to $3.

That is to do what? That is to keep the people in the States from kicking.

Mr. RICH. What people are kicking?

Mr. BLANTON. The taxpayers back home.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman tell us what he wants us to do and when the matter comes up?

Mr. BLANTON. It will come up tomorrow. We must kill this $20,000,000 loan bill tomorrow. This does Senator THOMAS an injustice, I am sure, because I do not believe he is in favor of such a plan. In Oklahoma City, in the Senator's State, they are paying about $7 instead of $1.50 per $100 tax. If he were in favor of a plan like that, how could he go back to Oklahoma and face those people?

Let me tell you something about this loan bill for $20,000,000 that you are going to take up tomorrow. Do you know where some of that money is going? Over in Virginia! I do not blame my friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who is a member of the Rules Committee, for getting this rule for his pet measure. He is getting a big handout. There is a lot of money to be spent in Virginia over in his district. I have served here with the man who preceded him in Congress, Hon. Walton Moore, a splendid fellow, who had the longest arm that I ever saw on any legislator. He reached into the Treasury time after time and took out more money for Virginia and his district than the State of Texas has received together in the history of our country. Mr. SMITH is a member of the Rules Committee. He helped vote out this rule on a divided vote of 6 to 5. I do not blame him. He is getting this for his district. Let me show you now how they will spend some of that $20,000,000.

Our splendid chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], had a fellow before us by the name of Mr. Finnan, who has just been made superintendent of some parks here in Washington. Here is the gentleman's testimony before our committee. He said that back in 1925 out in Colorado he was getting $90 a month. Then in 1931 he was receiving $1,800 a year, which is $150 a month. Then he was raised on up to $3,200, and then finally he was drawing $3,800. He happens to have a friend at court. I quote the following excerpts from what Mr. Finnan testified to:

Mr. BLANTON. Your salary now is $5,600?
Mr. FINNAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. And has been $5,600 since last October?
Mr. FINNAN. It has been $5,600 since last November 1, when I took office here.
Mr. BLANTON. Is there any movement on foot for you to take charge of what is known as the old Klingle House out here in Rock Creek Park?
Mr. FINNAN. Yes, sir; there is.
Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but there is a tentative understanding, is there not, for you to move into the house?
Mr. FINNAN. We are submitting an estimate now, Mr. BLANTON, to the Public Works Administration to give us enough money to restore the house.
Mr. BLANTON. When you first came here you paid $100 rent out in Chevy Chase, did you not?
Mr. FINNAN. Yes, sir; that is correct.
Mr. BLANTON. Now you are living at the Ontario, are you not?
Mr. FINNAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. And you are paying what?
Mr. FINNAN. $62.50.
Mr. BLANTON. You never paid that before since you first came into the service, did you?
Mr. FINNAN. No, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. Well, you have had architects and other people to go out there and look this house over and measure it for purposes of renovation?
Mr. FINNAN. For restoration.
Mr. BLANTON. And to arrange about putting in more bathrooms and things of that kind?
Mr. FINNAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLANTON. And you are going to spend $8,000 on it, are you not?
Mr. FINNAN. If the present plans, Mr. BLANTON, are carried out, it would be $11,000.

They brought Finnan here, formerly a little $90-a-month employee back in 1925 in Colorado, and increased his salary from $3,800 to $5,600 over night last November. They are taking this Klingle House away from a good Democrat and his family, who has had it for 15 years, and they are giving it to Mr. Finnan, and they are going to spend $11,000 of this loan money here to put in a bunch of new bathrooms out there for Mr. Finnan. We must kill that $20,000,000 loan bill tomorrow.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I was indeed surprised when the distinguished gentleman from Texas framed the indictment which he just did against the administration. Of all men who have been defenders of the present administration, to frame an indictment against the administration program for incompetency, laxity, and lack of due care in the administration of P.W.A. funds, so far as the District is concerned, the distinguished gentleman from Texas is the last one I had expected would do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I protect the President at all times, but I will not protect the bureau chiefs when they are wrong.

Mr. DITTER. You cannot blame the District if the administration is so careful as to inquire whether there are other things which they desire here. I venture the suggestion, if Texas came here and if efforts were made by the administration to hand out to Abilene or to Texas generally gifts and gratuities, certainly the distinguished gentleman from Texas would accept all that he could get and still ask for more.

So that any criticism of that which might come to the District as a result of the incompetence or the failure of the administration to properly look into the administration of P.W.A. or C.W.A. funds should not be directed against the Commissioners of the District. It should not be a criticism of the Commissioners of the District. It is a criticism of the administration which has handled the P.W.A. and C.W.A. funds right here in Washington.

When you have a bill with 120 amendments and you have to meet across the counsel table, you have to give and take.

I only express a personal opinion when I express my regret that certain items proposed by the Senate were not included. I defer to the knowledge and wisdom and experience of the chairman of our own committee and have abided by his judgment. I do feel, however, that there are two items which should have been included; certainly they should have been given a greater degree of latitude in the matter of the appropriations: The one the Public Utilities Commission, and the other the Liquor Control Board.

I believe we should have the administration of the liquor business here in the District carefully guarded for law enforcement. This cannot be done if you rob the enforcement board of the necessary personnel.

Secondly, I still contend that until there is actual proof of either incompetence or collusion or carelessness on the part of the Utilities Commission that we should provide a larger appropriation so that its present personnel might be continued.

I do hope that in another year the House will give favorable consideration to these two agencies, at least in the matter of maintaining a sufficient personnel to permit them to carry out their functions.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time after yielding 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in considering legislation affecting the District of Columbia, I endeavor to approach it in the same way I would consider legislation affecting the city from which I come, and I think this is the attitude that the Membership of this House should take.

In reference to the bill giving the District the power to borrow from the P.W.A., let me say 2 weeks ago my city, by a vote of 5 to 1, appropriated $15,000,000 in bonds for the purpose of carrying on public works and to enable the city to come to the P.W.A. and ask the P.W.A., under the law, to assume a 30-percent obligation for the work it desires to do. On the same day my State, by a vote of 2 to 1, voted $10,000,000 in bonds for identically the same purpose.

The people of the District of Columbia pay taxes to the Government of the United States just the same as the people of Missouri and the people of Texas, and part of the money they pay to the Government of the United States, no doubt, is included in this P.W.A. money. The people of the District of Columbia must assume their part of the burden to take care of the public debt just the same as the people of Missouri and the people of Texas. Therefore, why should they not have the right to borrow money for needed public improvements?

I rose for the purpose of discussing the appropriation for the Public Utilities Commission.

I have talked to the Speaker, the Parliamentarian, and numerous Members who, I think, understand parliamentary law, trying to find some way whereby I can force a record vote in this House upon the paragraph that affects the Public Utilities Commission.

Men stand here on the floor and say they are defending the people of the country. Are you defending the people of Washington when you cut the appropriation of the Public Utilities Commission from $87,000 to $50,000? That is a people's commission. Its every act is supposed to be beneficial to the masses of the people.

I should like to find a way whereby I can move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, which carried the $87,000 appropriation, but up to this moment I have not been able to find such a way. However, I do hope that someone at the other side of the Capitol, Senator NORRIS, for instance, who has been interested in these matters for years, will see to it that the Senate insists upon its amendment and in this way provide the $87,000 to carry on the work of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia.

You get gas here, you get electricity here, and you get water here cheaper than anywhere in the country, with a few exceptions. Why? Because of the activities of the Public Utilities Commission. My colleague from my own State challenged this statement when this bill was pending before the House, but I ask every Member to read the Senate hearings, consisting of nearly 400 pages, and find out just what this commission has accomplished.

Let us see what the Senate committee learned with respect to the Public Utilities Commission:

Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma. If this item is retained at $50,000, how many officials and employees would you have to dispense with?

Mr. ELGEN. We will have to dispense with 15 employees, Mr. Chairman. That then would still leave us on a 90-percent basis with about $2,900 more than the House has appropriated which we would have to save some way or other.

Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma. Any questions?

Senator NYE. As to this reduction here and the discontinuance of 15 employees, how much would that delay the valuation work that you are undertaking?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri (reading):

Mr. ELGEN. It would very materially delay those valuations. To what extent, I do not know. But it would have a decided effect upon our entire plan, sir. You cannot regulate utilities without the tools to do so; and that has been one of the big difficulties, in my opinion, about regulation in this country—attempting to regulate, passing laws, does not do any good unless you have funds to proceed with. That was quite evident in the case of the old Federal Power Commission. You recall, for many years they had a very inadequate sum of money, and nothing was done. After you began to give them money and a force to go ahead, they began doing some rather remarkable things in the public interest.

Major Gotwals is as fine an Engineer Commissioner as the District of Columbia has ever had. He is going out of office July 1, when he is to be retired. Major Gotwals is a man about whom no one can say anything except praise for his services to the District of Columbia. This is his statement:

Major GOTWALS. But, the embarrassing thing about this matter is the fact that these companies, with the public's money, obtain the best lawyers, the best engineers, that money can get. They carefully buy something with the public's own money, something which will be worth while, as they see it, to beat us, and then we put up a hard fight many times, and this simply knocks our feet from under us. There is a much greater danger in the reduction. It is the danger of the public being thoroughly beaten.

Senator NYE. The public being wholly undefended?

Major GOTWALS. Unprotected, because we are playing with major leaguers, so to speak, and we are a little bit of a bush league, just to use a little slang, because the A. T. & T. bring the best attorneys, the best valuation engineers and lawyers that there are in the United States here, and then we meet them with only one lawyer, and, of course, we put up a pretty good fight, but, when we cannot have any men at all, our "bush league" might be beaten.

Take away the money for the Public Utilities Commission and, in my opinion, the result will be no reduction of rates for light and power, telephone, and so forth, for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The statement was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the tax rate on property was $1.50 per $100, with assessed valuations reduced this year $80,000,000——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am not talking about the tax rates, I am talking about the Utilities Commission. I would not care if you raised the taxes if you did not reduce the appropriation for the Utilities Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. The Utilities Commission right now is given $51,000 and, in addition, has the services of all 14 lawyers on the pay roll in the corporation counsel's office. Fourteen lawyers with $51,000 ought to be able to accomplish something worth while.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why did you give them $87,000 a year ago? The gentleman from Texas was on the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Because they had not done anything for the people during the last 4 years. They did far more when we gave them only $46,000 than they have ever done since.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You got mad at an attorney who attended four or five conventions because he tipped the bellboy or the chambermaid, and the man who carried his grip—you took it out on the Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. No; that had nothing to do with it. When they had $46,000 was the only time they did anything for the people. The telephone rates here are simply outrageous. I predict that our new Commissioner, Mr. Keech, will do more with this $51,000 during the coming year than the former Commission has done during the last 4 years with $87,000 per annum.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. What did the Commission do with the $87,000 they give them? What did they do in regard to reducing the rates on telephone, light, and power—the highest rates here on telephones that there are anywhere?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As far as the telephone is concerned the Interstate Commerce rules supersede the Utilities. That law should be changed and then your telephone bill would be reduced.

Mr. McFARLANE. The service charge of a telephone company here is too high—they charge $3 for installation even though the phone is there and only requires connection. That is entirely too much.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I paid my bill this morning, $4.75 for the month.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to delay the House by further discussion of the conference report, but I must take just a minute to supplement the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. The gentleman from Missouri is my personal friend and I have the highest regard for him, and I am certain he expects me to reply in kind.

This bill has been considered longer than any other appropriation bill in this session of Congress. The committee began hearings on the bill on March 7 and continued them from day to day until March 23. Members of Congress who were interested in the bill, or any item in the bill, were welcome at the sessions of the committee and were given time on all items on which they desired to be heard. But the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] gave no intimation that he had the slightest interest in this item. He knew that it had been under fire in 1933 and he knew it would be taken up in these hearings, but he did not so much as call up to inquire about it.

When the bill passed the House he was on the floor and participated in the debate and was present when this figure was fixed by the House. He heard the conferees appointed and knew the item was in disagreement between the two Houses. Other Members interceded with the conferees on items in which they were interested, but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] did not mention the subject to any member of the committee of conference for either House. But now, after the item is in the conference report, and every Member of the House knows there is not the slightest opportunity to amend the conference report, my good friend the gentleman from Missouri rushes in and wages a single-handed battle to do what every Member knows positively cannot be done. The futility of his position on this proposal is apparent at a glance. Why, then, is he making this crusade against this saving of $37,000 in the bill? If he really wanted to accomplish anything, why did he not appear before the committee at the hearings on the bill when the item was being considered? If he really wanted to increase the amount and throw away $37,000 additional of the taxpayers' money, why did he not take it up with the conferees before they went to conference?

The answer is obvious. The gentleman from Missouri is a candidate for the United States Senate. He is waging a campaign back in Missouri for nomination on the Democratic ticket. Publicity is a valuable asset in a campaign for the Senate and candidates are not adverse to having the papers mention their activities on the floor.

But, Mr. Speaker, such mention should be fair to other Members of the House. When this bill was last before the House the gentleman made much the same speech he has made here today, and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch published a version of it, in which it stated the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], "in opposing the stand of his Missouri colleague, Chairman CLARENCE CANNON, of the subcommittee", charged the subcommittee had "crippled" the Commission, "which has saved the consumers millions of dollars", and had "placed the Commission at the mercy of the private corporations" and asserted "there can be no other conclusion." It further quoted the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] as saying, "If this vote was being taken before a State legislature, the press would say we had sold out to the public utilities." In reading this newspaper account it is impossible to escape the conclusion that he is intimating that the subcommittee was serving the interests of predatory utilities and under conditions such as to give rise to the suspicion that the members of the committee had "sold out" to the utilities, while the gentleman from Missouri was championing the cause of the common people against them.

None of the proof submitted in the RECORD as to the fallacy of the gentleman's position was printed by the paper, and the effect was as if a case had gone to the jury without giving one of the parties litigant an opportunity to present testimony. I called the article to the attention of my friend from Missouri and pointed out its unfairness, and let it go at that for the reason that the debate as reported in the RECORD was ample reply.

But today the gentleman again implies that the committee's position favors the utilities, while he is opposing them. Again he champions the cause of the common people against a subcommittee "which under similar conditions" in a "State legislature" would be charged with having "sold out." I have never sold out, and I have never supported any utility, public or private. On the contrary, I have declared myself emphatically on the subject in every campaign in which I have participated. I wrote the bill to regulate the utilities which was endorsed by the Governor and passed by the Missouri House of Representatives in the last general assembly without changing a word in it. If the State senate had concurred, the rural towns of Missouri would have received millions of dollars from the Federal Government which other States, notably our neighbor, Illinois, received but which were denied Missouri for lack of this legislation. Did the gentleman from Missouri contribute anything to that fight in the "State legislature"? Not a word.

But here, when everybody knows there is no earthly possibility of changing even a punctuation mark in the conference report, he makes an impassioned speech which will be duly chronicled in tomorrow's Missouri papers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Now, let us take up the merits of the matter. The House proposed to appropriate $50,000 for personal services under the Public Utilities Commission, and $1,000 for its general expenses. The Senate proposed to increase the amounts to $86,823 and $1,500, respectively, a saving of $37,323, which Mr. COCHRAN ostensibly opposes.

The suggestion that the subcommittee, in making this retrenchment, was actuated by petty personal spite is unworthy of consideration. The truth of the matter is that the Public Utilities Commission has rendered no notable service to the people in the past 4 years. During that time they have not secured a reduction of rates by any utility except by agreement—that is, they have secured nothing except what the utilities wanted to give, and the utility lawyers were willing to agree to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. When we appropriated only $46,000 for this item the Commission functioned. It repeatedly secured reductions of utility rates in the District; and we here propose to give them $50,000—$4,000 more than they received at that time. But, since we have begun to increase the appropriation in excess of $50,000, they have not secured a court order for the deduction of a penny in the rate of any public utility.

There has been no reduction in telephone rates since 1925, although every other utility has granted repeated reductions, and the members of the Commission testified before in the hearings that telephone rates were at least 10 percent too high. In a suit, now pending, when it appeared they were certain to secure a substantial reduction in telephone rates, the Commission voluntarily entered into a stipulation under which they gained nothing but signed away all hope of securing a reduction in any amount. In fact, the whole proceedings smacked strongly of collusion.

Now, the gentleman is a candidate for nomination on the Democratic ticket. But in his excursion here today he has, for the time at least, abandoned his party. This is a Democratic measure. It was reported by a Democratic committee and passed by a Democratic House. The Democratic steering committee approved it and every other Democrat here today is supporting it. The gentleman from Missouri is the one exception. He applied to the Republicans for time to debate, and, although a Democratic Member has control of the hour, he preferred not to accept time from the Democratic side and applied to the Republicans for time to assail the bill, and he is the only Democrat in the House who is attacking the report.

Now, I regret to see the gentleman out of harmony with his party. He would make a good Senator——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Thanks.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am sorry to see him place himself in such a position. It leaves the impression that he is without influence here in the House. As a matter of fact, he is very influential. He is a man of high character and unusual ability and we as members of the Missouri delegation are proud to be associated with him. It is a matter of regret that he takes this one position on which none of his party can agree with him, and I am afraid it will lead the people back in Missouri to believe that he is not listened to here in the House and so injure the splendid race he is making for the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, we have given the Commission every dollar it is entitled to. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] quotes from the Senate hearings a general statement by the Commission that they would like to have more money to spend. But he cannot point to a case in the last 4 years in which the Commission has gone into the courts and forced the utilities to lower their rates. I challenge him now to cite any instance in which any rate of any utility has been reduced by order of the courts at the instance of this Commission. When they report activities justifying larger expenditures we shall be glad to provide larger appropriations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, permit me to turn to a more inspiring subject. In the minute that I have remaining may I refer briefly to two outstanding men who have cooperated with the subcommittee in the hearings on this bill. Out of the many able and conscientious men who appeared before our committee in behalf of the District government two are deserving of special mention.

One is Dr. William G. Fowler, in charge of the Public Health Department, a man eminent in his profession and of great executive ability. Under his administration the Department has made remarkable progress and is today one of the most noteworthy in the United States.

The other is Maj. John C. Gotwals, the Engineer Commissioner, one of the ablest men who has served in that distinguished position, and who in that capacity has rendered invaluable service to the District and the country.

I wish to take advantage of the opportunity to express to these two gentlemen our appreciation of their service and cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, before yielding to the gentleman from Kansas, I rise to a question of high personal privilege.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, then I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In the course of his remarks the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] made a statement reflecting upon me that I desire to answer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a Member cannot rise to a question of privilege at this juncture, when no motion was made to take down words objected to used in debate.

The SPEAKER. The words were not taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. And there was no motion made to take down the gentleman's words. That was necessary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. In the course of debate, when trying to explain a bill, is it the proper thing for a Member to make a political speech when he ought to be explaining the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the point of order I made is that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] cannot rise to a question of personal privilege at this time, because he made no motion to have the words taken down of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] at the time he used same in debate, which is required under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 156]

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 39: On page 30, line 11, strike out "$5,728,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,763,960."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "$5,763,960, of which not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for compensation to be fixed by the board of education and traveling expenses of educational consultants employed in character education."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 41. On page 33, after line 9, insert: "For aid in the education of children (between the ages of 16 and 21 years, inclusive, who have had their domicile in the District of Columbia for at least 5 years) of those who lost their lives during the World War as a result of service in the military or naval forces of the United States, including tuition, fees, maintenance, and the purchase of books and supplies, $3,600: Provided, That not more than $200 shall be available for any one child during the fiscal year 1935: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be expended for such children while attending educational institutions of a secondary or college grade under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of education."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 86. On page 59, in line 9, insert: "Provided, That in case a satisfactory price cannot be agreed upon for the purchase of said land, the Attorney General of the United States, upon the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, is directed to acquire said land by condemnation, title to be taken directly to and in the name of the United States, and the expenses of condemnation shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 92. On page 62, after line 12, insert:

"DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIA

"For the construction of additions to the Children's Unit, and the preparation of plans and specifications for the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Sanatoria at Glenn Dale, Md., including not to exceed $100,000 for the employment of professional and other personal services without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, $500,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 118. On page 78, after line 5, insert: ": Provided, That the assessment rate herein prescribed shall be applicable to assessments for sewer and water mains constructed and laid subsequent to January 1, 1923, in the subdivision of Barry Farm, as said subdivision appears on the records of the Surveyor of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. CANNON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the conference report and the several motions on the several amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the House has created a special committee for the investigation of the purchase of War Department property, and the members of this committee have been given permission to sit during the sessions of the House. For this reason they were not able to answer the roll call to establish a quorum. The members of this committee are Messrs. MCSWAIN, FITZPATRICK, DUNCAN, CARTER of Wyoming, FADDIS, ROGERS of New Hampshire, JAMES, GOSS, PLUMLEY, and HILL of Alabama.

FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 9322) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree with the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CULLEN, MCCORMACK, VINSON of Kentucky, TREADWAY, and BACHARACH.

DIVERSIFICATION OF PRISON INDUSTRY

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 369.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 9404, a bill to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides for 2 hours of general debate on the bill. I have consulted the minority members of the Committee on Rules and they agree that I may offer a motion to amend the resolution striking out the word " two " where it appears in line 8, of page 1, of the resolution, and insert in lieu thereof the word "one "; in other words, reducing the time of general debate to 1 hour.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusets. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I concur in what the gentleman from Georgia has said with regard to his consultation with the minority members of the Rules Committee on the matter of amending the resolution to reduce the time of general debate from 2 hours to 1 hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What provision is made in the rule for those who are against the bill, and what arrangement is proposed to take care of those who are against the rule?

Mr. COX. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, I shall yield one-half the time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts against both the bill and the rule?

Mr. COX. I presume so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I advised the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] yesterday that I would yield him 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am wondering if there might not be others who are against both the rule and the bill who would want time. Should there not be an equal division of time between those who are for and those who are against this proposition? That has always been the rule here in this House and in all parliamentary bodies.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that I might have a few minutes on the bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I shall be liberal in yielding the time under my control.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there should be an equal division of the time.

Mr. COX. I can make no such allotment.

Mr. BLANTON. It should be divided equally, and hereafter I am going to contend for all rules to provide for an equal division of time.

Mr. COX. I have no objection; I shall be fair.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I should like some time.

Mr. BLANTON. Have we changed the rules of the House so that those who are opposed to the resolution and the bill are not to have half of the time in their own control?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows what the practice is on these questions.

Mr. BLANTON. The practice since I have been here has been for the time to be equally divided between those for and those against all propositions. That is the only fair, just way to conduct debates. This is a bad habit for the Rules Committee to get into, and a bad precedent for it to set. I hope that all future rules will provide for a fair, equal division of time between those for and those against the main proposition.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Line 8, page 1, after the word "exceed", strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

Mr. COX. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we who are opposed to the resolution and to the bill ought to have time in which to express our views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot object, because the gentleman from Florida has moved the previous question on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] to be yielded as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to make in order the consideration of the Tarver bill referred to in the resolution as H.R. 9404, which is a bill to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, has the endorsement of the Attorney General, the Director of Prisons, the American Federation of Women's Clubs; and there is a very strong letter from Mr. Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, embodied in the report that accompanies the bill in which official endorsement is given to the bill.

I had not until this moment learned that there was any opposition coming from any source to the adoption of the measure.

The whole purpose of the bill is to make effective the act of May 27, 1930, which provided for the diversification of prison activities in order that work in prisons might not be concentrated in any one line, giving too great competition to private industry.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this bill perhaps is innocent enough on its face, but it is one of those pieces of legislation which does not show on its face what is aimed at. It creates a prison industries board and clothes it with unlimited discretion in establishing industries in the prisons of our country except that the products must be used by the Government.

It transfers the power, among other things, now lodged in the Attorney General in that respect to this prison industries board.

I should like to call the attention of the Members of the House especially to the language in section 3 of the bill which says that the President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions. In other words, this board is given unlimited power to determine in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. In just a minute. In addition to that, the powers and duties now vested in the Attorney General or any other officer or employee of the United States as conferred by the act of May 27, 1930, are conferred upon this prison industries board. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is not of the opinion that the bill transfers to the Board any greater power than is now exercised by the Attorney General? The bill does not create any additional power. It simply provides for the transfer of existing powers from the Attorney General to this Board.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Georgia if that is his interpretation of the act?

Mr. TARVER. Oh, unquestionably. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. MAPES. I am unable to hear the response of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Undoubtedly that is the correct interpretation of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman that I have been a little doubtful about that and I am glad to hear the gentleman from Georgia make that statement and to get his interpretation of the bill in that respect. The reason for the doubt in my mind was due to the language in the first part of the sentence in section 3, to which I have called attention, and which says that the President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent the industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions. As the gentleman from Georgia knows, that is new language not in the act of May 27, 1930, and for this reason I was fearful it was intended to confer upon this Prison Industries Board greater power than is now conferred upon the Attorney General. I am glad to get the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TARVER. The very idea of transfer is that the authority must now be vested somewhere. Where? Under the terms of the act of May 27, 1930, unquestionably in the Attorney General. This is merely a power of transfer of existing power and not a proposal to create additional powers.

Mr. COX. And may I say it is a transfer to a board of which the Attorney General is a member. You will find in the report that the Attorney General endorses the bill.

Mr. MAPES. I call the attention of the members of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the bill also provides for an indefinite, continuing appropriation to be used by this Prison Industries Board. I do not know how that will conflict with the legislation which we have recently passed, but it seems to me that is a matter to which the Committee on Appropriations should give some attention.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House will remember that we have had up this general subject matter in one form or another several times during this session of Congress. It is well known that the Superintendent of Prisons wants to start the manufacture of metal furniture in the Lewisburg (Pa.) Penitentiary, and we put upon the appropriation bill in this Congress a limitation prohibiting that being done. If it is proposed to go behind the action of the Congress—and I am afraid it is—and to do indirectly by the establishment of this Prison Industries Board what Congress has refused to do directly, namely, to start the manufacture of furniture at the penitentiary at Lewisburg, then those of us who supported that limitation upon the appropriation bill must necessarily oppose this legislation. I take this opportunity in the discussion of the rule to call the attention of the House to the possibilities of this legislation. I think it is the function of Congress to determine what industries should be established in our penal institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. RAYBURN submitted a conference report upon the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

PRISON INDUSTRIES BOARD

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, who I believe comes from Grand Rapids, a great furniture city. I come from a great shoe city, the city of Lynn. I think the gentleman from Grand Rapids ought to be willing to allow a certain amount of furniture to be manufactured in the prisons if I am willing that a certain amount of shoes may be made in the various penitentiaries.

The purpose of this bill is to arrange matters so that no particular industry will be driven out of business and that the manufacture of prison-made goods will not bring about serious competition with free labor. The American Federation of Labor is absolutely in favor of this bill. They do not want the furniture industry in Grand Rapids, Mich., or the shoe industry in Lynn, Mass., the textile industry in Lawrence, Mass., or southern cities to be penalized, or any other industry located in Kansas, California, or any other place to be discriminated against.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be determined by the Congress and not create a board to determine the matter?

Mr. CONNERY. I think a board is all right on this proposition. The entire situation has been carefully studied. Sanford Bates, who is greatly interested in the prisons, and who is head of the Federal prisons, has studied the situation from A to Z. This bill will stop competition with any one particular industry. We have realized from the hearings which we had before the Committee on Labor enough to forbid prison-made goods of the various States being sold in interstate commerce. When we had the hearings we had the wardens of almost every penitentiary in the United States there. They said, "You must give these men work. They cannot walk around at their leisure. They must work or many of them will go insane."

I should like to see nothing made in the penitentiaries at all to compete with free labor, but these men must work. They must have something to do. We have a situation facing us, and the only thing to do is to permit them to make a little of this and a little of that, so that we will not have competition with free labor.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has just made a statement that he would rather have free labor do the work. Since Sanford Bates has charge of these prisons, why can we not permit him to have the continued direction of the prisons? He is an honest man. Why is it that this commission of five men is to be under the supervision of the President at a time like this, when the expenses of the Government are so heavy that the taxpayers cannot stand the burden? I agree with the gentleman that we should let free labor do this work now.

Mr. CONNERY. If Congress wanted to lay out certain rules and regulations for Mr. Bates and let him run the job, I would not have any objection to that; but I think a board with a labor, farmer, and consumer representative can do a much better job than Mr. Bates can do alone. Mr. Bates has plenty to do, and do not forget that you have an employer and an employee on this board, which leaves Mr. Bates out of it, and they cannot say that he has dicriminated against Grand Rapids or Topeka or any other place, because on this board will be a representative of the employers and a representative of labor, and they will see that justice is done to all industries.

Mr. RICH. May I answer the gentleman by stating that if Congress functions along with the Superintendent of Prisons, then we will not have to create this board and increase our national debt by paying more salaries and creating more unnecessary jobs.

Mr. CONNERY. This board, as I have said, will have an employer and a labor man, a farmer and consumer representative, as well as a representative of the Attorney General; and they will see that justice is done to industry in all these cases.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the American Federation of Labor is for this bill?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has sent a letter to every Member of Congress, saying that the federation is in favor of this measure.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman talked with the labor representatives of Massachusetts and do they think this is a fairer way of handling the work problem in the prisons and that it is fairer to the industries in Massachusetts, which are now most affected by competition with prison-made goods?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; and I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that the shoe business has suffered more than any other industry by prison-labor competition; but we are willing for them to make a certain amount of shoes, if they do not put the whole burden on the shoe industry, but will let them make a little furniture, some shoes, some furniture, or anything at all so long as they keep it down so that it will not seriously compete with free labor.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that in times like the present, in doing work at Federal prisons, they should, as far as possible, eliminate mass production?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I do; and I may say to the gentleman that he will notice that there is a provision in the bill that will take care of prisoners and their dependents in case of injuries suffered in line of work. This should have been done long ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, the location of a certain Federal prison was referred to a moment ago and I believe that at this particular Federal prison located in my home town of Lewisburg, Pa., has been woven the fabric of this whole proposition.

It has been stated that there is no change of policy involved in this new proposal. If there is no change desired, why is the bill here? There is a change desired and it is desired for this reason. They have already constructed on this territory—I call it territory, because they have preempted there 1,500 acres of land, occupied by the buildings of this prison and also used for farming purposes—a factory in which they propose to make steel furniture for the equipment of the post offices and other public buildings throughout the country.

It seems to me that under the law as it now exists they cannot compete with the manufacturers of this material throughout the country and consequently they desire this legislation.

We have there an institution that is supposed to represent a wonderful advancement and a mighty step forward in the matter of confinement and personal reconstruction, physically and morally.

If you go there, you will find wonderful architecture, at the same time you will notice that there is in charge a wonderful gentleman, a genial man of manners and heart, who came there from Joliet—Major Hill—who won his rank in the World War and who is serving as warden. The institution is also under the supervision of the Director of Prisons of the United States, Mr. Bates, who has conceived the idea of having here something that he calls an "elite prison", where the prisoners are to be handled with kid gloves, so to speak. However, when you go there you will find in addition to the cells in which these men are ordinarily confined, a dungeon in the depths of the prison. You will also find something that is hardly believable. It is smoke-screened in some way so as to mislead you in regard to the protection the guards have to have. This is protection in the shape of large dogs, larger than a young calf, running around the corridors.

While we are on this subject, it seems to me if Mr. Bates is going to conquer these men by kind treatment instead of the abuse that prevails in some of the prisons of this country, he could do this through some mental ingenuity or personal magnetism he may have which would give him power over these men instead of using dogs as assistants. I hope they will soon dispense with these dogs; and I know Mr. Bates will do it, for I believe he is a man of high purpose and conscientious in his ideals.

With regard to the question of labor, within a mile of the location of this penitentiary is a furniture factory and, sad it is to contemplate, because these men are my neighbors and are all good, competent men, and skilled artisans who were employed in this furniture factory there up until this depression hit the country, for 4 years out of 400 men who were once employed in this institution, they do not have more than 100 men so employed now.

And it does seem to me that we should not expand the sale of goods from the penitentiary, manufactured by these men who have violated the laws of the country, and work for nothing, to compete with free and honest labor of America.

I think there ought to be some other way. I should say the better way would be to improve this wonderful civilization of ours, which in 2,000 years of known history has not done away with prisons. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill H.R. 9404 is before us, and I should like to make this statement: I have in the past discussed the affairs of the Federal prisons with Sanford Bates. I think Sanford Bates, Superintendent of Prisons, is doing the best he can for the inmates of those institutions. If he would not do that, he would not be well qualified to administer the affairs of the prisons of this country. I congratulate him. The great question is, Are we going to try our best to take care of the men incarcerated in the penal institutions because they have disobeyed some law of the land or are we going to try and take care of the men on the outside who are desirous of securing a position where they can earn their bread and butter for themselves and their families? That is the great question we have confronting us at the present time.

Now, let us grant that we want to regulate the prisons so that we do not have to carry on the manufacture in Atlanta of the duck industry in such a great proportion of the country's need of cotton duck. I sympathize with the men from Atlanta. I admit that the industry produced last year 5,921,000 pounds of duck, while on the outside there were produced 15,111,450 pounds of cotton-duck material—over one-third of the needs of the country produced by prison labor. Entirely too great a proportion made in the Federal prison, I admit.

And, gentlemen, I think that Congress has the right and power to tell Sanford Bates that we do not want the prison labor to do that great amount of work at this time at least. Let the men in the prisons suffer, if someone has to suffer, because they are there through the violation on their part of the laws of this country, and the punishment is theirs for disobedience to our laws.

If you—Congress—instruct the Attorney General, or Sanford Bates, that you do not want him to make so much cotton-duck material, he would carry out those instructions.

If you adopt this bill, you set up a board of 5 men who will get a hundred dollars a day for the 5, or $20 individually, and you and I know that the cost of maintaining that board will be large—that it will have a secretary and officers, and it is going to cost the Federal Government five times as much as we expend for the commission.

I think that is the wrong thing for us to do when so many Federal employees are supported by the taxpayers of the country. I think that we Members of Congress should try our best to economize in the affairs of the Federal Government and stop setting up these commissions and increasing our Government costs on such a foolish bill as this, when the Attorney General now has the power under the law to do what this bill suggests. Set up this commission or board and you will never get rid of it in your day and mine. Once a commission, always a commission, and the expenses of Government continually go on unabated. I do not know for the life of me how we are going to make ends meet in the payment of these superfluous commissions. The taxpayers of the country today are burdened, your people in your district are burdened, and my people in my district are burdened. And yet we say, because somebody who advocates this bill, who says a certain commission must be set up, we must set up another commission. Let us think twice before we go on with a proposal of this kind. It is all wrong.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. COX. Remembering the fine work which the gentleman did as a member of the Shannon committee in investigating the question of Government in business, and refreshing the gentleman's recollection by reminding him of the testimony of the shoemakers, of the duckmakers, and others, does not the gentleman feel that the bill here is in line with what the gentleman was seeking to do at that particular time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly in sympathy with the things advocated by the Shannon committee, but I feel that I want to protect the men upon the outside of prisons rather than those on the inside of prisons. I feel we should not do more for the men on the inside of prisons, who have been incarcerated because they have committed a crime and should be punished than for the men outside of prisons.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman interpret this bill to mean that it is an effort to protect those on the outside?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not think so. I think if Congress would give Sanford Bates instructions, he will carry out any orders of Congress in that respect that we ought to give, and we will thus save the expense of this commission and accomplish the same results.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, quite a lot of misunderstanding seems to exist with regard to this bill, its provisions, and what it is hoped to accomplish by it. May I say to my colleagues from Pennsylvania, who have been disturbed by the Lewisburg Penitentiary proposition, that there is not the remotest connection between this proposed legislation and the manufacture of metal furniture at Lewisburg in the Northeastern Penitentiary. This bill was introduced in its original form long before the controversy about Lewisburg arose. It was introduced by me in an effort to aid labor engaged in the textile industry, because of the operations of the Atlanta Penitentiary cotton mill, which, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has pointed out, manufactures a tremendous proportion of the wide duck consumed in this country. In fact, in 1 year it manufactured an amount of wide duck which equaled 38 percent of the total manufactured in free industry of that particular material. My bill as it was originally proposed sought to place a limitation on the amount of cotton which could be manufactured in the Atlanta Penitentiary. The Committee on the Judiciary went into the matter and held extensive hearings. They heard representatives of the manufacturers and after going into it decided that the legislation ought not to deal with only one penitentiary, but that it ought to be such as to take care of the situation generally throughout the country, and after quite a great deal of discussion that committee proposed a bill which in another form I subsequently introduced, but which is not the bill before you for consideration this afternoon.

There were some objections to that bill on the part of the American Federation of Labor. The bill was subsequently redrafted in order to meet those objections which seemed to the committee to be good, and in its present form it has the approval of the entire Committee on the Judiciary so far as I am advised. I know that no member of the committee voted against its being favorably reported to the House. It has the approval of the American Federation of Labor. It has the approval of the Department of Justice. It has the approvel of the President of the United States, who, I am informed, has indicated his interest in it and desires it to be enacted, and it has the approval of the American Federation of Women's Clubs. In that connection perhaps I should read to you, if I may have the time in which to do it, an expression by the president of the American Federation of Women's Clubs. It is dated May 17, 1934, and is addressed to the President. I quote:

> The general Federation of Women's Clubs has been deeply interested in the problem of prison labor for more than 25 years. Several years ago the general federation adopted a resolution in support of the Federal Board of Prison Industries. We are happy to say this principle is embodied in the bill authorizing the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, H.R. 9404. We know this bill has the approval of the American Federation of Labor, groups of manufacturers, as well as the Department of Justice. We know that a rule has been asked for in the House of Representatives, and that if this request is granted in time for Senate action, very probably the bill will pass this year. We are writing to assure you of our keen interest in this legislation and our hope for speedy passage.
> Respectfully yours,
> GRACE MORRISON POOLE,
> President of the American Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I prefer not to yield at this time unless there is something the gentleman considers of unusual importance, because I should like to proceed with some further discussion of the matter.

Mr. RICH. I am interested in trying to help the gentleman. I am wondering if the Congress should prohibit the manufacture of duck down to 10 percent or 15 percent at the most, whether that would not suffice for the cotton-duck industry. I believe we can get enough support in Congress to prohibit the manufacture of more than 10 percent of cotton duck at this time.

Mr. TARVER. That is what I undertook to do in my original bill, but the Committee on the Judiciary, in its wisdom, decided that the entire question ought to be dealt with instead of merely as it relates to one penitentiary. May I say this to my colleagues from Pennsylvania: They are undertaking to speak in the interest of laboring men, and yet the laboring men who are affected are the men who are engaged in the textile and shoe industries, those being practically the only two industries in which the labor of prisoners has been actively engaged. You have not any Federal manufacture going on in the Lewisburg prison, as far as I am advised.

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, yes.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman state what it is?

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman made a statement a while ago that it had no relation to this new penitentiary at Lewisburg. The gentleman, of course, having attended the hearings, I should think would have the same knowledge that I have. Does he not know they have already erected a building and they were about to proceed in the manufacture of metal furniture when they were interfered with by this law? Hence, the appeal is made to extend this law and create a commission so that they may go on.

Mr. TARVER. Oh, my friend did not understand me. I did not say that they had not attempted to manufacture furniture at Lewisburg. I said that they did not have anybody at this time in the Lewisburg Penitentiary engaged in manufacture.

Mr. FOCHT. Exactly; in full confirmation of what I said.

Mr. TARVER. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time.

Mr. FOCHT. Well, I think the House will agree with me that I know what I said, regardless of what the gentleman says. I know they have a building there and are ready to go as soon as this bill is passed. That is my statement to the House, and I do not want to take any more time.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman simply misunderstood what I said. I simply said that you did not at this time have in the Federal penitentiary at Lewisburg prisoners engaged in any prison industry. I did not say that there has not been an attempt made to install a prison industry there.

Mr. FOCHT. I will have to correct the gentleman again. They are engaged constantly. I would not want to enumerate the things they manufacture because of the great variety, but there are 1,200 prisoners there, and most of them have daily tasks to perform in the manufacture of goods.

Mr. TARVER. What sort of goods?

Mr. FOCHT. I have stated that I could not enumerate them. I am not around the prison, but I know they are working.

Mr. TARVER. My information is that as late as 1932——

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, this new building was not even built then nor in operation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] has expired.

Mr. COX. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, it is not possible to conclude the discussion in the short time allowed, but I appreciate the difficulties that my colleague has in satisfying all those who want to talk, and I hope to be able to discuss the matter further upon the consideration of the bill. However, I simply want to say that there is very little manufacturing done in the Federal penitentiaries outside of the Leavenworth (Kans.) penitentiary and the penitentiary at Atlanta. There is some broom manufacture of a minor character. There is a little printing done and perhaps one or two other things in a minor way, but it may startle you to know that 70 percent of the value of all goods manufactured in Federal penitentiaries is manufactured in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, there are two questions involved in this bill: First, Does this bill confer more authority upon some executive department? Second, Is it wise to transfer authority which is now vested in the Attorney General to another bureau or commission?

In the first place, it seems to me that section 3 transfers additional authority from Congress to some executive department. Please observe the first three lines of section 3:

> The President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried in Federal penal and correctional institutions and may transfer to said corporation any part or all of the other powers and duties now vested in the Attorney General.

It seems to me it is very unwise to be conferring any more authority. If that is a wise thing to do, then we must concede that we are incapable of meeting our responsibility as legislators.

Now, let us take this bill, aside from the controversial features, and take it as it is conceded to be, namely, that it is simply transferring this authority from the Attorney General to the new board. Now, why set up another board or commission? It will cost the people of this country $20 a day extra, every day those five members of this board convene for the purpose of carrying out the duties that are now performed by the Attorney General.

Mr. BLANTON. Twenty dollars a day each?

Mr. McGUGIN. Twenty dollars a day for each member. If that is a wise thing to do, then it can only be upon the theory that bureaucracy is a better form of government than the form of government set up under the Constitution. If a board can handle these duties better than the Attorney General, then it can only be upon the theory that bureaucracy is a better form of government.

I want to say something to the Democratic Members of this House, because you are responsible for the legislation that is passed here. You have the votes. You are the ones who pass the legislation. It does not make much difference how we vote on the Republican side. We do not have the votes. We cannot stop bad legislation; but let me read what your last Democratic platform states on this subject:

> We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government.

Now, you run directly in face of that solemn pledge and set up a new bureau and new commission here today.

It would appear as if it is an irresistible impulse, an obsession, for this administration and you Democratic Members to violate your platform pledges, particularly the one pertaining to the abolition of bureaus and commissions. You and your admistration have set up so many new commissions that you no longer designate them by name but resort to mere alphabetic abbreviations. So today you come along and set up this new board instead of abolishing some existing commission, and it is indeed fitting that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will stand here in a few moments and denounce this useless bill which we are considering today to set up another useless bureau.

Every time you set up a new bureau not only do you break your platform pledge to reduce the number of bureaus, but you break your platform pledge wherein you pledge yourselves to keep your platform pledges. I read to you what the Democratic platform says about that:

> We believe a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe.

So I appeal to you today to keep your first pledge not to set up more useless bureaus; and, indeed, this is a useless bureau unless you are willing to take the position that your Attorney General is incompetent and incapable of carrying out the duties now entrusted to him. If you will not keep that pledge, then keep your platform pledge whereby you pledge yourselves to keep your platform pledges. I trust you will keep faith with one or the other of your pledges, either your pledge to abolish bureaus or your pledge to keep your platform pledges.

I realize when we have reached that stage when it seems to be the order of the day to repudiate most anything which is sacred. Keeping faith with a platform pledge is a sacred thing. Something else is sacred in this country of ours, and that is having reasonable respect and reverence for Memorial Day, yet yesterday this House was in session longer hours than usual, and we were told that the reason for it was the need for the consideration of important business. Let us see how important was the business considered.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DERouen). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the resolution.

Mr. McGUGIN. Oh, anything regarding Memorial Day would not appeal to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows he is out of order. In my judgment he is purposely violating the rules of the House.

Mr. McGUGIN. Now, let us see how serious was the business considered yesterday that it had to be transacted yesterday instead of being put over until today.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, may we have a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. McGUGIN. I inquire, What we are doing today? I answer, Wasting valuable time on this frivolous bill which breaks a pledge of the Democratic platform.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has any regard for the rules of the House he will suspend until the Chair rules on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will confine his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Members of the House that the business transacted yesterday, the silver bill, was considered because of the pressure of important business; yet today we find ourselves considering this frivolous bill, which breaks the pledge of the Democratic platform. [Applause.]

This bill transfers power from Congress to an executive agency. That is always a dangerous policy. The coal industry is now suffering because Congress transferred its authority to designate the things for which public money may be spent to the President, who in turn vested such power in the hands of Secretary Ickes, Public Works Administrator. Secretary Ickes has used such power to the injury of the coal industry.

The coal industry, one of the largest industries in the country, is one of the greatest employers of labor. In more ways than one, the so-called "recovery program" is being administered in a manner so as to destroy the coal industry rather than to help it.

At this time, there are thousands of men out of work in this great industry, yet, the Public Works Administrator, Mr. Ickes, is spending Public Works money in a manner so as to create more unemployment in the coal industry. He is using Public Works money to build hydroelectric plants to be owned and operated by the Federal Government. When these hydroelectric plants are completed, they drive out of existence steam plants, which are now making electricity and are large consumers of coal. This policy is wrong. It is an outrage upon the coal miners of this country. Secretary Ickes is carrying out this policy with Public Works money. He is brazenly repudiating the will of Congress and the people in two respects; first, he is taking money which Congress appropriated for the purpose of taking care of unemployment and is using this money to build projects which when completed will cause more unemployment; and second, he is developing projects which time without number Congress has voted down.

This increased unemployment will be in the coal fields which have been producing coal to supply steam-generating plants. This increased unemployment will also be in the railroad industry where men have been employed to haul coal from the coal mines to these steam-generating plants. Thus, public money is actually being used by Secretary Ickes for the purpose of throwing coal miners and railway trainmen out of work.

Congress appropriated this Public Works money for the purpose of helping the unemployed; not for the purpose of permitting Secretary Ickes to carry out his personal hobbies. When Congress appropriated this Public Works money to take care of the unemployed it gave to the President the power to spend this money in the manner which would furnish the most employment. The President designated Mr. Ickes as his personal representative to expend this money and to designate the projects. The President is directly responsible for the conduct of Mr. Ickes because he appointed him and is now permitting him to expend this money in a manner which is making more unemployment.

I am not only opposed to this program because it is wrong but I have a deep personal interest in the coal industry in Kansas. Two of the large counties in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent depend upon the coal industry. I refer to Crawford and Cherokee Counties. Thousands of men in these counties, who have formerly been employed in the coal mines, are having a hard time at best to obtain employment. The Kansas coal industry has suffered from vicious unfair competition of large gas pipe lines from Texas. The administration through its control of the N.R.A. has the power to stop this unfair competition from these monopolistic gas companies, which are bringing gas from Texas into the Kansas territory. The administration should exercise this power and protect Kansas coal from the vicious unfair competition of Texas gas; however, it has not done so, and it has refused to do so. This is true notwithstanding the fact that Kansas coal operators, Kansas coal miners, Kansas gas companies, and I have time without number appealed to the N.R.A. to stop the unfair competition of Texas gas that is being dumped into the Kansas territory which is the market for Kansas coal.

These two Kansas counties—Crawford and Cherokee—particularly their coal miners and operators, have suffered enough from competing fuels, oils and Texas gas, without now being hurt by hydroelectric projects financed by the Government of the United States. I insist that Crawford and Cherokee Counties have a right to operate their coal mines and sell all the coal which they can produce before the Government of the United States uses public money, a part of which has been collected from the taxpayers of these two counties, to build hydroelectric projects which will destroy a part of the coal market which these counties now have.

Frequently, when one takes the position which I am taking on this subject, he is wrongfully humiliated and criticized with the false and vicious charge that he is the tool of the Power Trust or Wall Street.

These charges are made by those with the ideas of Ickes because they cannot and will not answer our statements with any honest answer. They choose to try to besmirch us; however, there are some people who have long records as labor leaders and as enemies of concentrated wealth who take the same position on this matter as I do. In support of this statement, I am going to quote an article from the Labor World, which is one of the outstanding labor papers in the United States. This article in the Labor World quotes from a speech of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers. I am going to quote this article and then let Mr. Ickes and his kind see how far they get by answering Mr. Lewis and the Labor World with slander rather than facts. The article in the Labor World is as follows:

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, attacked all hydroelectric projects, and particularly the Missouri River Valley Authority, proposed by Senator NORRIS, and the Loup River project, in the interior of Nebraska, which has already been approved by Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Lewis said that not one of the hydroelectric projects will produce electricity cheaper than the same electricity can be produced by steam-generating plants from coal.

"The outstanding fact in connection with hydroelectric development is that the development of hydroelectric plants to generate power to displace coal is no longer considered upon a basis of cost", said Lewis. "The Tennessee Valley Authority was not authorized by Congress because electric power would displace coal upon any basis of cost. The Loup River project, in Nebraska, is not being promoted because the power thus generated will be cheaper for industry than power produced by coal.

"The Loup River project is being promoted by a group of about 150 individuals out in Nebraska who have hired a man to represent them in getting the Government money to finance the project, and from all reports, he is to get either 10 percent or 5 percent of the gross amount that the Government allocated to the Loup River project, and he is working hard at the task. His interest in developing the Loup River project is to get his commission, and the 150 people who are promoting the project in Nebraska are willing to pay him a commission if the Government will give them the money with which to pay his commission.

"Certainly such a policy is destructive of the interests of the coal industry. Certainly it will restrict the productive capacity of the industry. Certainly it will increase unemployment. Certainly it is not a sound policy, from our viewpoint, to destroy permanent jobs in America and substitute for them only an equal number of temporary jobs, and that is about what the hydroelectric-power propositions amount to in their final analysis.

"The Loup River project will create for a limited length of time just about the same number of jobs that it eliminates in the coal industry and the railroad and distribution industries. We protest the policy.

"The coal industry is a unit in thinking it an unsound, uneconomic policy during a period when our country is struggling with the overwhelming and almost overpowering question of trying to provide employment for our wage-earning population."

So spoke John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, as reported in the Labor World, one of the outstanding labor papers in the country. The remarks of Mr. Lewis present one of the principal reasons why I voted against and spoke against the Tennessee Valley Authority, the so-called "Muscle Shoals project", also why I am opposed to the Missouri Valley project.

So long as I am in Congress I am going to try to protect the just interests of the people in southeast Kansas who are engaged in the coal business and who depend upon the coal business for a livelihood. They have a right to a square deal from their Government. They are not getting a square deal so long as Secretary Ickes takes money which Congress appropriated for the purpose of taking care of the unemployed and uses that money to build hydroelectric projects which destroy the coal industry of southeast Kansas, thereby throwing coal miners and railroad labor of southeast Kansas out of work. If a Member of Congress from southeast Kansas is to serve faithfully the interests of the people of his district, he must stand up and oppose these hydroelectric projects of Mr. Ickes and the administration. He must do so even if someone, for political reasons, charges him with not supporting the President or the administration. The first duty of a Member of Congress is to serve the true interests of the people who elected him rather than be a rubber stamp of any President or administration.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 5 minutes, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the gentleman from Georgia yield me 5 minutes also?

Mr. COX. I am sorry, but I have not the time at my disposal.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am against this rule for two reasons. The law says that when the Government sentences a man to the penitentiary it shall be to hard labor. What kind of labor are we going to have left for them? Congress has stopped them from spending Federal money to use convicts on highways down in Alabama. Congress said: "You must not make the poor felons break rocks on roads."

Now, convicts made a few of our mail sacks, just a few. They make a few of the shoes for the Army and the Navy. They make a pair of shoes and furnish same to the Army and Navy for $2.70 which would cost the Government $10 in any commercial shop. It gives the convicts something to do and enables them to send a little money to their dependents; it keeps them from mutiny.

The convicts make some of the paint brushes used to paint Government penitentiaries, not to compete with commercial brush factories in regular trade. The convicts make some of the duck material used for certain clothing for the Army and the Navy. They started to make some steel files for the Government offices, but you stopped them.

This bill creates a board the members of which draw $20 a day each while engaged in the performance of their duties, and this will turn out to be for 365 days in a year. Their other expenses also are paid. I am against the creation of this new, unnecessary board. I am doing my part to carry out the pledge of the Democratic platform by trying to stop every new board I can and to abolish every one I can and to consolidate every one I can. Our Democratic platform pledges us to that program, and I cannot vote for this expensive new board.

But another question presents itself: The underlying principle of this bill is to do away altogether with convict-made goods and to eliminate all convict labor from penitentiaries. The gentleman from Georgia on the evening of day before yesterday said—and it appears in the RECORD—that the purpose of this bill was to reduce to the minimum convict-made goods, and that it was endorsed by the American Federation of Labor. Since the American Federation of Labor was for it, then all of us jack-in-the-boxes must vote for it, to be in accord with the American Federation of Labor. I am not a jack-in-the-box for the American Federation of Labor, the National Association of Manufacturers, or any other special class any more than I am for anybody else. I am for the American Federation of Labor and will fight for it when it is right; but I am against it when it is wrong. I do not take orders from it, and I do not take orders from the employers of labor.

This bill is stacked on its face. Why, 3 of the 5 members of the board, who by majority vote are to determine all issues, are to be picked 1 from industry, 1 from labor, and 1 from agriculture. These are the branches that are pinched and especially affected by convict labor. Industry is pinched somewhat because the prison-made products come in competition with the products of industry. It wants to stop all convicts from working. Labor is pinched somewhat because the convict labor comes in competition with outside labor. It wants to stop all convicts from working. Agriculture is pinched somewhat because all the farm produce grown on the prison farms comes in competition with the produce raised by the farmers in the United States. They want to stop all convicts from working. Yet representatives from these activities are to be board members, and will have a majority vote. Suppose the President should pick our good friend from Massachusetts, Mr. CONNERY, as the representative of labor as one member of the board; suppose he should pick our good friend from Georgia, Mr. TARVER, as the representative of agriculture as the second member of the board; and suppose he should pick our good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. RICH, as the representative of industry as a third member of this board; do you not know that they would stop all convicts from doing any work that manufactured any article that competed with free labor, for they would have the controlling vote on said board, and they are not in favor of convicts working in penitentiaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, surely my time has not expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded me 5 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas was recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think a recapitulation of the time will show that I had 5 minutes left.

Mr. BLANTON. That is just the way this rule is stacked, 4 minutes against the rule and all the balance of the hour's time for it. When the Rules Committee grants a rule, it ought to provide that the time shall be equally divided, half to those favoring the rule, and half to those opposing it. This unfair control of all time by those favoring a proposition must stop. I shall wage a fight to stop it.

Mr. COX. The statement of the gentleman, of course, is inaccurate.

Mr. BLANTON. Who has spoken against the rule except myself?

Mr. COX. The greater portion of the time consumed was used in opposition to the rule. This is a resolution that the Rules Committee has brought in with the recommendation that the House accept it and make in order the consideration of this Tarver bill, which deals with prison-made goods. The committee hopes the House will accept the rule and enter upon a consideration of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Is it not a fact that the rule provides for reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule, so that the House may adopt any amendment it deems proper?

Mr. COX. It is an open rule.

Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 1, line 7, after the word "purposes", strike out the comma and insert the words "and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment because it is not germane to the resolution. It would have been in order for the Rules Committee itself to have brought in the resolution embracing the language of this amendment, but, offered from the floor it is not germane to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is offered because of the language contained in the first sentence of section 4 of the bill, which may be construed to be an appropriation.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I was going to ask the gentleman a question, and I do not know but that he has answered it already. What is the purpose of the amendment that the gentleman has offered?

Mr. COX. This is to save the bill against a possible point of order on section 4, which possibly might be construed as an appropriation.

Mr. MAPES. Is it intended to make in order the provision which provides for a continuing appropriation?

Mr. COX. No. This is the language:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the information of the corporation to transfer to the credit of the corporation upon the books of the Treasury all balances then standing to the credit of the prisons' industries working-capital fund.

Mr. MAPES. The provision in the bill which apparently makes a continuing appropriation is in conflict with legislation which Congress recently passed?

Mr. COX. I think not. The purpose of the amendment is simply to take care of a point of order which may be raised to the section of the bill to which I directed attention.

Mr. MAPES. I would not have any objection to the amendment which the gentleman proposes, insofar as it applies to the particular language to which he refers, but I think there is some question in the minds of other Members of the House as to whether or not the continuing-appropriation provision does not conflict with a law recently passed by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. It would repeal that Griffin bill so far as it applies to this particular item.

Mr. COX. May I make the statement that I had no intention of affecting that section of the bill in offering the amendment, but to save it against a point of order which might be made because of the language quoted.

Mr. MAPES. Let me say that I am sure the gentleman from Georgia had no such intention, but I am wondering if the language of his amendment does not do just that.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is not the effect of this amendment to make in order the transfer of the funds from the working capital fund now on the books of the Treasury, which is in effect an appropriation and in violation of the rules of the House, and also to make in order a repeal of the permanent appropriations bill which we passed a couple of weeks ago insofar as it requires annual appropriations for the operation of the Government?

Mr. COX. I do not have in mind the repeal of any provision of law, but simply to protect the bill against a point of order which I anticipated the gentleman himself would make because of this language.

Mr. TABER. I certainly would make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. The rule is an open rule and any amendment to the bill is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, of course, does not intend to do it, but if we pass this amendment to the rule we will repeal and undo what we did the other day when we passed the Griffin bill to stop these permanent appropriations, and to stop these back-door Treasury handouts, so far as same applies to this item. You will undo all that good work because you will make this a permanent appropriation.

Mr. COX. There is no intention on the part of the Rules Committee to do other than to keep within the rules of the House.

Mr. TARVER. May I point out that the proposal made in the bill is that this prisons industries board or corporation, as you may desire to call it, shall use this prison industries working capital fund, which has been used year after year from time immemorial, you might say, and shall pay into the Treasury any proceeds it might have above the necessary expenditures which may be authorized by the board.

Mr. BLANTON. But the funds it does not see fit to pay in will remain to its permanent credit, and become a permanent appropriation.

Mr. TARVER. It shall make annual reports to the Congress of its accounts. If this is not a wise provision, the House in its judgment will amend or eliminate it. It is not a question that the House ought to bar itself from considering by refusing to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will accept the amendment I have offered.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 35, noes 32.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 98, not voting 147, as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting "no."

Mr. BLANTON. The committee is going to eliminate the salaries and expense, by amending the bill, and I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McGUGIN. I object.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLEAN. A few moments ago I went to the Clerk's desk for the purpose of signing the petition to discharge the committee in the further consideration of the so-called "McLeod banking bill." My pen was on the paper when the the petition was snatched from beneath my hand, and I was informed that I could not sign, as 145 Members had already signed it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was correctly informed.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand that one of the signers was the late Representative Brumm, of Pennsylvania, who died a few days ago. There is a question as to the effectiveness of his signature, and the question of the effectiveness of his signature is proper for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule no signature can be withdrawn except by the Member himself.

Mr. McLEAN. Does the Chair rule that the signature of Mr. Brumm must stand?

The SPEAKER. The signature can only be removed by the Member, by Mr. Brumm himself, as a Representative of the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania. When his successor is elected, in all probability his successor would have that right.

Mr. McLEAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I understand that without my signature the petition is effective?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct, 145 names being now properly on it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHULTE. I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. That objection came from the gentleman's own side.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to my friend from Minnesota that there has been a plain filibuster on his side of the House. A filibuster has been conducted by the Republican Party both on yesterday and today, and has delayed the consideration of the District loan from the P.W.A. for the purpose of taking care of the sewage in the Potomac River.

Mr. SNELL. Let me say a word about this. We have a legitimate right to oppose the passage of some of these bills and we have done it in a legitimate way, and, so far as I know, there has been no real filibuster on this side. We have used legitimate means to oppose the passage of this bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not question the right of the Republicans to demand a roll call on any proposition that comes before the House, and if they get the required number of Members asking for a roll call, they are entitled to it, but I deny the right of any party to filibuster.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R.

9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes.

The question was taken.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a preferential motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Those opposing the motion will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-three Members have risen. On this question the ayes are 115, and the noes 33.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the vote for lack of a quorum.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H.R. 9404, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 9404, with Mr. KERR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order more effectively to carry out the policy and purposes of the act of May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 391; U.S.C., title 18, sec. 711), entitled "An act to provide for the diversification of employment of Federal prisoners, for their training and schooling in trades and occupations, and for other purposes", the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to create a body corporate of the District of Columbia to be known as "Federal Prison Industries."

SEC. 2. The President shall appoint a board of directors of said corporation which shall consist of 5 persons, 1 of whom shall be a representative of industry, 1 a representative of labor, 1 a representative of agriculture, 1 a representative of consumers, and 1 a representative of the Attorney General. The board of directors shall serve at the will of the President, who may fix their compensation at not to exceed a sum of $20 per day while such directors are actually engaged in the performance of their duties.

SEC. 3. The President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions, and may transfer to said corporation any part of all of the other powers and duties now vested in the Attorney General or any other officer or employee of the United States by said act of May 27, 1930. It shall be the duty of the board of directors to diversify so far as practicable prison industrial operations and so operate the prison shops that no single private industry shall be forced to bear an undue burden of competition from the products of the prison workshops.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the formation of the corporation, to transfer to the credit of the corporation upon the books of the Treasury all balances then standing to the credit of the prison industries working capital fund. All valid claims and obligations payable out of said fund shall be assumed by the corporation. The corporation is hereby authorized to employ the aforesaid fund, and any earnings that may hereafter accrue to the corporation, as operating capital and for the purposes enumerated in the said act of May 27, 1930, and also for the payment of compensation in such amounts as the Attorney General may authorize to inmates of penal institutions or their dependents for injuries suffered in any industry: Provided, That in no event shall compensation be paid in a greater amount than that provided in the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended. The corporation shall from time to time deposit with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts so much of its earnings as shall, in the judgment of its board of directors, exceed the amount needed for a reasonable operating capital and surplus. All accounts of the corporation shall be subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 5. The board of directors shall make an annual report to Congress on the conduct of the business of the corporation and on the condition of its funds.

SEC. 6. This act is supplemental to the act of Congress approved May 27, 1930, and in the event of the failure of the corporation to act as herein authorized the Attorney General shall not be limited in carrying out the duties conferred upon him by the act approved May 27, 1930.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am going to submit a unanimous-consent request in a few moments. If I could find out how long our friends are going to filibuster—and I do not blame you for filibustering at all—I should like to come to some sort of an agreement about it. If we could find out what time you aim to end the filibuster we could then come back and vote on the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. When the Speaker of the House makes a ruling such as he did a few moments ago you may expect anything, and I shall contest this clear along down the line. The Speaker himself announced that there were 148 Members present and a point of order was raised, and the point of no quorum was made. Yet, the Speaker decided that we should go into the Committee of the Whole. That was absolutely against the rules of this House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate under the rule must be confined to the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For a question.

Mr. RICH. I think the question is, Does the gentleman think that we should set up another commission, when the section of the law states that the Attorney General has the power to do what they are trying to do now by setting up this commission, to make more jobs to compel the taxpayers of this country to do something that they are unable to do at the present time?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am sure I cannot yield any more. Let me make this statement.

Mr. RICH. That is a thing that is on our minds.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course, you will have to reflect your views in your votes naturally. Mr. Chairman, I can quite appreciate the reaction of my friends on the Republican side. It is getting toward the shank of the session and everybody is more or less in a bad humor. It is the kind of time when everybody gets mad and fusses at another and then wishes that he had not done it the next morning, and feels as if he were getting foolish in dealing with Government matters. It is not local as to the sides of the House; it is due to the atmosphere. We get tired and fuss and do things, but after all we have a job now of passing on a piece of legislation that is pretty important. I do not blame the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and his crowd one bit, but I did wish that we might have some sort of an understanding about how long the filibuster would last, so that our folks who do not care much about filibusters could go out and get some supper and maybe get a nap and then come back here about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning and vote on the bill. Of course, if we cannot do that, we cannot do it, so let us see about this bill.

This is a very difficult thing to deal with—this matter of prison labor. The members of the Committee on the Judiciary will recall that this has been one of the most troublesome things that we had to deal with. There are two or three propositions that we have to recognize. I think everybody recognizes that these prisoners have to have some sort of employment. That is proposition no. 1. I do not suppose that anybody has ever been able to figure out any sort of plan to rehabilitate the prisoners and have any chance of turning them back to society fit to be a part of society again where they are kept in prison in utter idleness. That is proposition no. 1. Proposition no. 2 is that we do not want these prisoners to interfere any more than possible with free labor. The third proposition is that it is impossible to prevent them entirely interfering with free labor, because everything they do somebody else on the outside can do.

Those are the three propositions. What are you going to do about it? This is the way we have tried to handle it.

We have tried to have the Attorney General make these determinations. What have we done? We have gone into the district of my friend from Pennsylvania, for instance, and we have erected a furniture factory. We have spent $100,000 or $200,000. Then Congress came along and, by a bill enacted at this session, prevents its use. That is the way we have been handling the thing—spending the people's money building factories, coming down here and organizing opposition, and closing up the factories and preventing their use.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not just now. In a moment I will yield.

Now, in trying to work out a plan we had as well understand we are not going to evolve any plan that is free from objection. Do not get the notion that we are going to work out a plan of handling prison labor that is free of serious difficulty. It is like the situation where you have to go down one of two or three roads. You cannot refuse because there are some ruts or there are some culverts out of a given road. You have to go down one of those roads, each of which has some culverts or some ruts in it. It is a matter of selecting the one that seems to have the least difficulty. That is all there is to it. In trying to work the thing out, we considered all these objections in the Committee on the Judiciary. We do not have any partisanship in that committee. We have differences in views, but when that committee comes to deal with a question of public interest we sit around the committee table as legislators, as members of the committee, and not as Democrats and Republicans.

The best thing we have been able to do, the best plan we have been able to work out, is a plan worked out by Republicans and Democrats alike, is that embodied in this bill. That is the best we have been able to do. The gentlemen who are opposed to this bill can easily point out objections to it, but they probably are not able to suggest a better method. If they are, they are wiser than the Attorney General's Office; they are wiser than Mr. Green and his crowd; they are wiser than anybody else who has come before us; they are certainly wiser than the Committee on the Judiciary.

I hope that this feeling, temporarily stirred up, will not interfere with the judgment of the Members of Congress in dealing with a very important question, namely, What are we to do with, and how are we to handle these thousands of people who are in the penitentiary and who some day must come back into organized society as a part of the citizenship of the country?

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield for a question, because I think that is all I want to say. I think I have put the proposition up to the House. Will the gentleman please be brief with his question?

Mr. RICH. If the Attorney General has the power today to do what this commission is intended to do, then why have a commission? Will the gentleman kindly answer that question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I undertook to answer it a moment ago. I pointed out one concrete case in my friend's district where the Government has spent $150,000, perhaps, and the Congress came along and interfered with the arrangement. You have a divided responsibility. You have the power of the Attorney General to establish these various activities and locate the service, and then the Congress comes along and interferes with the arrangements. We figured we would have a better chance of having a workable plan agreed to by all these people representing all the interests most directly concerned sitting in on the first determinations than we have here under the arrangement we have now.

I think that is all I can say about it.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Is the American Federation of Labor and Mr. Green back of this?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. The Committee on the Judiciary has had before it, as nearly as it could get, all diversities of opinion and differences of judgment, and they have ironed out the best plan they could. It is not free from difficulties, but it is the freest from difficulty of any plan the committee could devise.

When this vote is taken I hope to see no partisan division with reference to this question of public policy, which does not enter at all into party politics. [Applause.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I realize just as well as anybody that this is not a very appropriate time, perhaps, to consider legislation of this importance. I realize, too, that as a result of perhaps fatigue, as much as anything else, the temper of the House is not what it should be to consider legislation of this importance. I wish I might feel, speaking to you as man to man representing your districts, that you would give the same consideration to this legislation that you would if conditions here tonight were just a little different.

Now, I am deeply concerned in this bill. I know that many of you are. You came here representing constituents who sent you here to vote for their interests. You men recognize that this administration is exerting every possible effort, through legislation, through the machinery of government, to stop a wave of crime that is sweeping over the country. If this drive is successful, many desperadoes, crooks of all kinds and character, are going into Federal penitentiaries. I am in sympathy with the poor fellow who perhaps, because of his early environment, has been incarcerated in prison. For many years I served as trustee to the George Junior Republic, a school for boys, not strictly a penal institution, but an institution that has been most successful in directing the energies of boys into useful channels.

I spent some time in connection with this institution when I could give attention to it. I know something about the problems you are seeking to solve; I know the type of people with whom you have to deal; but the thing I want to impress upon your mind is that we do owe some responsibility to the law-abiding citizen who works for his daily bread. I know that in my district articles are manufactured which will have to compete with the products proposed to be made in Federal prisons equipped as they are with high-speed machinery, at a time too, when my constituents and your constituents, self-respecting persons who are now walking the streets seeking work. What do you propose to do?

There is a prison in western Pennsylvania that proposes to make metal furniture to compete with the product of law-abiding labor. In one of my towns the manufacture of metal furniture is the only labor market for a large number of men. It supports their families and sends their children to school. They are law-abiding people. The only reason on earth that machinery, recently installed in the Federal prison at Lewisburg, Pa., is now standing idle is because this Congress intervened to protect free labor.

The machinery was installed because a Bureau to which you intrusted power, notwithstanding it knew the sentiment of Congress, deliberately spent the taxpayers' money, rode rough-shod over what it knew to be the sentiment of the representatives of the people and invested the taxpayers' money in high-speed machinery. When you install high-speed machinery you multiply man power. These prisoners, men who have violated the law, are kept under ideal conditions. They are given work to do; they are fed and clothed and entertained. When you install high-speed machinery you multiply many times the man power of these 2,000 men; and the output of their machines comes into competition with the products of free, law-abiding labor. You put free labor in competition not with 2,000 men but with the machine power of 10,000 men.

In handling this question let us lay all partisan lines aside. I doubt if this is strictly an administration measure. I know that the men who brought it in here are sincere. Let us consider this question in its broader aspects, in its relationship to free labor.

I ask: Is it fair to turn over anything as responsible as this subject to a commission knowing that its membership has an interest which is quite contrary to the sentiment of the people of your districts?

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Every one of you gentlemen knows that if you were to go back to your districts and call together the laboring men in your districts, and you were to tell them what has been done, what it is now proposed to do, and the proposals that have been constantly coming before Congress, 99 percent of the laboring men would be against the proposition, notwithstanding what the representatives of the American Federation of Labor may have said. Your laboring men do not want to be thrown into competition with prison labor, and it is not fair to throw them into competition with it. We have voted on this question time and again, and I hope the Members tonight will vote their convictions.

It is proposed by this bill to create a commission, yet the commission is to be dominated by a type of social reformer who is going to equip Federal prisons with high-speed machinery, and it will not be long before they will want to buy thousands of acres of land to go into general farming and into every conceivable kind of industrial activity.

The time to stop this bureaucratic type of government and control is right now; and the place to stop it is right here; and if the Members who voted against this plan heretofore will stand their ground now and vote this proposition down, it will be greatly to the benefit of free labor. Let us give more study to this question, and let us work it out in the interest of labor. At this time let us give the benefit of the doubt to the law-abiding citizen, who today is looking for work, honest work, and not put these free people into competition with the convicts in the prisons, men who have violated the laws, men who have already subjected the taxpayers of the country to great expense in the maintenance of large police forces and drives against crime. Let us give the benefit of the doubt to the honest, upright man who wants to work and sell the product of his labor, free from the competition of convict-made goods. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I am glad to yield to my friend. I know how sincere he is, I know he is practical, I know his heart is in whatever he does or proposes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank the gentleman. We had hoped—and I know how sincere the gentleman from New York is—that this plan might work out better than have the things of which the gentleman from New York complains; but does not the gentleman have some hope that we might, under this plan, with labor represented on this board, work out something which would be better than the plan we have had?

Mr. REED of New York. I say to the gentleman simply this, that if I did not feel as sincerely about my point of view as does the gentleman on his attitude, I would not stand here and oppose this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I should assume that, too.

Mr. REED of New York. I just do not agree with the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, if I may be permitted to under the rule, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], to be disposed of as he sees fit.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members will give me their attention, for I trust I may not say anything which is not adjusted to the issue under discussion. Having studied it very carefully for a number of years, I hope that I may be able to give you some information concerning it.

In the first place, permit me to say that no lawyer, if he is a competent lawyer, can examine this bill and say that it proposes to add anything to the powers which now exist in the Attorney General. The bill clearly merely proposes to transfer those powers to the body corporate the creation of which is provided for in the bill.

I was interested to hear my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] criticize the authority which now has control of this subject matter—the Attorney General's Office or the Bureau of Prisons, coming under the authority of the Attorney General—for the efforts which have been made in the northeastern penitentiary at Lewisburg to begin the manufacture there of metal furniture.

Yet, strange to say, the gentleman used that argument as a basis for concluding that these powers ought not to be taken away from the authority which he says has misused it in the instance to which he referred. We are trying by this bill to take away the authority from the Office of the Attorney General or the Bureau of Prisons under his direction, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] insists has been abused in the Lewisburg transaction. We are trying to place this authority in a board on which industry will have a representative, labor will have a representative, agriculture will have a representative, vocational education a representative, and the general public interests a representative. We are trying to do this with the approval of the manufacturing interests in the country that are concerned, and who have frequently manifested their approval of this proposition. We are trying to do this with the approval of labor, and we are trying to do it, I feel justified in saying, with the approval of agriculture. It seems to me, in view of the gentleman's feeling as to the conduct of this work under the Office of the Attorney General, that he ought to use the facts that he advances here as a basis for insisting that the bill become a law.

Quite a lot has been said in opposition to the bill to the effect that the Congress should not create any new commission which would necessitate additional expenditures of public money. Permit me to say that when the bill was originally offered it did not provide, as I drew it, for payment of any compensation to the members of this board. I felt then that there were plenty of people in the country competent to serve who would be glad to serve in that capacity as a matter of public and patriotic duty without compensation. I so provided in the measure as originally introduced. It was upon the suggestion of the Department of Justice that the bill was changed in order to provide for payment of compensation to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $20 per day.

I have communicated with the officials of the Department of Justice about this matter today and they are willing, and certainly I am willing in view of the form of the bill as originally introduced, that an amendment may be offered to provide that the membership of this board shall serve without compensation. This amendment, as I understand it, is to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. So far as I am concerned, it is an acceptable amendment, and I trust it may be agreed to by the committee. In view of the fact that this substantially meets the major objection raised, it does not occur to me that I would be justified in talking to the members of the committee at length, considering the lateness of the hour, with regard to this proposed legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a statement showing the extent of prison industry as carried on at present in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

IS THIS DIVERSIFICATION?

Of Federal prisoners engaged in manufacturing, 56 percent are making cotton textiles.

Seventy percent of value of all manufactures of Federal prisoners is cotton textiles.

Eighty-seven and seven-tenths percent of all cotton goods made at Atlanta Penitentiary is numbered duck.

The numbered duck made in Atlanta in last 4 years equals 23.4 percent of numbered duck made by free mills.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, if there is anyone who desires to ask any questions which are pertinent to this bill, I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GLOVER. As I understand this bill, it is left purely in the discretion of the President of the United States, if the bill passes, whether or not he appoints this commission.

Mr. TARVER. Yes. He must appoint the board of directors. It is left in his discretion as to whom he shall appoint on the board, and he is required to transfer to the corporation certain duties now resting in the Attorney General, and other duties may be transferred in his discretion.

Mr. GLOVER. Here is the language of the bill to which I refer: "The President is hereby authorized and empowered in his discretion to create this body corporate." I refer particularly to the language "in his discretion." If he did not want to do it, he would not be compelled to do it.

Mr. TARVER. I think the language used is almost if not quite equivalent to a mandate. However, that would be a question of construction, as to which the gentleman would be entitled to his opinion as well as I.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, what I was undertaking to discuss in reply to the gentleman's question was section 3, regarding whether or not the President should transfer to the corporation, when created, the powers now exercised by the Attorney General. That is what I thought the gentleman had reference to.

Mr. GLOVER. I had reference to section 1, line 8.

Mr. TARVER. In that connection I direct attention to the fact that the section requires that the President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions, and may transfer at his discretion certain other duties.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am wondering if the information the gentleman is inserting in the RECORD covers the varied activities carried on in the different penal institutions?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; the information will disclose that matter.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will it show as to the Federal institutions anything as to their activities?

Mr. TARVER. It will show all about the Federal institutions, not State institutions, because this bill relates wholly to Federal institutions.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does it show anything as to the receipts and disbursements and also as to how much it is costing the Government?

Mr. TARVER. It shows as of certain years information with reference to the goods manufactured in the Federal penal institutions of various sorts. Incidentally in that connection it shows that practically all these goods were goods manufactured in the cotton-duck line and in the shoe business. These two industries alone have been made to bear almost all the burden of prison competition with free industry.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The President is authorized in his discretion to create a body corporate in the District of Columbia. What is meant by the District of Columbia?

Mr. TARVER. It is meant that the site of the corporation will be in the District of Columbia. The home office of the corporation would be in the District of Columbia. It would be a corporation of the District, although it would have jurisdiction and control of the work in Federal penal institutions throughout the United States.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. May I inquire of the gentleman if the Attorney General of the United States now has the power which this bill would vest in the board to be created?

Mr. TRAVER. Yes. I tried to make that clear at the opening. This bill does not create any additional powers, but merely provides for the transfer of the powers now of the body corporate created by this bill of the powers now possessed by the Attorney General to the board of directors of the body corporate created by this bill, part of the powers to be transferred in the discretion of the President.

Mr. UMSTEAD. May I ask the gentleman the further question: If the Attorney General of the United States now has all the power that this bill gives the board created under it, why does not the Attorney General exercise that power?

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman's question, I think, has been answered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] in his admirable address in the beginning of the debate. Whenever the Attorney General undertakes to diversify the activities of the prison inmates so as not to burden unjustly one particular industry, some limitation, as in the Lewisburg case, is placed upon his authority by some amendment to an appropriation bill forbidding the diversification contemplated. Thus it has been impossible for him to diversify. This legislation will insure proper diversification by placing power in an impartial board free from interference to carry out the act of May 27, 1930.

Furthermore, with regard to the question of whether or not we should be satisfied to leave the powers in the hands of the Attorney General, it seems to me this answer should be conclusive. The exercise of this authority by the Attorney General has not only been unsatisfactory to him but has also been very unsatisfactory to industry and very unsatisfactory to labor, and these interests are anxious that the authority shall be transferred to a board upon which they shall have representation, in the hope that the whole subject matter may be handled in a way that will accord justice to everybody concerned. Why have a lawyer, the Attorney General, handling alone a matter which directly affects industry, labor, and agriculture? Why not let these interests have representation upon the authority handling the question? [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I reluctantly and regretfully feel constrained to make a point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present, a quorum.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am just as much in sympathy with the regulation of the cotton-duck industry in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary as my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. I think we ought to have it regulated. I can see no reason why one-third of the cotton duck of this country should be made in the Atlanta Penitentiary. I believe this is wrong.

The important point I am trying to stress here this evening is the fact that we now have set up by law the power in the Attorney General of the United States to do exactly the things we are trying to do under this bill. When we complicate our laws to the extent that we have dual authority, then we are not trying to make our laws simpler so that the ordinary man may know just what is the law of the land.

I think if the Attorney General of the United States now has this authority, it is the duty of the Congress to tell the Attorney General just what we should like to have done. It is the duty of this Congress to tell the Attorney General that we should not have over 10 percent of the cotton duck manufactured in the Atlanta Penitentiary, if that is the will of my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. He will then issue orders to that effect. I would be with him and would do anything I can to see that this is accomplished; but why should we go ahead now and set up another board or another organization?

It is almost unbelievable that this Congress should be in favor of this bill, especially under the administration we have at the present time, which says we are going to unify the various departments and that we are going to try to get away from the complications and many bureaus we now have. This is not in accordance with the ideas that have been expressed here to the effect that we are going to eliminate various boards or that we are going to eliminate various bureaus. We are doing the very thing the administration promised we would not do, and that is, to set up additional boards and add to our national expenditures.

Why you men of this House want to support a measure of this kind I cannot understand. I know my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], is not in sympathy with this manner of accomplishing the end. I feel confident he is not. I believe that someone has advised him we must set up this board and he is trying to carry out orders, and I do not blame him for that, but I think the Congress should stop it. Why we should go ahead and do this I cannot for the life of me understand.

I want to say to my friend from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], let us put through a resolution in this House to limit the manufacture of cotton duck to 10 percent of the requirements of the people of this country at this time, and I shall support him in every way I know how.

Mr. RAMSPECK and Mr. KELLER rose.

Mr. RICH. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does not the gentleman realize that Congress recently kept the Attorney General from carrying out the law by putting a limitation on the appropriation bill applying to the Eastern Penitentiary?

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that at the present time, when people on the outside are crying for work, we should not make favorites of the men who are in the penitentiaries and try to give them work which we should give to the men who are on the outside. When the time comes that we can properly give production work to the men in penitentiaries after men in our industries are cared for, then I would agree that the rules that are to be carried out by Sanford Bates would be all right because he is interested in doing what he can for men in penal institutions.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Did not the gentleman support a limitation on the appropriation bill to keep him from carrying out the present law?

Mr. RICH. At the present time; yes. I say we do not want anything made in the penitentiaries while men on the outside are crying for work.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Then let us provide a plan that Congress will let him carry out.

Mr. RICH. I am not in favor of that while men on the outside need work, and I want to stress this all I can. I think there are many men on the gentleman's side of the House who agree with me on this particular point, but in times when we can afford to have these various things made in such institutions in order to keep such people busy, I would say let us give them a job and give them something to do, but I do hope that those in authority and in control of penal institutions will certainly prohibit mass production. We ought not to permit that now, because it is certainly our duty to stop mass production, and care for free labor.

I hope we will make that so clear that Mr. Bates will discontinue the use of machines all he possibly can.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. How does the gentleman know that 10 percent will be correct?

Mr. RICH. If they are making 38 percent now, as given in the report—and that is the idea of the gentleman from Georgia and people who are interested in the production of cotton duck—I am for the people who are outside laboring in the cotton-duck industry. I want to help them. I do not want to help the people in the penal institutions in preference to those on the outside. I would say cut out the manufacture of duck in penal institutions altogether, if necessary to accomplish the best for free labor.

Mr. KELLER. Would the gentleman be willing to pass on this matter without studying it further?

Mr. RICH. We have all the information we need. If you will look at the record, you will see that we have all the data and all the information as to the manufacture of goods in penal institutions and how much is manufactured on the outside. We have the information now.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman, before the House and as a business man, say that he is ready to pass on this without further study?

Mr. RICH. I say "yes." We have the information; we have it in the hearings. We know all that we want to know on that subject.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to have the gentleman show it to me now.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows that I have not the data on the floor of the House but can secure it for him in a short time if he so desires.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. HENNEY. Would the gentleman be in favor of the prisoners' making clothing for their individual use?

Mr. RICH. Well, I think we ought to do something to employ them if possible, but I want to give preference at this time to men on the outside. I do not say that we should not give the prisoners a job.

Mr. HENNEY. The gentleman does not want to keep them in luxury and make Dillingers out of them?

Mr. RICH. No; I think we ought to do all we can to help them; but the point I am making is that we ought to give consideration to the laborers on the outside who never committed a crime in preference to a convict.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members are present.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were 12 ayes and 87 noes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. That vote does not show a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members are present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 224 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be spread upon the Journal pursuant to the rule. The Committee will resume its session.

The Committee resumed its session.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the situation into which we seem to have fallen, I do not believe it is advisable for this side to consume time further, and it is not my purpose to yield time further for debate unless something transpires which has not yet been called to our attention. So I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he desires to consume time further at this hour of the night, yield the remainder of his time to whomsoever he pleases.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that things have reached such a pass in the House of Representatives that no one can present his objections to a measure that is pending or ask for a vote upon it without being accused of conducting a filibuster. I am sorry that the majority feel called upon to resort to the allegation that a filibuster is being conducted as the only argument it is able to present in favor of legislation.

I want to tell the House something of the situation with reference to this prison business. It is the duty of the Congress of the United States, in my opinion, to legislate with reference to what industries shall be conducted in our Federal prisons and as to how they shall be conducted. During the time of my service in this House I have seen bills brought in here prescribing that certain industries may be conducted in the Federal prisons. I have seen those bills debated, after careful consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I have seen those bills passed, and I have seen them become law.

I believe our present Committee on the Judiciary is competent to go into that situation and to lay out a program for industries in our Federal prisons, and to bring it before the House. I do not believe the Membership of the House is so barren of common sense that it will, when given such a program, fail to give it fair and honest consideration and fail to come to a legitimate and fair and honest conclusion on that subject.

We did pass a bill creating the prison industries' capital fund, and we delegated to the Superintendent of Prisons the power to decide what industries should be started in the prisons. He went ahead and spent a lot of money building a factory, as has been stated here. Then the Congress felt that that was not the kind of a factory that it wanted and it ruled it out.

Now, what is the effect of this bill? I think the Congress ought to understand what the effect of this bill is, so that it can pass fairly and intelligently upon the bill that is before the committee. The effect of the bill is to take that jurisdiction out of the hands of the Attorney General and place it in a corporation to be created, and turn over to that corporation the working capital of the prison industries' fund. It also provides that that corporation can use the income or interest upon that fund that shall accrue. Now, what is the effect of that?

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. The effect of that operation is that the Congress loses control over that situation entirely which it has heretofore had in the Attorney General, because the appropriation of money will not be asked for by this corporation from year to year, and it can go ahead and run just as wild as it feels in the program of industries in the prisons. Frankly, that is what I do not like about this bill.

I feel that Congress should meet its responsibility; that it should not delegate its responsibility beyond the possibility of control, except on a bill which is brought to the floor from the committee and fought through every time a mistake is made by that kind of an operation. I feel that we should meet our responsibility and not delegate it to some corporation, the directors of which are to be appointed by the President.

Now, there are some other features of this bill that I do not like.

Frankly, unless the rule had been modified, I should have made a point of order against section 4 because section 4 turns over from the Secretary of the Treasury all balances standing to the credit of the prison industries working capital funds. That is, in effect, an appropriation, and it is an appropriation on a bill that comes from a committee other than the Appropriations Committee. I do not believe we ought to do such a thing; I think we should keep away from it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. If this legislation is not good why would the American Federation of Labor support it?

Mr. TABER. I think the American Federation of Labor has been very much deceived, because the American Federation of Labor was opposed to the action of the Attorney General in starting the industry at Lewisburg; they fought it. Now, this corporation can do the same thing, and there is absolutely no recourse in the annual appropriation bills such as we had against the action of the Attorney General. The American Federation of Labor has been misled and deceived as to the effect of this proposition.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I understand that the features of the bill objectionable to the American Federation of Labor were taken out.

Mr. TABER. They have not studied the bill sufficiently to understand it; they have been deceived on the question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the American Federation of Labor had not been deceived; our friend over here seems to think that it is omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent, can do no wrong, and greater than God Almighty.

Mr. TABER. Well, we ought to be able to pass a bill in the House without having to be told what to do.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not take my orders from the American Federation of Labor any more than I do from the American Federation of Capital. When they are right, I am for them. When they are wrong, I am against them. And I do not worship at the feet of either of them.

Mr. TABER. I am in hopes that the Members will vote on this legislation as they have before, upon its merit, because by turning down this bill we shall give the Judiciary Committee an opportunity to bring us a program for prison industries which is well laid out after careful consideration by that committee which I believe is one of the ablest committees in the House. I believe it is fully competent to do it; and I think if the matter is left to them appropriate legislation will be brought out.

I do not think we ought to delegate our authority to somebody else.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee has agreed to amend this bill and to take out a very objectionable feature of this bill by eliminating the $20-per-day salaries and requiring the members of the board to work without pay. One of the greatest objections I had to the bill, that of creating a new, expensive, unnecessary board, thus has been eliminated by this action of the committee; and with that eliminated I intend to vote for the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I assume the provision still remains in the bill providing for the payment of office expenses?

Mr. TABER. These expenses will go on if this commission is established and they will get paid somehow, I expect. I do not believe we can have a commission of this kind, the members of which are not paid.

I say we ought not to delegate our authority to somebody over whom we have no control, giving them authority to do something with prison industries that we will regret every year as we come back here.

I do not think we ought to pass this bill. I think we ought to beat it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the argument of the gentleman from New York, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wood], president of the Federation of Labor of the State of Missouri.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything on this legislation, but certain remarks have been made in connection with the discussion of this bill about the American Federation of Labor and a great many other remarks have been made about how much some people love free labor.

The fact of the matter is that the American Federation of Labor has been attempting for the past 30 years to establish diversified industries in various State prisons throughout the country; and this bill, in my opinion, gives us the opportunity to decide whether we want mass production in our prisons or diversified industry.

The passage of this bill by Congress will have a great effect upon the action of the various States with respect to the State penitentiaries.

I care not whether the proposed commission be appointed by the Attorney General or by the President of the United States. I do not believe in the establishment of any more boards and bureaus than are necessary to carry out the functions of the Government. If this bill is passed, I prefer, as the bill provides, that the President of the United States appoint this commission.

This commission must not be appointed temporarily. If we are going to have diversified industries in the Federal prisons, the commission must be a permanent one. I do not know how to pick a board of representatives better qualified to carry out the provisions of the bill than to have on that board a representative of industry, a representative of labor, and a representative of agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of whether one is in favor of free labor or more work being done in penitentiaries, for everybody knows that we are going to continue to employ the inmates of our State and Federal prisons.

May I say that the greater part of the population of our prisons today ranges in age from 18 to 30 years. Anyone who advocates sending a young man who has made a slip and is convicted and goes to prison for the first time, who advocates a condition where he will be compelled to sit down and do nothing, compelled to remain idle during his incarceration, does not know anything about prison management. [Applause.] Those individuals are not only committing a crime against the prisoner, but they are committing a crime against society.

I should also say a word as to the diversification of prison industry. The Missouri State Penitentiary has for many years been carrying on three or four industries—clothing, shoes, brooms, saddlery. Ninety percent of the output of the Missouri Penitentiary comes under those four industries, and a great majority of the entire output has been garments. When you realize that 90 percent of the workers in the garment industry are women you can readily realize what a crime has been committed against a young man who happens to get 2, 3, or 4 years in the penitentiary when you teach him a woman's trade. He usually comes out a mental, physical, and moral wreck.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I hope you will not confuse this bill with the question as to whether organized labor or someone else wants the bill. The industries who have been most affected by prison labor in this country have for 25 years to my knowledge been in favor of and battling for a system of diversification of prison industry. These industries I have mentioned, together with a number of others, have cooperated with us for all these years trying to diversify prison industry.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] memtioned a minute ago that he was for free labor. The gentleman, as I understand it, is the manager of a large woolen factory. The gentleman from Pennsylvania opposes a 6-hour day. If he is so much in favor of giving free labor employment he ought to reduce the hours of the two or three industries he is connected with and give some of the unemployed a chance to work and not try to deprive these unfortunate prisoners of doing some kind of useful work.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman would do something about employing labor he would be doing more for his country.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. The gentleman should reduce his hours of labor to 6 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order more effectively to carry out the policy and purposes of the act of May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 391; U.S.C., title 18, sec. 711), entitled "An act to provide for the diversification of employment of Federal prisoners, for their training and schooling in trades and occupations, and for other purposes", the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to create a body corporate of the District of Columbia to be known as "Federal Prison Industries."

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a motion to strike out the enacting clause, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McGUGIN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, we talk about labor being for this bill. So far as organized labor is concerned, it has been "stood up" in connection with this bill. I grant the first Tarver bill worked a greater wrong on free labor than this bill. The first bill found the American Federation of Labor unalterably opposed to it, and none other than President Green wrote me a letter to that effect. I take it that the American Federation of Labor regards this bill as the best compromise it could obtain under the circumstances, believing that Congress would pass the other bill if they did not reach some sort of a compromise.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman, I know, does not want to make an error. In connection with the first bill may I say that the American Federation of Labor expressed no opinion. The gentleman undoubtedly has in mind a bill immediately prior to this bill.

Mr. McGUGIN. I refer to the former Tarver bill that has been before this House.

Mr. TARVER. We have had three or four bills.

Mr. McGUGIN. So far as this bill is concerned, it still leaves unlimited power in this board to make and manufacture goods with convict labor. In section 3 it is stated:

It shall be the duty of the board of directors to diversify so far as practicable prison industrial operations and so operate the prison shops that no single private industry shall be forced to bear an undue burden of competition from the products of the prison workshops.

Of course, if the Congress wants to go ahead boldly and enact this legislation, taking the power out of the Congress and leaving it in the hands of an appointive board to control the conduct of these prison factories, well and good, but when that time comes we shall find that the control over prison-made goods is removed a long ways from any influence of free labor. Free labor stands a better chance of being protected so long as that power rests in the Congress, which is composed of Members who are elected every 2 years. When this power is placed in a board which is not to be voted upon, then labor is "stood up", and that is all you can make out of the matter.

Furthermore, so far as this bill is concerned, and as it is being considered here in Committee of the Whole, I take the position that the Committee should rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. [Further remarks expunged.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McGUGIN. I take the position I am in order. [Further remarks expunged.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman should confine himself to the motion.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am, and I ask for a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down, because they impugn the integrity of the Speaker, and for this reason I ask that the words be taken down. The Speaker of this House is not only the Speaker of the Democrats, he is the Speaker of the Republicans——

Mr. McGUGIN. Take them down—no words I can say can impugn the Speaker of this House. [Further remarks expunged.]

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that these words be taken down—all of them, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will take his seat.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, what are the clerks here for if they are not taking down his words? There is no use for the gentleman from Texas to make that statement.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is out of order and the gentleman knows it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will take his seat.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Kansas take his seat, under the rules of the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will take his seat.

The Clerk will report the language objected to.

The Clerk read certain words used.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, they are not all of the words objected to. I ask that the reference be taken down where the gentleman referred to the Speaker. I ask that those words be taken down in addition to these words.

The CHAIRMAN. The words referred to will be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. It was the reference to the Speaker that caused me to ask that the words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the language objected to.

The Clerk read the words used to which objection was lodged.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that those words taken down be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. The words will have to be first reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 9404, certain words used in debate were objected to, and on request were taken down and read at the Clerk's desk, and he herewith reported the same to the House

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words taken down.

The Clerk read the words that were taken down.

(The House voted to expunge the words from the RECORD.)

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this language is against the rules of this House in that it imputes dishonesty to the Speaker in his rulings and in ignoring the rules of the House, and I move that the words be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as the Speaker is directly concerned, the Chair will ask the majority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to take the chair.

Mr. BYRNS assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the language used by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] in debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is against the rules of the House in that they impute dishonesty to the Speaker of this House and wrongful motives in ignoring the rules of this House, and I move that the words be stricken from the RECORD and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon my motion.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. My understanding of the rule is that that is a matter for the Speaker to decide, and until decided the motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide the matter at the proper time.

Mr. MAPES. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order; that that is a function of the Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. And I make the further point of order that it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is necessary for the Chair first to pass upon the words and decide whether they are out of order before the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike them out can be entertained.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the proceedings which occurred just before we went into the Committee of the Whole and which caused this discussion be read first.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that this is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it necessary to read the proceedings to which the gentleman from New York refers. Of course, they could be read by unanimous consent, but only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] is reported to have used the following language in the course of his discussion:

I take the position I am in order because I am charging that the House is not lawfully or honestly, under the rules of this House, in Committee of the Whole * * * for the good and sufficient reason that this House is not now honestly, fairly, truthfully, and, within the rules of the House, in the Committee of the Whole, for the good and sufficient reason that the Speaker completely repudiated and ignored the rules of this House.

The Chair thinks, when the entire statement of the gentleman from Kansas is considered, that these words are clearly out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that they be expunged from the RECORD, and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] moves that the language read be expunged from the RECORD, and upon that he moves the previous question.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New York make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-one Members present, a quorum. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order, and I want to have it ruled upon. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] was compelled to take his seat when the words were taken down, and to remain in his seat. He is now standing and voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that he has a right to vote. [After counting.] Forty-one Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The previous question is ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the language be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. Those who favor taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-six Members have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 54, answered "present" 1, not voting 199, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). The point of order is overruled. The Committee will resume its session.

The Committee resumed its session.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that motion being in order, but, to be fair and just, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] be allowed to proceed in order. I do not think he intended to violate the rules, or is as much responsible as somebody else over there.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the previous question is not in order.

Mr. SNELL. It certainly is. The previous question is in order any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the motion be put.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the Chair has ruled that the gentleman from Kansas has 1 minute more, he has not yet been given the privilege to proceed in order. A motion is pending.

Mr. SNELL. I made a motion, Mr. Chairman, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And it was objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, there were a half dozen objections.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the yeas and nays cannot be ordered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SNELL. I ask for a division.

The previous question was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 40, noes 103.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed Mr. SNELL and Mr. BYRNS to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 49, and noes 114.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto, including the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. McGUGIN) there were—ayes 38, and noes 93.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Under the rule a Member who has been compelled to take his seat after his words have been taken down can vote, and he can demand the yeas and nays. I wish the Chair to rule whether or not he can go further than that and demand divisions and demand tellers.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, he is not out of Congress yet. That does not preclude him from doing anything the rest of the session, does it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman has a right to demand a division and to demand tellers.

Mr. SNELL. I thought the Chair would so rule.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. McGUGIN and Mr. TARVER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 41, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The President shall appoint a board of directors of said corporation which shall consist of 5 persons, one of whom shall be a representative of industry, 1 a representative of labor, 1 a representative of agriculture, 1 a representative of consumers, and 1 a representative of the Attorney General. The board of directors shall serve at the will of the President, who may fix their compensation at not to exceed a sum of $20 per day, while such directors are actually engaged in the performance of their duties.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KURTZ: Page 2, line 9, after the word "President", strike out the remainder of line 9, all of lines 10 and 11, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and without compensation."

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, the real controversy between the Members of the House concerning this bill, as I understand it, revolves around the question of the compensation that is to be paid the members of the board. Some of the Members believe it would cost at least $20,000 a year.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. In view of the fact that the committee has accepted the gentleman's amendment, will not the gentleman forego argument? I think there is no question about the adoption of his amendment.

Mr. KURTZ. I will.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANCHARD) there were—ayes 115, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The President shall transfer to said corporation the duty of determining in what manner and to what extent industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions and may transfer to said corporation any part or all of the other powers and duties now vested in the Attorney General or any other officer or employee of the United States by said act of May 27, 1930. It shall be the duty of the board of directors to diversify so far as practicable prison industrial operations and so operate the prison shops that no single private industry shall be forced to bear an undue burden of competition from the products of the prison workshops.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the formation of the corporation to transfer to the credit of the corporation upon the books of the Treasury, all balances then standing to the credit of the prison industries working capital fund. All valid claims and obligations payable out of said fund shall be assumed by the corporation. The corporation is hereby authorized to employ the aforesaid fund, and any earnings that may hereafter accrue to the corporation, as operating capital and for the purposes enumerated in the said act of May 27, 1930, and also for the payment of compensation in such amounts as the Attorney General may authorize to inmates of penal institutions or their dependents for injuries suffered in any industry: Provided, That in no event shall compensation be paid in a greater amount than that provided in the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended. The corporation shall from time to time deposit with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, so much of its earnings as shall, in the judgment of its board of directors, exceed the amount needed for a reasonable operating capital and surplus. All accounts of the corporation shall be subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 3, line 5, after the word "authorized" insert "pursuant to annual appropriation."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of preserving the integrity of the bill repealing permanent appropriations which was passed by this House unanimously about 2 weeks ago. Unless this amendment is adopted, Congress will have no control whatever over the operations of this corporation created by the bill.

I hope the Committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

The question was taken and on a division [demanded by Mr. TABER] there were—ayes 55, noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee rises under the rule.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 369, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. McGUGIN demanded the reading of the engrossed bill.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to said bill numbered 39.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAYLOR, of South Carolina, for balance of week, on account of official business.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 1, 1934

(Legislative day of Monday, May 28, 1934)

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, May 31, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain lighthouse reservations, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS—SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to certain papers and documents on the files of the National Museum which are not needed in the transaction of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. FESS members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there are here presented the volumes containing a digest of the proceedings during the World War of the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission, based on personal attendance at meetings of the Advisory Commission, joint meetings of the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission, the General Munitions Board, the War Industries Board, the General Medical Board and its executive committee and subcommittees, and other commissions and committees, minutes of meetings, and other data of very great importance.

This information has been compiled by Dr. Franklin H. Martin, of Chicago, Ill., who was a member of the Advisory Commission, and who is, and for many years has been, one of the outstanding surgeons of the country.

I ask that the volumes mentioned may be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having an estimate made of the cost of publication of the records.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITION

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens, being members and friends of Neelands Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stafford County, Kans., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 3015) prohibiting the advertising of intoxicating liquors through the medium of radio broadcast, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

JOHN HOWARD PAYNE AND HIS SONG—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DILL

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on Memorial Day last the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] delivered a notable oratorical address at Oak Hill Cemetery, Washington, D.C., on John Howard Payne and his song, Home, Sweet Home. The address is so beautiful and the subject, "home", is so precious and so dear, that I ask unanimous consent to have the speech of the Senator from Washington printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We meet today to pay tribute and to gain inspiration. We pay tribute to the memory of John Howard Payne, because he wrote the most universal song that human tongue has ever sung. We gain inspiration from the lesson which the endless popularity of this song teaches, namely, that simple things are mightiest and that the heart rules our lives as the head never can.

John Howard Payne was born in 1791. That was 2 years after the Constitution became effective as our form of government. He was born in New York, just a few blocks from the place where George Washington took the oath as our first President.

As a boy of 17 he left college to go on the stage. He made a great success as a young actor. He played in New York, in Baltimore, and, in the summer of 1809, he played for a week at the old Theater Comique here in Washington.

Among those who saw him there was William A. Corcoran, then a boy of 11 years. He went every night to see Payne play. This would not be important except for the fact that 74 years later this same Corcoran had Payne's body brought from Tunis, where he had died while serving as American consul 30 years before. He was buried here in Oak Hill Cemetery June 9, 1883. The President, the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, and Members of Congress, along with a great outpouring of citizens, attended the burial ceremonies.

Payne's years as a wandering actor, playwright, and producer abounded in all the misfortunes and tribulations of such a life. His troubles seemed greatest during the 10 years immediately before he wrote Home, Sweet Home, while he was wandering over Europe.

Those were checkered days—days of dreams and disappointments, high hopes, and deep despair; sometimes in jail as in Liverpool in 1813 because he was a citizen of a country with which England was at war; sometimes winning great success by playing leading roles in Paris and London theaters; sometimes wandering through Italy and Sicily, a troubadour of the stage; sometimes in a debtor's prison because of financial failure as a theatrical producer; sometimes amazing even his friends by such brilliant accomplishments as translating a French play while in prison and selling it for enough to pay his debts and win his freedom. Then back to Paris, where he met Washington Irving, who assisted him in translating French plays and writing musical productions, until in 1823 he wrote Clari, the Maid of Milan, with Home, Sweet Home as the theme song, and sold it to an English producer for £50.

It is a simple song. Written by an American while in France, set to the music of an old Sicilian air, and first sung at Covent Gardens in London, it soon became and still is the world's most popular song. It was in truth the expression of Payne's concentrated longings for a place of peace and rest such as all mankind has always loved.

Payne describes the song in the play as follows: Just after the heroine sings the song, her maid asks: "Bless me, ma'am, what a pretty song that was! Where might you have learned that song, ma'am?"

To this the heorine replied: "Where I learned other lessons I ought never to have forgotten. It is the song of my native village, the hymn of the lowly heart which dwells upon every lip there, and, like a spellword, brings back to its home the affection which e'er has been betrayed to wander from it. It is the first music heard by infancy in its cradle; and all cottagers, blending it with all their earliest and tenderest recollections, never cease to feel its magic till they cease to live."

To speak worthily of John Howard Payne and his song, one should know all about the science of music. Not knowing one note from another, I cannot analyze this song. Like most other people, all I know about music is what I like, even if I can't tell why.

Music is the invention of man, by which common air is changed to melody. Music lifts our lives above the humdrum of daily tasks, gives wings to thoughts, opens the golden gate to the heart, and frees the soul to rove the world of memories, dreams, and hopes.

Somebody has said there are three kinds of music. First is the music of simple time; it is music of the heels; we call it "jazz." Second is the music of varied time, the fast and slow, like our motions; that is the music of the heart; we call it popular music. Third is the music that involves emphasis and something more; it produces not only states of feeling but states of thought; this is the music of the brain; we call it classical music.

Payne's Home, Sweet Home had a little of all three kinds of music in it, but it is primarily music of the heart. When this music of the heart was combined with the memories, dreams, and hopes of all the human family that center about the place we call "home", there was created a song that will live as long as men and women teach the songs they love to their posterity.

It is a striking fact that, having left home when a boy of 15 and never having married, Payne never experienced the joys and sorrows of a real home, yet he wrote the most popular song about home the world has ever known. His travels, his associations, and his own heart's longings all taught him to believe that the love of home is the most universal love on earth.

Payne was right. Those who have studied the subject of languages tell us that in all the 835 languages which have been discovered no language has ever been found that did not have a word for God and a word for home. Some languages have had no word for love, some no word for hate, and some no word for liberty. But no people have ever been able to communicate their thoughts without some word to express their idea of a divine power and some word to express their love of home.

History tells us that in the days of this song's greatest popularity practically every English-speaking person in the world could hum the tune. Choirs sang it in churches, mothers in their homes, travelers along the road, and soldiers at the front.

Somebody has said, "It placed a sermon on every lip, a prayer in every heart. Nothing ever written, outside the Bible, had a wider influence for good."

"Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

There's always love in a happy home. There's always hope in a happy home. Each depends upon the other, and both are within the reach of all the poor.

Modern science and invention make it possible to equip modern homes so they provide so much more of pleasure than in the past. We have electricity. Electricity is the magic master of darkness and distance, of heat and cold, of back-breaking toil and lonely ignorance. By the use of electric devices we can make the modern home a paradise for rest and joy, such as those who lived in the ages gone could not even conceive.

The greatest problem of our time here in America is the abolition of poverty and the prevention of profiteering in the sale of electricity so that the millions of plain people can own their own homes and make use of electricity for their own happiness.

Of food and clothing and shelter we can easily produce more than we can use. Our most pressing need, therefore, is an economic and industrial plan whereby each may secure his share of the good things of life. Then and not till then will Payne's song tell of homes of joy and peace for all our people everywhere.

This place of privacy and peace which we call home is as old as history. Whether men and women have made their homes in the cliffs or in the mountains or in caves underground; whether in igloos of ice or tepees of poles and skins; whether in log cabins, shacks, or cottages; whether in tenements, apartments, or palaces, their homes have ever been the refuge, the haven, the altar of their lives.

A home may be grand or humble, but there is no other place just like it or just as good. Storms may damage it, sickness, hunger, and death may stalk through it, but only to make it more beloved. It satisfies our dreams. It quiets our longings. It gives us rest.

That is why the love of home is invulnerable. That is why the love of home is immortal. That is why Payne's song can never die.

THE N.R.A. AND SOCIAL JUSTICE—ADDRESS BY MONSIGNOR WILLIAM J. KERBY

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered last night over the Columbia Broadcasting System by Rt. Rev. Monsignor William J. Kerby, professor of sociology at the Catholic University of America, on The N.R.A. and Social Justice.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have been asked by your committee to suggest within the limits of 15 minutes some kind of contrast between what may be laconically called the "old deal" and the "new deal." The phrase "old deal" may be taken to indicate the background of the present condition. It refers to the basic principles upon which the social system rested, the conditions that resulted under it, the disappointments that followed, and the hitherto uncertain efforts at reform. The new deal reminds us of the almost universal distress from which we have suffered of the practical policies that have been adopted in our national emergency and of the objectives that have prompted new efforts to save real democracy for the Nation.

It is, of course, out of the question to take up details. One can do little other than suggest elementary concepts. The distinguished speaker who follows will deal more concretely with the actual situation.

The old deal, out of which we are emerging, did not aim directly at social justice. It did aim at the removal of historical obstacles to personal freedom and opportunity. Our democracy developed largely in this way. The Bill of Rights with which we are familiar was a glorious achievement. They were guaranties to the individual around which political constitutions were organized in relation to less complex historical conditions. To borrow a happy statement from an American thinker, Roscoe Pound, I believe, society endeavored to guarantee abstract liberty to abstract persons in abstract conditions. The inequalities among men, women, and children that are due to nature, training, opportunity, and social conditions were disregarded. Action by the State was reduced to a minimum. Trust in the moral, spiritual, and social forces of life led men to expect that these forces would supplement the power of the State in the maintenance of the social order and the service of social justice. The belief prevailed, I think, that democracy was primarily social, moral, and spiritual, and, secondarily, political. It was thought that a maximum of social order would be achieved by a minimum of legal coercion through law and by the free play of moral and social forces due to intelligent good will, personal idealism, and true social values. These forces were expected to have a major role in realizing the common aspirations of humanity.

A system of private property had been devised that guaranteed no property to anyone, that placed no limits on the property that one might accumulate. It promised to protect property legally acquired. It did not guarantee that anyone would acquire property, although it did forbid undue methods in hindering one from acquisition or, perhaps, the opportunity for it.

The old deal included a system of competition which corroborated the deepest impulses of selfishness. Unequals competed for a living. Reasonable participation in the blessings of normal life was conditioned on income, and income was determined by capacity in the competitive struggle. The prizes of life went to the strong and the penalties of the social system were assembled on the bent shoulders of the weak. Moral, spiritual, and social forces were unequal to their colossal task. All forms of economic strength were like-minded and they were gradually consolidated. The social result of this consolidation created an economic order within the political and social order that defeated the larger aspirations of true democracy. The philosophy of strength was in large measure triumphant. They who had been the victors in the competitive struggle developed a working philosophy of selfishness and lived by its compelling direction. They adjusted in large measure their views of religion, of morality, of personal responsibility, of education, and of the state in a way that paid ready homage to economic superiority, and they were little impressed by the wider and more gentle philosophy that would interpret the brotherhood of man in the terms of concrete living.

The inevitable happened. All forms of strength were assembled in the lives of the relatively few whose natural ability, acquired power, and social reenforcement encouraged them to aspire to the domination of the world. Neither public opinion nor deep concern for human life nor religious ideals nor moral interpretations succeeded in disciplining economic strength in relation to true human culture.

Industrial usurpation placed power in the hands of those whose authority, wishes, and interests were in conflict with the welfare of the industrial classes. Political usurpation enabled amalgamated capital to prevent the State from dealing promptly and effectively in the interest of the common welfare. The press that was theoretically free yielded to the influence of the powerful and we witnessed a journalistic usurpation that interferred with the development of a normal public opinion. The way was cleared for an economic domination that was surprisingly at variance with the aspirations of humanity for justice, reasonable security, and happiness.

By force of circumstances that developed and of aspirations for true democracy and for the opportunity to live normally, the weaker classes gradually discovered their only form of strength, that of numbers. They attempted to upbuild collective strength by the organization of labor and they found to their dismay that the individualistic State hampered them at every step in their search for justice. Their aspirations to live, to be happy, to enjoy normal home life, to take their dignified place in the composition of social life were baffled. The political constitution, the philosophy that shaped our laws and determined their execution in the maintenance of social order presented obstacle after obstacle that had to be overcome by painful and costly struggle. Whenever a grave social abuse clamored for remedy, economic strength with its inexhaustible resources made the enactment of relieving laws extremely difficult, when not impossible. When the weaker classes described the conditions under which they suffered, the stronger class denied the facts. When facts were established beyond dispute the stronger class challenged the interpretation of them.

When weakness, made strong, succeeded in reaching the halls of legislatures and bills were introduced the combat was transferred to the halls of legislatures and the vicissitudes of debate were met. When public opinion was won to the cause of the weak, laws that promised comfort were enacted. They still had to face courts who had the power as well as the duty to declare that they were unconstitutional or constitutional. Sometimes the courts were reasonably suspected of a discouraging bias in their decisions. When it was found that constitutions actually prevented remedial measures that were called for, the necessity of amending a constitution appeared. And the same weary struggle was undertaken with increased disadvantages at this point.

The theoretical political emancipation that had gladdened many hearts in the past was accompanied by an economic servitude against which the weaker classes rebelled. Thus the consciousness of contradiction between political emancipation and economic dependence became the very heart of the labor question.

Notwithstanding these heart-breaking difficulties, undeniable progress had been made. The moral, spiritual, and social forces of society were gradually enabled to make some of their expected contribution to a reasonable social order to which, in fact, the State had been unequal. The frequently unashamed influence of wealth and power was gradually diminished in the halls of legislatures. The welfare of the laboring class and of the poor had taken hold of the conscience of the world. Effective reforms followed and some touch of the vision of true democracy became much more effective as a working social force. The spurious sanctity of natural economic laws was diminished and the Christian democratic sanctities of human life gained respect slowly and were brought within the range of effective assertion throughout all social life.

There is no need to underrate the tremendous contribution made by the old deal to what we may call "human progress" for the moment. The old deal takes on an aspect of grandeur when we view it in an isolated way and recognize its tremendous one-sided achievements. But when we study the enormous concentration of power, on the one hand, and the baffled lives and otherwise useless struggles of the weak from the standpoint of a complete philosophy of social life and an ideal of true personal culture, the grandeur of economic achievement takes on a moral and social ugliness from which any gentle view of humanity recoils. One cannot refuse to consider the alarming dependence of the masses, their inadequacy to meet the ordinary demands of worthy living, indifference to distress, baffled hope and defeated life, and perverted values that misdirected the genius of the world. And when one takes these things into account a normal man inspired by a normal social vision could not but be touched to tears.

One pathetic feature of this economic process should be mentioned. There were many among the strong who were high-minded, who honestly wished for better things, who would gladly share their advantages with those who had been less successful, but they had little choice. The tyranny of the economic system respected neither their nobility nor their worthy aspirations. It went its way with unrelenting step. We have been told many times that in a competing group the morals tend toward the lowest level in the group. The methods of unfair competition that became so significant were merely aspects of a ferocious struggle that had little in common with the ideals of human brotherhood.

The powerful man who incorporates into his working philosophy of life all of the assumptions, attitudes, standards, methods, and valuations that are actually incorporated in the old deal shows us in one detail the inevitable outcome of the social order under which we have suffered so grievously. What does the new deal say to such a man?

It tells him that life is more sacred than property and that the dignity of man is a social axiom that must be respected in the structure of any social system. Both democracy and Christianity hold that property is a stewardship for humanity rather than for greater accumulation. It tells him that the welfare of the weak is a first lien on the surplus strength of the powerful. It tells him that dividends in the form of health, leisure, security, happy home life, and cultural education are more honorable to him and more noble in themselves than are dividends in the terms of money. It tells him that the savagery of competition has no rights that one must respect and that only a chastened competition that respects the sanctities of life can contribute to the upbuilding of true civilization. Unfair and immoral forms of competition degrade the beneficiary of it no less than the victim.

The new deal tells such a representative of the old deal that the functions of the State must expand under the imperial orders of truth, morality, and justice, until the facts of historical democracy are corrected and life enters upon the pathway toward democracy in fact. To quote again the thinker whom I mentioned a moment ago, the new deal aspires to insure concrete liberty for concrete men, women, and children in concrete conditions. It tells us that this established social system that has disappointed us so deeply must be wrenched out of its settled adjustment and reconstructed into one that will take wise care of the weaker classes who must have protection. The new deal tells us that we have less occasion to fear codes, even planned production, State paternalism, and a diminishing return on capital than we have to fear economic slavery, broken health, constant worry, disrupted homes, massive poverty, and insecurity for millions of lives that know no peace.

I am not unmindful of the staggering task that the new deal has undertaken. Much of its difficulty is due to our inability to cope with colossal complicated social problems that concern social justice and social order. Normally a social system must grow gradually. Social changes are gravely disturbing. One cannot easily foresee the problems of readjustment involved in any social change. The new deal has labored under the terrific disadvantage of having to work in a hurry. It acquired the courage to do so because of the incredible collapse from which we have suffered and the insistent cries of the distressed as they looked to a new leadership for relief.

But I think our greatest problem lies in the stubborn personal philosophy of the beneficiaries of the old deal, a philosophy that must be regarded as an archaic survival when brought face to face with the facts of life, and when the ideals of life are looked upon with adequate reverence.

It was inevitable and it is perhaps providential that the new deal is creating new problems and meeting temporary set-backs in winning public opinion. There is in this situation a promise of practical wisdom and effective statesmanship that perhaps it had otherwise not achieved. Whatever the objectives of the new deal and whatever its difficulties, there is so much to commend it in the name of humanity that it deserves the confidence and the patience upon which its success depends. The new deal is asking the strength of the world to be more thoughtful of the weakness of the world. For in the Christian dispensation strength is sanctified by serving weakness, and the growth of civilization depends upon the impersonal generosities of surplus strength as we grope toward the high goal of social life. Little as we may like it, we must ask the State to do more in a positive way for social justice than we have asked it to do in the past. And we must call the moral, spiritual, and social forces to their appointed task in conjunction with the State as we undertake the duties that the evident plans of God impose upon us.

We must seek to humanize competition, to outlaw by prompt action all unfair methods of competition and thus to preserve its contribution to our common welfare with enlightened determination. We must aim to inject fundamental moral principles into economic processes and to return to a cultural concept of the deep relations of all social interests around a scale of true values that has the high sanction of God.

SEATTLE CITY LIGHT AND POWER

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the magazine Public Ownership of Public Utilities, in the May edition of which appears an article written by Mr. J. D. Ross, one of the eminent engineers of the country, giving a history of the Seattle municipal power plant. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Public Ownership of Public Utilities, May 1934]

SEATTLE CITY LIGHT AND POWER—A $60,000,000 PROJECT; 92,000 CUSTOMERS; $11,000,000 SURPLUS IN 30 YEARS; RATES REDUCED FROM 20 TO 5½ CENTS PER KILOWATT-HOUR; AVERAGE, 2.8 CENTS; SAVING CUSTOMERS $8,600,000 ANNUALLY

(By J. D. Ross, LL.D., Fellow American Institute Electrical Engineers, superintendent Seattle Municipal Light and Power System)

Thirty years ago the people of Seattle were paying 20 cents per kilowatt-hour for electricity; today they pay 5½ cents per kilowatt-hour.

Thirty years ago the city owned nothing in the way of electric light and power equipment; today the city owns a $54,000,000 power system.

Thirty years ago the city earned nothing on electric light and power; today the annual surplus earnings amount to $4,940,000.

Due to the repeated reduction in rates the people of Seattle pay on the average 2.8 cents per kilowatt-hour, which is just one-half the national average.

The total annual savings to the people of Seattle, due to the lower rates paid for electric service as compared to the average paid throughout the Nation, amounts to $8,600,000, a sum over a million dollars greater than the entire tax levy of the city.

With a public power system comprising four water-power plants aggregating 130,000 horsepower, and a steam plant of 50,000 horsepower, making a total of 180,000 horsepower capacity, already developed, the city is going forward with additional huge hydroelectric developments which, when completed, will bring the total capacity of this single municipal system up to 1,120,000 horsepower—one of the two largest municipal light and power projects on the continent.

The estimated cost of the ultimate development of this 1,120,000 horsepower is $74,500,000 with transmission lines, or $66.65 per horsepower delivered, which will be the cheapest unit cost of any large hydroelectric development in America.

In Diablo power house, to be built on the Skagit River, two monster turbines are to be installed, of 95,000 horsepower capacity each, which are the largest turbines ever built in the world—larger than those of the great Russian plant on the Dnieper River, which are rated as 83,000 horsepower; and much larger than those of the Queenston plant of the Ontario system, which are rated at 65,000 horsepower.

THE PRESENT LIGHT AND POWER SYSTEM

City light customers are supplied with current from 4 water-power plants aggregating 130,000 horsepower and a steam plant of 50,000 horsepower, in addition to the interconnection with the city of Tacoma, which has 3 water plants and 2 steam plants. The Seattle generating plants are (1) Cedar Falls station, 40,000 kilowatts; (2) Gorge plant of the Skagit River development, 54,000 kilowatts; (3) Lake Union water auxiliary plant, 1,500 kilowatts, and the Newhalem plant, 2,500 kilowatts; and (4) Lake Union steam plant, 30,000 kilowatts, giving a total rated capacity in water power of 98,000 kilowatts (130,000 horsepower) and in steam of 30,000 kilowatts (40,000 horsepower) with an overload capacity in steam of 50,000 horsepower.

DESCRIPTION OF PLANTS

The Cedar Falls generating station is located 40 miles southeast of Seattle. This was the first source of power and was started in 1903. The waters of Cedar Lake were raised from the original elevation of 1,530 feet above sea level to 1,548 feet by means of a timber-crib dam, rock filled, across the Cedar River at the lake outlet. From the dam a 49-inch wood-stave pipe line was built along the river bank downstream about 15,000 feet, where it joined onto a 48-inch steel pipe which carried the water 1,008 feet down the slope to the power house. This plant was completed in 1904 and began serving the city early in 1905.

In 1907 work was begun on a second unit at Cedar Falls, and an installation of two Westinghouse generators were installed rated at 8,000 horsepower under a 600-foot head at 600 revolutions per minute. These were the highest head reaction turbines then in existence. Later a second transmission line was built from the Cedar Falls plant with other equipment. The installed capacity at Cedar Falls is now 40,000 kilowatts, and the plant is operated on a comparatively low load factor, so as to save its full capacity for use on the system peak.

LAKE UNION WATER AND STEAM PLANTS

A second source of power for the Seattle system was the Lake Union water-power auxiliary. Here a Westinghouse-Pelton reaction turbine was installed, rated at 1,500 kilowatts on a 420-foot head at 720 revolutions per minute. This unit is housed in a reinforced-concrete building on the east shore of Lake Union, and was placed in service in 1912 as an auxiliary or emergency source of power to supplement the Cedar Falls plant.

STEAM STAND-BY PLANT

At Lake Union the city has also established a steam stand-by plant very near the geographic center of the city. It is a reinforced-concrete building of modern design containing three steam turbogenerators of Allis-Chalmers-Parsons make. These units are supplied with steam by 14 Sterling boilers rated at 823 boiler horsepower each, 4 at 200 pounds, and 10 at 250-pound pressure, all operating at 125 degrees superheat. They are equipped with oil-burning furnaces with settings designed to change to coal burning with little cost.

This steam plant is designed primarily as a stand-by or peak-load plant, with emphasis on reliability and quick starting. The capacity of the Lake Union plant is 30,000 kilowatts or 40,000 horsepower with an overload capacity of 50,000 horsepower.

EARLY HISTORY OF THE SEATTLE SYSTEM

The citizens of Seattle from the beginning of the city have been favorably inclined to municipal ownership of public utilities and especially that of lighting.

Back in 1902 an ordinance was passed by the city authorizing the issue of $590,000 in bonds for the construction of a generating station on the Cedar River. This was the first municipal water-power station in America. The plant was put in operation on October 14, 1904, with R. H. Thompson as city engineer and J. D. Ross as electrical engineer. The transmission line to Seattle, 37 miles long, and built for 45,000 volts, was the highest transmission pressure in the world at that time. It was placed in service and the street-lighting circuits were taken over from the private company and served by the municipal plant in January 1905.

The support given the municipal plant by Seattle citizens was so enthusiastic that it became necessary to plan extensions almost as soon as the service began. There followed the gradual development of the system into the four units or plants above described. As the city lighting business developed, the necessity of a separate department became evident, and in 1910 a charter amendment was adopted creating the department of lighting separate and distinct from the water department. The first superintendent was R. M. Arms who resigned in March 1911 and was succeeded by J. D. Ross, who had been electrical engineer in charge of the design and construction of the plant from its beginning. From that time on down to the present Mr. Ross has been in charge as superintendent and chief engineer of the Seattle system.

THE GREAT SKAGIT RIVER DEVELOPMENT

With a rapid development of industry in Seattle incident to the World War, increased generating capacity became an acute necessity. The Lake Union water auxiliary and steam plants mentioned above were rushed to completion. But still the demand for additional current and service grew.

The light department recognized that in the richest water-power district of the Nation, with millions of horsepower running to waste within transmission distance of Seattle, the logical source of energy to meet the growing demand would be from falling water. Investigations were made of every possible water site within 150 miles of Seattle, and in 1912 the citizens authorized the purchase of two sites, one being the Lake Cushman site, which was later developed by the city of Tacoma. The opposition of the private company delayed proceedings, blocked the city in its hydroelectric development in 1917, and resulted in the loss of the Cushman site. The city then turned its attention to the possibilities of development on the Skagit River.

The Skagit River has long been recognized as the most favorable for large development in the Northwest. This site lies wholly within the Mount Baker National Forest but was held by the private power company under a temporary permit from the Federal Government. This permit was held by the company on condition that certain developments would be made within a limited time, and because of failure to make this development Superintendent Ross made application for the site in July 1917 and pointed out to the Government at Washington that the Stone and Webster interests were buying up other sites while attempting to hold the Skagit without developing it.

Mr. Ross went to Washington to present the city's claim directly to David F. Houston, then Secretary of Agriculture, who had jurisdiction over the forest reserves under the law. On January 18, 1918, the city was given permission by the Government to call for bonds on a plant to be built on the Skagit River, and the city's priority rights were protected until May 1918, pending the acceptance of the application for a preliminary permit. The city made good on its development plans and thus acquired the rights to the development of the power sites on the Skagit River. By the purchase of other power sites in the attempt to block the city, Stone and Webster had indicated their intention to develop power elsewhere, and since no actual construction work had been done on the Skagit and the company was behind in payments to the Federal Government under the Water Power Act, the Skagit was officially taken from Stone and Webster and given to the city.

THE SKAGIT PLANTS

The city began work at once upon the development of its plants on the Skagit River. The Gorge power house was officially placed in service on September 27, 1924. A rather spectacular phase of this occasion was the fact that President Coolidge started these generators by means of a special wire connection from the White House in Washington, D.C. From 1924 on the energy developed by the department continued to increase at such rate as to double every 5 years. The Gorge power house is located on the Skagit River 2 miles above Rockport, Wash., and 100 miles by transmission line northeast of Seattle.

In the course of the development of this Gorge plant and plans for further development of the Skagit River later, the city constructed a standard-gage railroad 26 miles long from Rockport to the Gorge intake. This line was later extended 4½ miles to Diablo Canyon in 1927 for the construction of that unit.

THE GREAT DIABLO PLANT

The second unit to be developed in this great municipal system was the Diablo plant, which was begun in 1927 and finished in 1930. This plant lies some 7 miles upstream from the Gorge power house and is one of the great municipal undertakings of the country. The dam was an arch structure, in Diablo Canyon, 389 feet high, 1,180 feet long on the crest, and 140 feet thick at the base. A power tunnel 19 feet 6 inches inside diameter and 2,000 feet long, through solid granite, with differential type surge tank and two steel penstocks 15 feet in diameter and 500 feet long, carried water to the Diablo power house located on Reflector Bar, about 7 miles upstream from the Gorge power house.

It is for this power house of the Diablo plant that the two largest turbine units in the world have been built, each unit having a capacity of 95,000 horsepower.

The total development by the Seattle municipal plant will, it is assumed, amount to 1,120,000 horsepower in the Skagit plants. The Gorge plant already described will develop 320,000 horsepower, the Diablo plant an additional 320,000 horsepower, and the contemplated development later on at Ruby Dam will add another 450,000 horsepower. This latter development is located in the Skagit Canyon about 6 miles upstream from the Diablo plant. Each of the upper two plants deliver the water into the reservoir for the plant below, so that in this way the water is used three times.

RUBY DEVELOPMENT THE NEXT STEP

Beyond the present two plants built and in operation at the Gorge and Diablo, the city is planning a third and still larger development, in fact, the largest of all, at Ruby Creek. This latter development will be the key to the entire system. The Ruby Dam is necessary to equalize the flow of the stream and conserve flood waters until they are needed for power. Without the Ruby Dam the output of the Skagit is limited to the flow of the river, and in extremely dry seasons the present Gorge and Diablo installations will have more capacity than the flow will carry. With Ruby Dam each of these plants may be increased to 320,000 horsepower, and 480,000 horsepower may be installed at Ruby. The 75,000 horsepower Gorge plant represents an investment of about $200 per horsepower. The entire project when completed will produce 1,120,000 horsepower at a cost of $67 per horsepower, which is lower than the cost of any large project yet built or proposed.

It is planned to raise the crest of the Ruby Dam at least 15 feet higher than is required for power purposes in order to use the additional storage capacity to control flood waters for the protection of the valley below.

FEDERAL AID FAILS SEATTLE

At the time the city was undertaking the development at the Diablo Dam and planning for the additional construction of the Ruby Dam the present financial depression came on, making it very difficult for the city to finance the project. About that time the Federal Government announced its plan to aid municipalities by the extension of loans and grants to self-liquidating projects and especially those that would aid in reemploying the unemployed. Application was, therefore, made to the R.F.C. for loans and grants amounting to $25,792,000 for the completion of the Diablo plant, the construction of an additional transmission line to Seattle, and for the Ruby Dam and Reservoir work.

Mr. Ross went personally to Washington and spent several months there in the preparation and presentation of the application of the city for this loan, pointing out that there was over $1,750,000 worth of machinery ready for installation that could not be utilized for the lack of money; that if the Federal loan were granted over 2,000 men could be put to work at once and indirectly many thousands of others in clearing of the reservoir site as well as in construction work; that the loan would have the very best of security due to the fact that the city system had some 92,000 regular customers and a steadily increasing demand and the financial conditions of the city were in the very best of shape. And yet, in spite of all of these considerations, the Federal Government finally turned down the application of the city for a loan, giving as the reason that too much money had already been allocated to the State of Washington. Some $60,000,000 had been allocated for the construction of the public power system at the Grand Coulee site on the Columbia River and some $30,000,000 more for the Bonneville project, although the latter was really a purely Oregon venture.

Failing to secure the promised assistance from the Federal Government in the matter of financing the Diablo and Ruby projects, the city was compelled to turn again to private financing agencies, and due to the especially favorable conditions the city, under date of April 12, secured a loan of $4,500,000 on good terms, which enables it to take up its warrants and finish the Diablo power house, build the city lighting building, and leave a half million for city extensions. With these resources the city will now be able to go forward with its development as indicated and later will undoubtedly complete the system.

FINANCIAL OPERATIONS

The financial results and operations of the Seattle municipal light and power system have been very satisfactory from the beginning. At the end of 1932 the fixed assets of the department of lighting, after deducting $10,161,993 accrued depreciation, stand at $43,871,786. Against this value, the outstanding debt, all in the form of bonds, is $32,153,000. The difference between these two figures, over $11,700,000, represents a contribution to the city as a whole made by its department of lighting during the career of the plant.

The entire investment in city light, approximately $54,000,000, has been made without costing the taxpayers a single cent.

The total operating revenue of the system for the year ending December 31, 1932, was $5,261,643. The total operating expenses were $3,123,037; and after interest charges are paid, amortization, city taxes, etc., the net annual income was $594,939.68.

During 1933 operating expenses were rigidly reduced some 48 percent. The department has maintained a cash balance in its operating fund of from $55,000 to $199,000, so that the employees are saved the inconvenience and expense suffered by those of some other departments of having to depend upon banks to cash their pay checks. All city light bills are paid promptly when due, and bond interest and redemption charges for 1933 amounted to $2,761,977. And, besides, while keeping its own funds on a cash basis the city light system has taken in and cashed over $400,000 worth of warrants drawn against the city general fund, the municipal street-railway fund, and various other county and city funds. These warrants will require from 6 weeks to 2 years to mature and they add materially to the burden carried by the lighting department because interest and redemption payments must be met in cash.

NOT A SINGLE EMPLOYEE LAID OFF

The city is especially proud of the fact that by rotating work during the period of the depression it has been able to maintain its personnel without laying off a single employee. When the depression came on it was evident that expenses must be cut but it was determined not to cut anyone off the pay roll unless they were able to find employment elsewhere. This was to prevent swelling the ranks of the unemployed who must be cared for by the taxpayers' money.

The work in each division has been rotated among the men. Pole crews are now working 1 week out of 3. Line crews are working approximately half time, while maintenance men are working three-fourths time and the operating force and office workers are on a 5-day, 40-hour week.

THE CITY PAYS TAXES

Opponents of municipal ownership have made much of the argument that public plants do not pay taxes. For the last half of 1932 the Seattle municipal light plant paid $65,066 as a direct tax to the city. The real answer to the tax argument, however, is that city light is furnishing efficient electric service to Seattle at rates that save consumers more than they pay in city taxes, and at the same time is carrying all its obligations and paying off its bonded debt progressively as the bonds become due.

LOW RATES—AVERAGE 2.8 CENTS

The above splendid financial results of the operating of the municipal plant and power system of Seattle are accomplished on the basis of extremely low rates.

Before the city light was started, in 1902, consumers were paying 20 cents per kilowatt-hour for current. When it became evident that the city was actually going to build a municipal plant the private companies reduced their rates to 12 cents per kilowatt-hour. In 1905 the city reduced the residence rates as follows: 8½ cents for the first 20 kilowatt-hours; 7½ cents for the second 20 kilowatt-hours; 6½ cents for the third 20 kilowatt-hours; 4½ cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours per month.

Some weeks later the private corporations reduced their rates to 10 cents for the first 20 kilowatt-hours; 9 cents for the second 20 kilowatt-hours; 8 cents for the third 20 kilowatt-hours; 5 cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours per month, with a 10 percent discount for prompt payment, making the company's rate approximately one-half cent higher than the city rate. Early in 1911, when the municipal plant had become a serious competitor, the company reduced this differential and made its rates the same as the city rates.

In 1911 the city reduced its rates slightly and the company made a reduction a few months later. Some other slight changes were made, but since June 1, 1933, the residence rates have been as follows: 5½ cents for the first 40 kilowatt-hours; 2 cents for the next 200 kilowatt-hours; 1 cent for all over 240 kilowatt-hours.

The complete rate schedule for all classes of business is published in the annual reports of the system and cover six printed pages; and are, of course, too elaborate for reproduction here.

It is interesting to note that every reduction in rates that has been made by the municipal plant has been followed by its competitor.

The average rate for current in Seattle shows a steady downward trend; and as bond redemption reduces interest charges, and as further development on the Skagit lowers the unit cost per horsepower, rates can be made much lower. As it stands now, the average rate for domestic service in Seattle is 2.8 cents, whereas the average rate for such service in the United States as a whole in 1932 was 5.6 cents, or just twice as much.

The city customers in Seattle used $5,261,643 worth of current during 1932. The customers of the private company in Seattle paid approximately $3,700,000 for current at rates that are controlled by the city's competition. Electricity which cost Seattle's consumers $8,961,000 would have cost just twice as much at the average rate obtaining in the country at large. The total saving to the people of Seattle as a result of these low rates is approximately $8,600,000 per year, a sum over a million dollars greater than the entire tax levy for the city.

COOKING BY ELECTRICITY

As a result of the especially low rates offered for domestic service cooking by electricity has become very general in Seattle. There are now more than 40,000 electric ranges in the city, of which city light serves 26,416. There are more electric ranges in Seattle than in any other city in the world.

STREET LIGHTING AT 2.2 CENTS

The general fund paid the lighting department for street lighting in 1933 is $438,750, which is at the rate of 2.2 cents per kilowatt-hour. The average charge for this service in similar cities is approximately 5 cents per kilowatt-hour. For instance, in San Francisco the city pays $780,000 for 20,000 lamps, or approximately two and one-fourth times as much per lamp as Seattle.

For the year 1934, the cost of street lighting has been cut to $375,000, or only 1.88 cents per kilowatt-hour, for all current and maintenance replacement and operation.

Not only has the municipal plant helped in keeping the unemployed at work, paid taxes to the city and made other savings, as indicated above; it has also assisted the poor and unfortunate. When it became clear that a considerable number of the city customers would not be able to pay for electric service the city recommended that relief agencies recognize the need of electricity in the home and agreed to furnish the service at a flat rate of 2 cents per kilowatt-hour, which in the case of many consumers is less than cost of serving. At the end of the year 4,180 customers were being served under this arrangement.

OVER ELEVEN MILLIONS PROFIT

With rates low, as indicated above, and services rendered, the Seattle municipal plant has shown a revenue balance of profit above all operating expenses, including liberal depreciation charge and bond issue, for each year since 1906. Its yearly income has increased each year through good times and bad at an average rate of 15.8 percent per annum. During the 28 years ending with 1932 the light department has taken in as revenue from sales of current $63,693,623, of which $11,470,493 is profit. From its surpluses and reserves the plant has returned more than $22,000,000 into plant extensions and bond redemption. At the end of 1932 the plant represents fixed assets of $54,033,779, against which $32,153,000 in bonds is outstanding. And this record has been made while serving all classes of consumers at rates that have been reduced again and again.

OTHER INTERESTING FEATURES OF THE SYSTEM

Among the interesting features of the Seattle municipal system may be mentioned the following:

The city very early changed the current from direct to alternating for all lighting purposes, using direct current for elevators only.

The distributing system has been very thoroughly developed and the city has followed a definite program for placing all electric wires underground within the business district. All poles have been removed in these sections.

In addition to metallic circuit telephone lines paralleling each transmission line the city has built and extended a system of dispatching telephones serving each substation in the city. The telephone line from Seattle to the Skagit, 107 miles, is also supplemented by a radiotelephone set designed and built especially for the department. This set is of the long-wave broadcasting type, not depending on the transmission wires, and is equipped with automatic ringing, so that the act of lifting the receiver starts the apparatus and sends the call to the distant station.

SPECIAL STREET LIGHTING

The street-lighting system consists of the most expensive, decorative white-way lighting system in the country. The new ornamental posts are of cast bronze, each carrying two or three 500-watt, 950-candlepower lamps. The city used from the first metal-filament incandescent lamps and was the first to use gas-filled lamps and to discard the old arc lights. There are more than 64 miles of streets improved with this special class of lighting.

SHOPS, STOREROOM, ETC.

The lighting department maintains a modern warehouse and shops housed in a reinforced-concrete building, with 3½ acres of floor space. The warehouse is equipped with material-handling facilities, steel bins, and shelves, and arranged for the economical storing and handling of the vast variety of material and supplies used in the plant's construction and maintenance work. A railway spur ends in the craneway running through the center of the building and the shops are equipped for machine work, coil winding, carpenter work, welding, forging, and the many operations necessary for the repair and maintenance of the equipment.

TACOMA INTERCONNECTION

The Seattle municipal plant is connected with the Tacoma municipal system through a 60,000-volt, 33-mile transmission line. This tie line has been of great value to both cities, giving the reliability of service and economy of operation only possible when a wide diversity of power sources is connected to a single system. The surplus at Skagit is used to carry part of the summer load of both systems, while Lake Cushman (of the Tacoma system) fills up and the current is returned in the winter when the loads are heavy and the Skagit is lower. The electric interconnection on the two sites presents a striking example of the benefits of cooperation and has done much to replace the ancient spirit of rivalry between them with one of harmony and mutual help.

DO THEY EARN THEIR PAY?—ARTICLE BY ROBERT EICHBERG

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the publication Radio Stars entitled "Do They Earn Their Pay?" by Robert Eichberg.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Every penny the sponsors spend on radio programs, and the cost runs into millions of dollars a year, must come back and show a profit. Yet stars are hired at salaries which are stated to range from $1,000 to $7,500 for a single broadcast, and time on a major network costs as high as $15,000 an hour. Add these together, then add the cost of an orchestra and other artists in the show. Put the broadcast on two networks instead of one, and it can run into as much as $50,000 a performance, more than it costs to stage many Broadway shows for an entire run.

How can the sponsors afford it? Salaries paid radio artists are said to be $100,000 a year for "Amos 'n' Andy", $3,500 a performance for Rudy Vallee, $7,500 each for Eddie Cantor, Ed Wynn, and Will Rogers, $5,000 for Al Jolson, and equally astounding fees for other stars.

Surely these entertainers must be supersalesmen of the air if their broadcasts are to pay for themselves. Of course, they make us listeners more familiar with the names of the products they advertise, but do they bring new customers into the sponsors' retail outlets?

Let's look at some confidential figures and find out. Here, for example, is Ed Wynn, who heads a show on 54 stations of the red network at 9:30 E.D.S.T. Tuesday nights. Wynn is said to get $7,500 for his appearance, to which must be added the fees paid to Graham McNamee, the Fire Chief Band, Don Vorhees, and the male quartet. Then, on top of that add about $7,700, the cost of time on the network for one-half hour. Texaco has to sell quite a few gallons of gasoline to write off the weekly cost of that show which runs into about $20,000.

Well, what results do they get?

Remember the silly little fireman's hat Wynn wears when he poses for publicity pictures? That "kady" gives the key to an analysis of Texaco gas sales which are directly attributable to Wynn's broadcast, for during his program it was announced that you could get a copy of the foolish fedora by going to any Texaco filling station and asking for it.

Optimistically the sponsors ordered 1,000,000 hats for sale to their dealers. Bango! In a few days the hats were all gone, and they ordered that many more to satisfy the demand; 2,000,000 hats, surely that was enough. But was it? Not on your life. They had to buy 1,000,000 more.

Three million—count 'em, 3,000,000—hats costing the service stations 7 cents each were demanded by auto-owning, gasoline-buying radio listeners. And each hat given away meant a sale of Fire Chief gas, many to new customers at least some of whom, it is hoped, remain users.

Ed Wynn himself says, "I spent 29 years plugging the name 'The Perfect Fool.' Now, in a few short weeks, it's of no use. I am now 'The Fire Chief' and not even my best friends will call me anything else."

Why, he is so popular that when ex-President Hoover overlapped Wynn's time with a campaign talk in one of the hottest political battles in the history of the United States, some 6,000 people telephoned the network and complained about it.

That'll do for the Chief. Let's look back a year of two at the Stebbins Boys, who, as aerial representatives of Swift & Co., put on a sketch in which they were supposed to be editors of a small-town newspaper. On three nights they announced that anyone writing to them would be given a free copy of the paper.

Then the fun began. The first day there were only about 2,000 letters and everybody was disappointed. The next day 28,000 were received and the third day an additional 35,000. Then came the week-end, and Monday found 157,000 more letters from subscribers until finally at the end of a week their paper had a circulation of nearly 350,000 which is bigger than that of most newspapers in the large cities, or of the national magazines.

John and Esley Stebbins, in case you have forgotten, were the characters played by Arthur Allen and Parker Fennelly, both veterans of the legitimate stage. Allen jumped from stock to Broadway where he played character parts; Fennelly played Hamlet on the road, touring and playing New York alternately for some 15 years. Their radio acting, however, won them more fame on the legitimate stage than did all the years they trod the boards, for the acme was reached when the curtain line of a melodramic hit was, "Now, my dear sir, you may go home to your radio and listen to the Stebbins Boys."

Was Swift & Co.'s advertising manager pleased with their work? He said, "In 8 weeks they made Brookfield Butter over 50 percent better known in 28 major cities."

That's a bold comment, but now let's see some figures on a proved check-up of directly traceable sales as made by that pair of supersalesmen, Freeman Gosden and Charles J. Correll, better known as "Amos 'n' Andy"—so much better, in fact, that I could not recall their real names. When I phoned N.B.C., neither could the man who answered the phone in the press department; he had to look them up.

But you can bet the Pepsodent people know those names, know them with a touch of awe and reverence, for they sold 2,000,000 tubes of tooth paste through a single brief campaign. Before and after the darky dialogue sketch, the announcer said that any listener sending in two cartons in which Pepsodent tooth paste was packed would be given a free bottle of mouth wash. The announcement was continued for a limited time or until 1,000,000 bottles of mouth wash had been requested. These requests were accompanied by cartons representing $500,000 worth of tooth paste.

In a recent magazine article a writer "kids" radio advertisers who say that your purchases of a product make their programs possible, urge you to continue buying. The effectiveness of such appeal was demonstrated by another Pepsodent show, The Rise of the Goldbergs.

You may recall when an announcement was once made during their program to the effect that "Although this program is presented for your entertainment, we cannot continue it unless it is making new users for Pepsodent tooth paste and antiseptic. If you want it continued, write us a note on the back of a Pepsodent carton." As an added inducement a bathroom tumbler was offered to all carton senders.

The Goldbergs are still on the air. The sponsors counted 820,000 cartons, and decided it was well worth continuing, for that represented nearly $250,000 worth of business.

Incidentally, Harlow P. Roberts, advertising manager of Pepsodent says that about 90 percent of the Goldbergs' listeners are Gentiles and it is true that a great majority of the 820,000 appeals for their retention came from Gentiles, although the Goldberg sketches deal with the doings of an extremely Jewish family.

Again, "Amos 'n' Andy" offered to swap photos of themselves for Pepsodent cartons and got 75,000 takers in the first week.

Add it up. Right here we have a total of 2,895,000 cartons, not letters, but cartons, each representing a 25-cent sale, sent in by listeners replying to only three ideas. Do a little multiplication and then decide whether or not the Pepsodent programs earn their pay.

Then take the Kraft Musical Revue which featured Al Jolson and Paul Whiteman in a presentation running for 2 hours in New York and 1 hour in New England. We are told that each of these stars rates $5,000 a show and, with the station time and all, it cost Miracle Whip Salad Dressing a pretty penny. Well, was it worth the money?

Let John H. Platt, Kraft's advertising manager, tell you, as he told Sales Management, "Inside of 3 weeks from the first announcement, 85 percent of the distributors in the territory stocked Miracle Whip. In 6 weeks it was in first place in sales throughout New York and New England." True, newspapers and other media were used in this campaign, but radio gets a big share of the credit.

Ireene Wicker—that's not a mistake in her first name, a numerologist told her to spell it that way—is one of radio's best saleswomen. As "Kellogg's Singing Lady", heard over the blue network late every afternoon except Saturday and Sunday, she has been directly responsible for 38 women getting steady jobs. No, Ireene didn't hire them, but their work is to take care of her fan mail, and it keeps them mighty busy. You see, the Singing Lady offered to send her songbook to people mailing her tops from Kellogg packages, and about 14,000 a day take advantage of the offer. So Ireene is responsible for nearly 100,000 sales of Kellogg products every week.

Cities Service spends about $300,000 a year on broadcasting and has been on N.B.C. over 7 years. Its program features Jessica Dragonette. Now, $300,000 is a lot of money, but through radio broadcast advertising in 1 month they sold over 20,000 shares of common stock and one order for 50,000 barrels of oil. Down in Dallas, Tex., a salesman closed a contract for 9,000 gallons of Koolmotor gasoline, monthly, as a result of radio; these are only a few examples. So, you see, they get their $300,000 back.

The Carnation Milk Co. put on a contest for a slogan during their weekly half hour over 37 N.B.C. stations, and, during the 13 weeks the contest lasted, received 659,270 slogans, most of them written on labels taken from the cans.

Graham-Paige motor cars once put the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on the C.B.S. chain in a series of weekly half hours. A copy of a poem by Edgar A. Guest was offered anyone visiting the showrooms. About 50,000 people a week took advantage of the offer, and Graham-Paige had to increase their factory production schedules about 50 percent to meet the resulting demand for their cars.

Walter Winchell clicked big on the same network when he broadcast for La Gerardine, a hair lotion selling for one and two dollars a bottle in competition with other products, many at 10 cents. Before Winchell took the air, "Gerry" wasn't sold in drug stores. When he finished not only did they have complete distribution but also sales had increased 250 percent before the broadcast had been running 2 months. He's doing another grand job on Jergen's Lotion right now.

The networks always point with pride to sponsors who have been on the air continuously over a long period of time. "Would they", station officials ask, "have stayed on so long if their programs didn't pay?" To which we can only answer, "No one can fathom the mind of a radio sponsor. Let's see some figures."

In reply they trotted out a handsome set of statistics on the A. & P. Gypsies, whom Harry Horlick had on N.B.C. continuously since 1924, save for a 2 months' vacation in 1927. They've played 66 solid months on the air since 1927, which is a longer run than even Abie's Irish Rose. They're credited with increasing the chain stores' sales 173 percent.

And now to take a peek at an inexpensive broadcast. Ida Bailey Allen, as you know, broadcasts at a time of day when charges for time are low. Likewise, she appears under the joint sponsorship of several trade-marked brands, which further reduces the cost for each of her sponsors.

One of them, who makes a product retailing for 15 cents, had 7,000 handy little kitchen appliances left over from a former premium stunt and asked Mrs. Allen to give them away over the air. So she offered one to anybody sending in 10 flaps torn from the product, thus proving actual sales of $1.50 for each request. Suddenly the advertiser found that all the appliances had been given away. Still package tops poured in, until more than 200,000 had been received. The cash return, as proved by package tops, was $304,500 from just that two-line announcement, which is quite a feather in the C.B.S. chapeau.

That network also made an exhaustive survey of the sales of various products—soaps, cigarettes, cleansers, etc.—to find the relation between their sales in centers where they were advertised on the air, as compared with places where no stations carried the programs, and to find out whether they were more popular in homes that had radios than in those which hadn't.

The results, far too long and complex to be given in this article, were overwhelmingly in favor of broadcasting.

Enough figures have been given, however, to prove conclusively that no matter how high a radio entertainer's salary is he brings a profit to the sponsor. So, a toast to the supersalesman of the air and to the advertising agents who are the brains of broadcasting.

And you, the next time you hear of the fabulous salary paid to some radio comedian, don't say to yourself, "Huh! I could be as funny as he is! Why can't I get into radio and make that much money?"

Just ask yourself if you could give away a dozen foolish little firemen's hats, let alone 3,000,000 of the "doggone" things.

Could you?

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it would be fair and proper to suggest the absence of a quorum. I therefore do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bailey	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Barbour	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Barkley	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Black	Fess	Long	Steiwer
Bone	Fletcher	McCarran	Stephens
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	George	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Gibson	McNary	Thompson
Bulow	Glass	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrd	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Overton	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] are necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I ask that these announcements may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, on yesterday I urged upon the Senate that this conference report go over until today in order that I might at least have an opportunity to read it.

It will be borne in mind that the Senate made some important amendments to the Securities Act of 1933, which amendments were attached to a bill which had passed the House, so that at the time the bill came to the Senate it was not possible to get any idea as to what the House might do with respect to the Securities Act of 1933. That was left solely to the conference committee.

On the day when the bill passed the Senate I offered several amendments to the stock-exchange portion of the bill and one amendment to the securities-act feature. The Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency said he saw no objection to the amendment to the securities act which I proposed, and it was therefore accepted by the Senate.

The amendment proposed by me may not to many Senators seem of much importance. Certainly, at the time I offered it, I could not see how there could be any reasonable objection to it, and I assumed the chairman of the committee, and those with whom he consulted, saw no objection. From my point of view it is a very important amendment.

The draft of the bill as passed by the Senate contained this provision, beginning on page 123:

> SEC. 203 (a). Paragraph (1) of section 4 of such act is amended (1) by striking out "not with or through an underwriter and"; and (2) by striking out "last" and inserting in lieu thereof "first."

That was an amendment proposed by the committee. Then I suggested that the committee amendment be amended by the addition of the following words—> and (3) by adding after the word "underwriter" the following words "As used in this paragraph, the term 'public offering' shall not be deemed to include an offering made solely to employees of an issuer or of its affiliates in connection with a bona fide plan for the payment of extra compensation or stock-investment plan for the exclusive benefit of such employees."

I do not see why the Federal Government should insist upon having anything to do with the plan of a corporation which decides that, as a part of its policy, it will give certain additional compensation or bonus to its employees. I think that is a matter with which the Government ought not to have anything to do, and there is no public interest involved in the policy of a corporation in adopting such a plan.

For years and years there have been discussions all over this country as to the best method of permitting employees of corporations to share in the profits of the corporations.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I may say, in behalf of the conference, that that matter was given a very great deal of consideration, and one of the controlling factors which caused the elimination of the amendment was the Insull transactions. As a matter of fact, the record shows that literally millions of shares of stock of Insull corporations were sold to their employees merely upon representations of the corporations themselves. We could not find that there was any reason for failing to register those shares, just as any other shares are registered. It would be in no sense governmental interference with a mere plan. It would simply give to the employees of the corporations the same right to have registered the shares which they bought as an outsider would have a right to have the shares he bought registered.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator does not mean to intimate to the Senate, does he, that the conferees on the part of the Senate made that argument to the conference?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I am not saying that. I am saying that that was the argument which took place in the committee, and the House conferees were very insistent upon pointing out the evils which have occurred where employees of a number of corporations have been induced to buy shares of the stock of the corporations.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, the downfall of the Insull companies. I have no doubt, will result in doing many things which will be of great injury to responsible corporations which are conducting a valid business in a valid way. What is now being done is just another illustration of trying to find some means of curbing every kind of fraud which may have been practiced by any and every person and which can be pointed out as having imposed upon someone. We never can pass laws of any kind that will take care of all the evils that are bound to occur. I admit that it is the duty of the Congress and any legislative body to do what they can to protect the innocent people of the country, but I do insist that when that is done it ought to be done with such care as not to destroy the rights and the opportunities which may be offered to other business corporations.

Mr. President, there is nothing that I can do about it. I can cite more than one instance of the great hardship which will result from this legislation, not to the corporation but to the employees of the corporation. This provision of the Securities Act destroys the plan of at least one corporation which has worked perfectly for years and which has never had a word of protest registered against it by any stockholder. The corporation had to abandon its plan when the Securities Act of 1933 was passed. I made an effort here—an honest effort—to relieve that situation by offering what I believed to be a harmless amendment to anybody else but a very helpful amendment to a corporation which desired to carry out that kind of a plan.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree that when the Senator submitted his proposed amendment it struck me as being entirely reasonable, fair, and just. I took it that way. And I can see what he proposes in a favorable light. But when the bill went to conference the House conferees insisted that there was, first, no reason for the amendment. If the Senator will refer to section 4 of the Securities Act, he will find that it provides:

> Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer—
> And so forth—
> not involving any public offering.

The contention was, and it seems to me it is almost unanswerable, that an offering to employees solely, as provided in the Senator's amendment, is not a public offering. The argument was made that there was no occasion for this amendment, because under the law there would not be a public offering when the stock was offered simply and solely to employees. That was the effect of the Senator's amendment. His amendment is limited, as will be seen by its language, which is—

> The term "public offering" shall not be deemed to include an offering made solely to the employees—

I do not believe under the law it really does.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire—and I make this inquiry because it may be helpful in the future—whether the Senator can say that that was the judgment of the conference itself, or is he speaking only for himself?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is the judgment of the conference itself; that there is no reason why employees should not subscribe for stock, and stock be subscribed for by employees under the law as it is. And certainly there is no question in the world that the Commission has the authority to declare that such an offering would not be a public one.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I be certain that the RECORD is clear upon this point, and may I have the RECORD show that in rejecting the amendment which I had offered and which under the present administration of the law it was necessary to offer the conference was unanimously of the opinion that the amendment was not necessary, because under section 4 of the Securities Act such an offering as that referred to was not believed to be a public offering? Have I overstated it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think not. I do not know that I could be authorized to say that the opinion was unanimous, but certainly a majority thought that way, and there was no objection to that view, as I understood. That was the view. And then there was mention in the argument that there was some danger of abuses arising under the broad language of the Senator's amendment; that some corporations might impose on their employees, might exploit them, and that sort of thing. That was the argument used. But the opinion of the conferees was that there really was no need for this amendment, because the Senator could accomplish what he desired under the law as it stands now, and that there is no public offering when it is limited solely to employees.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to thank the Senator from Florida for that contribution, because I think it will be very helpful, and I think, in addition to that, if I may be permitted to say so, it justifies the position I took yesterday in asking that this matter might go over long enough to find out just what was in the conference report.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to add to what the chairman said—that the definition of an employee may vary. In other words, in many pyramidings of corporations by the Insull people there were employees of subsidiaries of a holding company, and vice versa. I may differ with the chairman as to the interpretation of what an employee is. In other words, if a holding company sells shares to a subsidiary employee, it does not necessarily follow that that employee is an employee of the company which issues the shares.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer in the discussion of this matter; but I think what the Senator from Florida has just said will have very much to do with the success of this bill. I am very much opposed to it, because while I think it does very many things and will cure many evils that ought to be cured, I believe that in the net result it will do more harm than it will do good. But, at the same time, I want to say that whether that shall or shall not be true will depend very largely upon the administration of this law. I think there are some provisions in it with which it will be particularly hard for corporations to comply. I think there are so many things of that kind in it that many corporations will feel the necessity of having their stock stricken from the Stock Exchange Board. But the proper administration of this law, with the interest of the country at heart, and at the same time without an effort to put the corporations of the country under the control of this particular Commission, is, in my judgment, the only hope we have for any success under this bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate just long enough to make some inquiry concerning the provisions providing exceptions for certain of the interstate carriers. I am referring to section 13, subsection (b) of the stock exchange bill as it passed the Senate. I think that is the same section and subsection in which the language with respect to carriers is found in the substitute agreed upon in conference. It is contained on page 95 of the bill and on page 15 of the conference report.

Mr. President, when this matter was before the Senate consideration was given to the proposition of exempting rail carriers from the requirements of registration of their securities contained in section 12 and the exemption of certain other carriers from the report requirements of section 13.

The action of the Senate was exemplified by the amendment in subsection (b) of section 13, which reads as follows:

> Provided, That carriers subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, shall not be subject to the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of this title, except that the Commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided further, That carriers not subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, but subject to section 20 of such act, shall be exempt from the provisions of this section, except that the Commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The effect of the two provisos just read was to eliminate the railroads entirely from the requirements of section 12 and section 13, and to eliminate the other carriers named in the Interstate Commerce Act, namely, the sleeping-car companies, the telegraph and telephone companies, pipe lines and express companies, from the requirements of section 13 with respect to the filing of periodical reports.

I will not restate the argument upon which that action was taken by the Senate, except to say that the act under which the carriers are controlled already requires more of the railroads with respect to accountancy and with respect to reports than this new Commission under any reasonable conditions conceivably could require of those carriers, both before the issuance of securities and after the issuance of securities. As the Senators know, not only does the Interstate Commerce Commission exercise control over the railroads with respect to the filing of their reports but it also controls the issuance of their securities; it has a veto power under the law, under which no carrier may issue securities except with the consent and approval of the Commission.

The conferees in their treatment of this matter, at page 15, modified the language which I read a minute ago so that the exemption is now stated in this language:

And, in the case of carriers subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, or carriers required pursuant to any other act of Congress to make reports of the same general character as those required under such section 20, shall permit such carriers to file with the Commission and the exchange duplicate copies of the reports and other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, or with the governmental authority administering such other act of Congress, in lieu of the reports, information, and documents required under this section and section 12 in respect of the same subject matter.

The amended language just read to the Senate places the railroads on the same basis as the other carriers mentioned in section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act. It makes no distinction in favor of the railroads by reason of the unusual and far-reaching requirements of section 20 (a). The effect will be that the railroad carriers, which are already under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to the issuance of securities, will be required to register under section 12 of this proposed act, and, although it would appear that the reports which the railroads file with the Interstate Commerce Commission may be filed with the new commission in lieu of the filing of other reports, and that they shall be accepted so far as they go, it still appears that they are required to register.

I merely want to ask the chairman of the committee or some other member of the conference if that was the purpose of the conferees in making that amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if I may answer the question of the Senator from Oregon, it was the thought of the conferees that the railroads should not be required to file reports inconsistent with those required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but, inasmuch as their securities were dealt in by the public, just as are all other securities, that they should be required to register. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon would have exempted the securities of railroads from registration.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true.

Mr. BYRNES. I think, as the Senator states, that is the purpose. However, it does not require of them any report differing in any way from those filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are saved the duplication of reports, but are required to register.

Mr. STEIWER. On the question suggested by the observation last made, how do the conferees construe the language in the last portion of the section as follows—

Information and documents required under this section and section 12 in respect of the same subject matter.

Does the Senator believe that that will relieve the railroads from the necessity of filing such additional reports as the new commission, in its judgment, may require?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly the intent of the conferees, according to my understanding, was that the railroads should not be required to file reports differing from those which are now filed by them with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STEIWER. But would they be required to file additional reports?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the purpose was to avoid duplicating their work. We did not want them to be required to do the things that are required elsewhere, and if they filed reports pursuant to the Interstate Commerce Act or any other act we did not want to require them to duplicate such reports with the new commission, but merely to file copies.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is no prohibition against the requirement of information in addition to that which is submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. So, answering the question specifically, in this language there is nothing which would prevent a requirement as to supplemental information.

Mr. STEIWER. I can only express my deep regret, Mr. President, at that attitude and at that interpretation of the language. I believe the interpretation is justified by the language. I am not quarreling with the Senator from South Carolina in the interpretation he places upon the language. I had most sincerely hoped for a different result from the conference. The language of the House bill with respect to the same subject, found in the House bill in section 12 of its enactment, under subsection (b), was as follows:

Provided, That no additional requirement shall be imposed upon carriers subject to the provisions of section 20–a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

The effect of that language, of course, would be to leave the entire control and jurisdiction over railroad securities with the Interstate Commerce Commission. I had thought there was abundant reason for doing that, and had hoped that in the final enactment of the bill an effect of that kind could be given to the legislation.

We ought to bear in mind that the Interstate Commerce Commission has more than the power to exact reports; it absolutely controls the accountancy of the railroad carriers; it prescribes the form in which they shall keep their books. It not only does that, but it may, and does, examine their books. It has the power to enforce a complete system of auditing those books. It examines the reports. It sends its field agents to the offices of the railroad companies. But, above that, Mr. President, in many cases it even goes to the extent of requiring monthly reports of the railroad carriers. There is, I think, in the whole country no supervision that is as meticulously detailed as the supervision which the Interstate Commerce Commission exercises over the railroads of this country. That supervision, of course, is costly to the railroad carriers, and the expense is paid by the shippers; it is paid by the people, because those costs are proper items to be taken into consideration in the making of rates which the people must pay. It seems to me that nothing can be gained by increasing that cost or increasing the bill which the people must pay; no advantage possibly can come to the purchaser of securities, because it is inconceivable to me that the Commission can accomplish anything of value which is over and above the requirements presently made by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. It was our thought, in view of the facts referred to by the Senator, that it would be very difficult to conceive of supplemental information which could be required by the commission appointed under this proposed act.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not think so at all, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRNES. As I think the Senator will see, the language of the conference report is that as to any reports, to which the Senator has referred in detail, that the regulations of the new commission with respect to such reports shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by law, rule, or regulation in respect to the same subject matter. The Senator has said that the reports of the railroads to the Interstate Commerce Commission cover practically every phase of the carrier's business, and there can be no duplication of any of that information.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, Mr. President, I think the requirements that may be made of the railroads will be limited only by the imagination of the clerks who submit the program to this new commission for its approval. There is not any question but that this authority, if it is construed as the Senator construes it—and I regret that I feel he is correct in his construction—will enable the new commission to make very exacting and very expensive requirements of the rail carriers.

To understand fully the effect and consequence of the action taken by the conferees, it must be borne in mind that the Senate amendment not only prohibited additional requirements being made of the railroads but the Senate amendment, in the language which I read a little while ago, provided—

That carriers subject to section 20a—

Namely, the rail carriers—and I again quote—shall not be subject to the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of this title, except that the commission may require that such carriers file with it duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Therefore, it would seem to me, if the purpose of the conferees is as stated by the Senator from South Carolina, that the obtaining of the duplicate statements and reports could have been had under the Senate amendment, and the information which he says is all that conceivably could be asked could have been available to the new commission and to all the investors in the land under the provisions of the Senate amendment, and that, therefore, what the conferees must have had in mind, when they changed the language to permit the new commission to exact other information and to prescribe additional requirements of the rail carriers, was that something other or different might be done.

It would be comforting to me if I could know what the conferees had in mind. The only member of the conference committee who expressed himself was content to say merely that he could not conceive of any additional requirement that might be exacted from the rail carriers. To me it is most regrettable, almost pathetic, that our conferees should have permitted a great piece of legislation of this kind to be written in a way that would permit oppressive requirements to be made of the rail carriers at a time when all of them are confronted with financial exactions beyond their ability to meet, at a time when they are barred from borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At a time when we are wondering what we will do with the rail carriers and whether we can leave them in private ownership at all, we find them confronted with these new exactions which, I think, are wholly unnecessary.

This provision in the conference report not only makes the carriers subject to section 12 of the bill requiring registration of securities which are entirely under the control of another Federal agency, but it requires the additional reports to which I have referred. There now remains this consideration: If it was the purpose of the conferees, in placing the railroads back under the registration requirement, to subject the railroads of the country in the issuance of their securities to the requirements of the Exchange Commission, we have an anomalous situation indeed.

I appreciate there is no express requirement here that the issuance of securities shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Exchange Commission, and yet I can conceive of many circumstances and various ways under and by which the new Commission may absolutely block the issuance of securities, may control, or thwart the effort of a railroad company with respect to the issuance of securities.

I can conceive, moreover, that the Interstate Commerce Commission in the exercise of its jurisdiction may take one attitude with respect to the issuance of securities, and the Exchange Commission take another. In the conflict of authority I am not prepared to say which agency of the Government would be supreme, but it rather seemed to me, because the Exchange Commission actually controls the sale of issues on the exchanges, that the power of the Exchange Commission would become supreme and paramount to the power and jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I very much doubt if Congress, in the enactment of this legislation, intended any such result to follow.

RELIEF OF FARM INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have here a bill which I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, which was reported this morning, being Senate bill 3580, the Frazier bill, which was offered as an amendment the other day. There were such misgivings as to the constitutionality of the proposed amendment that most of the Senate voted against it, probably, as I understood, on constitutional grounds.

However, the bill was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee referred the matter to a subcommittee. The subcommittee studied the question and reported back to the main committee. The report of the subcommittee to the main committee and the report of the main committee to the Senate both hold that this is a very good measure and that it is constitutional.

I should not have time, when the tariff bill is before us for consideration, to discuss the Frazier bill at length, and I am necessarily forced to say now what I have to say about it, so that I may have the time to bring it to the attention of the Senate as I desire. I do not know just when the Congress is expected to adjourn.

This bill has also been reported favorably in the House. I had hoped that it would be possible to have the bill laid before the Senate before proceeding with any further controversial legislation. This is not a piece of controversial legislation, in my opinion. In the Judiciary Committee there was practically no objection to it. If the party leaders have not had an opportunity to study it, I wish they would get copies of it and look at it while I am proceeding for a few minutes.

We have added a section to the original measure which was here the other day. The original bill as introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] provided, first, that there should be a bankruptcy proceeding for the farmer and the agriculturalist, and that when bankruptcy was applied for by a creditor, after going through certain procedure, the United States court should appoint appraisers. Those appraisers then would value the property; that is, they would value the farm which was affected by the mortgage or by any other lien or encumbrance.

After they had appraised it on the basis of its present value, not necessarily its cash value but on what would be a fair value at the present time, that appraisement would be submitted to the court, and then the court would allow a period of 5 or 5½ years in which the amount fixed by that appraisement might be paid and discharged by the original debtor.

If I may explain it further, we will say that in the year 1926 or 1927 or 1928 a farm might have been worth $10,000, on the basis of the 60-cent dollar. Today that farm would be worth probably around $4,500. Manifestly a mortgage of $10,000 on that farm cannot be paid in that way. The dollar is not of the same value. The Frazier bill, reported by the Judiciary Committee, practically with no opposition at all—if there were any opposition, it was not expressed—would do this: The farm which was worth $10,000 would be appraised by the court through competent appraisers at, we will say, a present value of $4,500. The original debtor would be given 5 or 5½ years in which to discharge that amount which had been fixed as the present value of the property according to the appraisement.

Another provision has been added in addition to that, section 7, which reads as follows:

(7) In case a majority in number and amount of all the secured and unsecured creditors of the debtor file written objections, at the first hearing, to the manner of payments and distribution of debtor's property as herein provided for, then the court, after having set aside the debtor's homestead and exemptions, shall stay all proceedings for a period of 6 years, during which 6 years the debtor shall retain possession of all or any part of his property, under the control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually for that part of the property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, such rental to be divided and distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, under the provisions of this act. At the end of 6 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the appraised price of the property of which he retains possession, less rentals paid, provided that upon request of any lienholder on real estate the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate and the debtor may then pay the reappraised price, less rentals paid, into the court, and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property to the debtor and he shall be discharged from all his debts, both private and public, as hereinbefore provided.

This amendment simply means that if the property owner is not granted by a majority of the creditors the right to pay out the property in 5 or 5½ years' time, then a majority of the creditors can simply say, "We do not care to have this done, but we will grant a moratorium."

Paragraph 7, which I have been trying to get my friends to notice, is a provision that if the debtor is not allowed to buy out the property in 5½ years, a majority of the creditors can simply prescribe a moratorium. In other words, when the court decides to take over the property of an adjudicated bankrupt, the creditors have one of two alternatives relative to disposing of the mortgaged farm. First, they may say that the man may have 5½ years in which to discharge the debt; second, if they do not want that done, they can grant a moratorium for a period of 6 years, at the end of which he would be required to pay out the debt in full. That is the section which we have added.

What I want to do is to try to get unanimous consent—because this bill must be carried out of here pretty soon if it is to do any good—to place this bill on the calendar at the conclusion of the pending bill; I do not mean the pending conference report. I think perhaps it will be acted on in the other House before it is acted on here. I do not think it will consume much time, but unless we can get it through the Senate in pretty much of a hurry it will not be of any value to us. The constitutional questions have been studied by two committees, and the bill has been reported out by the committees of both Houses. It is a form of relief similar to that which we have granted to all other industries except agriculture.

I should like to ask unanimous consent to make this bill the unfinished business following the disposition of the tariff bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana propound a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LONG. I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; if the Senator wishes to submit the request, I myself desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. LONG. Then, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3580 be made the unfinished business following the disposition of the tariff bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana indicates that the Committee on the Judiciary has attempted, at least, to bring the bill within the rule of the Minnesota mortgage case. I have had no opportunity to examine the measure, and therefore cannot consent at this time to giving it a preferential status. I shall be glad to make a study of the bill as soon as time is afforded me, and will then indicate further my view regarding it. For the present, I object to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Arkansas that there has been practically no important change made in the bill. The bill as originally drawn was within the Minnesota mortgage case. However, to my surprise a very splendid brief was submitted to the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, by Representative LEMKE, and the authorities were so clear and convincing that even if no Minnesota case had been decided recently the constitutionality of the bill would be almost beyond any question.

In other words, it seems that the courts have quite frequently, in these adjudicated cases, referred the creditor to the proceeds of the property rather than to the property itself. That has been done a number of times; and it seems that the courts have also exercised the right to postpone payments. It has been held a number of times by the courts that they can sell the property on terms. The court does not have to sell the property, even though there is a mortgage which gives the creditor a right to foreclose; yet the courts quite frequently have asserted their right to extend the payments in a way that will benefit the bankrupt property or the creditor or even the debtor. It has been decided time after time by the courts that they can postpone the time. Then, again, the courts have also held that instead of the creditor having his recourse to the property, he can have his recourse to the lien; so that there really is not anything of any serious purport in the bill.

I am not going to pursue the matter further at this time. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to look into it a little more closely within the next few hours, and I shall try to renew my request at a later time in the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement with reference to the amendments to the Securities Act of 1933 which are contained in the conference report just adopted.

I think it is a fair statement that under the conference report the provisions as to the civil liability of underwriters and of the officers and directors of a corporation are so amended that no honest man need have any fear of the law so long as he is willing to give to the corporation of which he is an officer, and in which he has invested his money, the same reasonable care that he gives to the management of his own property.

Every section of title 2, containing the so-called "Fletcher amendment", liberalizes the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. The modifications have grown out of the administration of the act during the past 12 months. Some of them seem to be merely administrative changes, but in each case they will be found to liberalize the existing requirements.

The provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 which have caused the greatest complaint are those as to the civil liability of underwriters and of the officers and directors of corporations on account of false statements in the registration statements filed by corporations. Under the existing law, where the registration statement contains a false statement of a material fact, or omits to state a material fact necessary to make the statement not misleading, any person who suffers a loss can sue the underwriters, the officers and the directors of the corporation. The existing law provides, however, among other things, that as regards any part of the statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert, or to be an extract from the report or valuation of an expert, the defendant shall not be liable if he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe that the statements therein were true. It also provides that a director is not liable if he can establish the same defense as to the statement of an officer.

There can be no doubt that the provisions of the existing law caused many men who were serving as directors of corporations to fear that they might be subjected to so-called "strike suits" as the result of the administration of that law. The existing law defined what constituted reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, and set forth the standard as the care required of a person occupying a fiduciary relationship. That phrase was greatly misunderstood by many officers and directors of corporations.

The amendments which have just been adopted by the Senate change the law in very important and material particulars. These amendments provide that a defendant shall not be liable for any false statement made on the authority of an expert, or purporting to be an extract from the report of an expert, if the defendant can show that he had no reasonable ground to believe, and did not believe, that the statements were untrue; and the law is changed to provide that in determining what constitutes a reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard shall be that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property. No honest man will contend that anything less should be demanded either of an underwriter or of an officer or director of a corporation offering securities for sale to the public.

However, the amendments adopted today give greater assurance to the honest officials of a corporation. Whereas the existing law permits a suit to be brought at any time within 10 years after the filing of the registration, the new law will permit such a suit to be brought only within 3 years. It has been argued heretofore that a director would be uncertain as to the settlement of his estate in case of death because of the liability that would exist for a period of 10 years. Under the new law, a suit must be brought within 3 years.

Under the existing law, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of the loss suffered by him as a result of the purchase and sale of the security. Under the new law, the defendant will have the right to show whether a part of the plaintiff's loss is due to some cause other than the untrue statement, and to such extent will be able to reduce the amount of the recovery by the plaintiff.

Another change in the amendments is as to the requirement that the plaintiff allege or prove that in purchasing the securities he relied upon the statement which was afterward discovered to be false. The new law modifies this requirement. It provides that the plaintiff will not have to allege or prove reliance until the corporation has made available to security holders an earning statement for at least 12 months subsequent to the filing of the registration statement.

After such an earning statement shall be made available, the plaintiff will be required to allege and prove that he relied upon the false statement.

There is justification for the provision that reliance be not required until a 12 months' earning statement is made public. When an issue of securities is proposed, a banking house will investigate the financial statement of the corporation. Based upon the statements contained in the registration statement of the corporation, a banking house will offer the securities at a certain price. Therefore, the market value is fixed by the false statement of the corporation. The individual investor relies upon the investigation made by the banker. It is fair to assume that this situation continues until such time as the corporation makes available a statement showing its earnings for 12 months. Then, the market value is influenced by the statement of actual earnings and not by the statements contained in the registration statement, which deceived the underwriter or banker and the investor. It is entirely different from trading in stocks upon the exchanges, where those who trade have access to statements of earnings constantly filed and published.

An additional assurance to the officers of a corporation is given by the provisions in the new bill aimed at so-called "strike suits." Under the new law, the court will have authority to assess costs against the plaintiff; and because it is recognized that the plaintiff who will resort to bringing nuisance suits has, as a rule, no financial responsibility, the court, on motion, can require such plaintiff to give bond to cover the costs of the suit before proceeding with a suit.

I repeat, it is a fair statement to make that when the provisions of the so-called "Fletcher amendments" are analyzed, they give assurance to every honest man who is an official of a corporation that he need have no fear of the Securities Act of 1933 as amended, provided he is willing to give to the corporation in which he has invested his money the same reasonable care that he gives to the management of his own property.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 85. An act for the relief of Paul J. Sisk;

S. 177. An act for the relief of Woodhouse Chain Works;

S. 256. An act for the relief of Milburn Knapp;

S. 308. An act to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to Harry H. Horton;

S. 512. An act for the relief of Peter Pierre;

S. 785. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Bolger;

S. 1073. An act for the relief of E. Walter Edwards;

S. 1081. An act for the relief of McKimmon & McKee, Inc.;

S. 1429. An act for the relief of Anthony J. Lynn;

S. 1460. An act for the relief of Edgar Stivers;

S. 1772. An act for relief of the Western Montana Clinic, Missoula, Mont.;

S. 2002. An act for the relief of R. S. Howard Co., Inc.;

S. 2342. An act for the relief of I. T. McRee;

S. 2745. An act to provide for changing the time of the meeting of Congress, the beginning of the terms of Members of Congress, and the time when the electoral votes shall be counted, and for other purposes;

S. 2889. An act for the relief of certain Indians of the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont.;

S. 2969. An act for the relief of the Mary Black Memorial Hospital;

S. 2980. An act to modify the effect of certain Chippewa Indian treaties on areas in Minnesota;

S. 3128. An act to pay certain fees to Maude G. Nicholson, widow of George A. Nicholson, late a United States commissioner;

S. 3307. An act for the relief of W. H. Le Duc; and

S.J.Res. 123. Joint resolution empowering certain agents authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to administer oaths to applicants for tax-exemption certificates under the Cotton Act of 1934.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that on May 28, 1934, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 258. An act for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway;

S. 1882. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lots to Indians within the Indian village of Taholah, on the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, Wash.;

S. 1328. An act to provide for the donation of certain Army equipment to posts of the American Legion; and

S. 3397. An act to amend the laws relating to the length of tours of duty in the Tropics and certain foreign stations in the case of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Finance and as a representative here of an important industrial State, I feel that I ought to take this occasion to present my views not only on the pending amendment but also on the bill itself.

I can understand Senators opposing this measure on the ground that the bill is unconstitutional.

I can understand the opposition to the measure on the ground that it is a dangerous public policy and contrary to the public welfare to entrust tariff revision through international agreements to the President.

For those of us, however, who are willing to grant this extraordinary power for a limited period of 3 years as an emergency measure, and because the President bases his request for this measure on the fact that it is a necessary link in his recovery program, there can be no claim reasonably advanced in favor of eliminating agricultural products and confining the President's tariff-adjustment authority merely to manufactured articles.

A vote for this measure must be based primarily on faith and confidence in the President to do the just thing, to act cautiously, prudently, and for the best interest of the entire country in executing these trade agreements.

This does not mean that the President is infallible or that he may not make mistakes. It is to be assumed, however, that if he does make mistakes, they will be no more numerous nor more injurious to our domestic and foreign trade than those the Congress may make in enacting a tariff bill.

Since the basis of this legislation is necessarily confidence that the President will wisely exercise the power which we propose to delegate to him, there is no validity to the proposition to exclude the products of agriculture from the scope of the President's tariff discretion. Instead it is sectionalism; indeed, it is selfishness. Any Member of the Senate who votes for this amendment, and, in the event of its adoption, then votes for the bill, is taking the position that he is quite willing to delegate to the President authority to enter into trade treaties, and in that connection to change tariff rates on some other State's products, but not on the chief products of his own State. He trusts the President with the industrial tariff rates, but not with agricultural tariff rates.

Of course, if this amendment shall prevail, the bill will be dead. Doubtless there will be some votes for the amendment for the express purpose of killing the bill by an oblique attack instead of by direct attack.

The exclusion of agricultural products from the President's authority would hamstring his trade-pact negotiations, assuming the enactment of the bill so restricted. But the bill would not reach enactment. No Member of Congress from an industrial constituency like my own could support a measure which proposed to limit the President's authority to industrial tariffs and which served notice in advance that tariff rates on industry and industry alone would be subject to revision.

I shall vote against the amendment—and I expect to see it rejected—but I give notice now that if the amendment shall be adopted I shall offer an amendment to exclude similarly from the operations of the President's trade-agreement authority all industrial tariffs. I shall offer such an amendment simply to demonstrate the utter inconsistency of the proponents of this agricultural-exclusion amendment. Then, upon the rejection of a similar exclusion for industry, I shall vote against the whole bill and urge its defeat.

In this matter, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. My position is, let us give the President authority over all tariff rates or else over none. Let us either trust him entirely in this matter or not at all.

The proposal to exclude tariffs on agriculture has the further irony that it is agriculture rather than industry which is to be the primary beneficiary of such trade agreements as the President may undertake to negotiate.

Let us prove this. We must assume that the objective of this bill is not to impair foreign trade but at least to retain our present export business; and, if possible, to expand it. If that is not the objective, then the bill is useless.

The very first fact that any study of our export trade reveals is that the retreat from world markets of American products in recent years has borne more heavily on agriculture than on industry. We are now talking about the preliminary facts which must be taken into consideration by those negotiating these proposed agreements. First of all, agriculture has suffered more in our export trade than has industry.

The next fact is that any program of economic recovery which does not take into account the surpluses of agricultural products produced in this country is doomed to fail.

We have been spending 3 years of legislative effort in trying to dispose of the surpluses of agricultural products. Everyone has conceded that that was the basis of recovery. Senators are familiar with the innumerable measures we have passed for that purpose. Now, an effort is being made to help take care of agricultural surpluses by negotiating with foreign countries to take them through trade agreements which we may make with those countries. Agriculture is to be the principal beneficiary of such agreements, yet the position of agriculture, insofar as the proposed amendment expresses its position, is that it will take any and all the benefits but is unwilling to make any contribution.

The third fact is that our principal markets for surplus agricultural products are in Europe, and that in European countries today there is a tendency, indeed, a successful effort, to exclude from their markets both agricultural and industrial products of the United States.

Mr. President, that cannot be denied. I now inquire, What are we going to do about it? Shall we pass a tariff bill? No one presents such a proposal. No such proposal is before us.

There is only one of two courses for us to follow; that is, do nothing or else permit the President of the United States to attempt by negotiations to revive our foreign trade through reciprocal-trade agreements.

There is no alternative, no other way to take care of our agricultural surpluses insofar as they may be disposed of through foreign trade. And bear in mind that the record shows that there has been a greater decline in the export of agricultural products than of industrial products.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH. I would rather not yield until after I have finished my general statement, because it covers my views on the subject; and when I shall have finished, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator answer one question?

Mr. WALSH. I prefer not to yield until I have finished my statement. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator afterward. If this amendment to the pending bill should be adopted, it would put the Executive in the position that when he sought to break down European barriers against American agricultural products, he would be met by the contention that agricultural products, according to the position which we ourselves have taken, should be outside the scope of the proposed agreements and that discussions must be confined to industrial products.

Thus one of the main objects of the bill, which is to find markets for agricultural surpluses, would be defeated.

The list of agricultural products of which surpluses are produced and for which foreign markets must be found or at least maintained at their present level, if agriculture is really to prosper, is appallingly large.

They are, first and foremost, cotton, tobacco, lard, and wheat.

Other agricultural products, whose dependence upon export trade is of vital importance, are canned vegetables, dried fruits, and canned fruits. Exports of fresh fruits also are large. Exports of fresh apples averaged in 1929 and 1932 approximately 20 percent of the total commercial production. Exports of fresh pears in 1932 represented 10 percent of the production. In the case of all dried fruits, the exports from 1929 to 1932 represented approximately 45 percent of the total production.

Let me repeat that. In the case of all dried fruits, the exports from 1929 to 1932 represented approximately 45 percent of the total production.

The injury that would result to producers and growers of raisins, dried apples, apricots, and prunes, if their tremendous export market should be taken away, would be very substantial.

While there are some imports of rice, it is essentially on export basis, some States, such as Louisiana, depending upon foreign markets for disposal of a considerable portion of their production.

We have been exporting more than 50 percent of the production of our prunes.

We have been exporting about 25 percent of our total production of canned fruits.

In some instances foreign countries have adopted sanitary and tariff barriers which have greatly impaired this export trade, with the result that distressing conditions have arisen among these producers, and prices paid to farmers have declined materially.

I inquire, How is that condition to be met? How are the barriers set up by foreign countries under the name of sanitation to be broken down to permit their markets to be kept open to us except by negotiation? Whether the negotiations succeed or not may be another question, but there is no alternative left but to make the attempt.

Mr. President, both agriculture and industry have a common interest in finding profitable foreign markets for their surplus products.

What I have been urging, however, is that the very first study of this matter of trade agreements leads to the conclusion that the Executive will fail unless he succeeds at least in retaining our present agricultural export markets, and that his primary objectives must be to take care of our agricultural surpluses. The adoption of this amendment, if my contention is sound, means that the very first objective of the bill will be defeated.

Mr. President, let me add a general statement relative to the bill as a whole. In my opinion tariff-protected industries are unduly alarmed about the proposed grant to the President of authority to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements. Their fears are exaggerated.

Under existing law the President may by Executive order increase or decrease existing import duties not more than 50 percent of the existing rate, upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission. Under this bill the President's authority to modify existing tariff rates is similarly limited to 50 percent, and by the terms of an amendment to the present bill, which our committee has added, it will be incumbent upon the President to seek advice and information from the Tariff Commission and from other official channels.

Under existing law the President is not required to follow the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, but may not act affirmatively without the Commission's recommendation. Under the pending bill the President may disregard the Tariff Commission's advice if he sees fit, as in the past, but, more than that, may change a rate for purposes of a trade agreement within the prescribed limit without any recommendation from the Commission.

Neither under the existing law nor under the pending bill is the President permitted to transfer any article from the free list to the dutiable list, or vice versa.

Concededly, Congress is proposing to broaden the authority of the Executive to change tariff rates, but not so broadly as has been so generally assumed. We admit that this is a broader power than has heretofore been possessed by the Executive. Furthermore, this extension of the President's authority is only for the express purpose of permitting the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements, and is in the nature of a temporary and experimental grant of authority for the purpose of stimulating our economic recovery.

By the terms of the bill the President's new authority is limited to 3 years.

We have the President's pledge, contained in his message to Congress on this present bill, that "no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed." We have the requirement, contained in the Senate committee amendment, for public notice of intention to negotiate a trade agreement, and an opportunity to all interested parties to be heard, and to protest, if there be basis for protest.

No one contends that extension and expansion of our own foreign trade, if it may be secured without prejudice to our domestic trade, is other than desirable. The controversy turns on whether it is going to be possible to make reciprocal-trade agreements which will promote our foreign trade without prejudice to or sacrifice of our home markets. I entertain serious doubts on that score. But that can only be determined by negotiation.

We are proposing to authorize the President to negotiate trade agreements. I see no basis for the assumption that the President will abuse this authority or will actually conclude any trade agreement unless it is actually beneficial to our own Nation. We must concede that. Nor do I assume that any of our own industries are going to be sacrificed or one preferred over another.

Such an assumption presupposes a policy the exact reverse of the policies of the President.

Mr. President, in view of the increasing restrictions and obstacles placed in the way of normal movement of trade between the nations, this Congress is faced with the problem of either passing such a measure as this—which provides the only method at the present time for regaining some share of the trade of the world—or of watching the continued distress of agriculture and of such other industry which must have a foreign market to prosper.

This is what no action at this time means. Mr. President, no action at this time means laissez faire—doing nothing. The only hope, the only promise of improved conditions in our export trade is in permitting the President for the limited period named in this measure, as an emergency measure and as a part of his recovery program, to enter into negotiations, make an effort, if possible, to improve our domestic trade and our foreign trade by entering into agreements, if it is possible by so doing, to improve agricultural and industrial conditions in this country.

I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator sat in the Democratic convention, did he not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator remember our platform pledge on the tariff there?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. We were going to leave it to a fact-finding commission to adjudicate the difference in the cost of production.

Mr. WALSH. I recall that.

Mr. LONG. I wonder if the Senator would have any objection to the Fletcher amendment, which simply provides that the farmer will be guaranteed on whatever is imported to this country that there will be a rate equal to the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad? Would the Senator object to supporting that kind of an amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I would object to supporting that kind of an amendment or any amendment that restricts the opportunity for negotiating on any basis other than improving our export trade.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator one more question. The Senator has made a marvelous speech. The Senator lives in Boston, Mass.?

Mr. WALSH. Unfortunately, perhaps, I do not live in Boston; but I live 35 miles away from Boston, in a manufacturing community surrounded by agricultural communities.

Mr. LONG. I was wondering if the manufacturing interests of the Senator's State were more interested in swapping farm commodities against manufactures or in swapping manufactures against farm commodities?

Mr. WALSH. I believe the thinking, intelligent people of Massachusetts and of New England realize there can be no permanent industrial or economic recovery in this country until the agricultural problem shall be satisfactorily settled, until the agriculturist receives more for what he produces than he receives today, until the excessive difference between what the producer receives and what the consumer pays is in some way adjusted.

I represent an industrial State. I have taken occasion to point out that, in my judgment, the undertaking of the President to negotiate trade agreements will fail, and fail completely, unless, first and foremost, he shall find means and ways of taking care of the agricultural surpluses of the country. I think that is the very crux of this whole proposition. Before he enters into negotiations as to industrial products, he has got to find a way to do that, as we have been trying in the Congress to find a way to do it. We have passed bill after bill. What for? To see if the agricultural surpluses could be taken care of, because we have made that the basis for any effort toward permanent recovery.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield further to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I think it was either in Boston or just before the President reached Boston—the Senator will remember—that the President said:

> Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products.

I have wondered if the Senator had been apprized of that statement.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that the President had in mind that it was absurd to reduce duties on agricultural products where the duties were effective. It is my judgment, and I assume it is the President's judgment, that there are many agricultural products the duties on which are not effective.

Mr. LONG. The Senator would not want to do one of these absurd things, would he? He would not want to do the absurd thing of reducing tariff rates on agricultural products? The Senator is a reasonable man, and a strong supporter of the administration, and the President said it would be an absurdity to talk about reducing the tariff on agricultural products. I am just wondering if the Senator would have any objection to having the bill perfected along that line?

Mr. WALSH. I would object to any amendment of that kind, because I believe the President should have authority, if he is going to negotiate trade agreements, to negotiate for a reduction of duties on manufactured products where the duties are ineffective and too high, and also for a reduction of duties upon agricultural products where they are ineffective and too high, if it will lead to an increase in the export business of the United States and help increase our domestic production.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator one more question, and then I will ask no more. I understood that it was the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Massachusetts who drew the document for the Democrats of the Finance Committee calling on the people of the Nation to rise up in opposition to prevent the encroachment of bureaucratic power. I was wondering if the Senator has had reason to change those views.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I anticipated such a question. I have always been, and am today, unalterably opposed to a permanent policy being adopted in this country giving to the Chief Executive control over tariff duties. I have voted against such a proposal and have spoken against it, and when this bill was first proposed to the Finance Committee, when I left the room of that committee, the first statement I made to the press was to the effect that unless the bill was restricted to a limited period of time, covering the period of the depression, say 3 years, I would oppose it. I find nothing in my present attitude inconsistent with the position which I have repeatedly taken, that it is an unsound policy to deliver over as a permanent power the control of tariff rates and duties to the Chief Executive of this country. I think, however, he ought to have more control than he now has. I have advocated on this floor limiting tariff discussions and votes in this Chamber to single commodities. I have advocated also the right of the President to veto a single item in a tariff bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the Senator in a moment, when I shall have finished this thought. So I say there is nothing inconsistent between my position in the past and that which I now assume, that with the President's seeking to bring about recovery in this country by means which he believes will be helpful, he should be intrusted temporarily, in view of the conditions in the world, in view of the trade barriers that have been erected all over the world, in view of the discrimination against our products, in view of the decline in exports, with the power proposed to be given to him by the pending bill. I see nothing inconsistent with a position in opposition to a general policy of Executive control of tariffs and favoring a temporary policy, during this period of distress, during this period of depression, intrusting him with the authority by negotiation to improve, if he can, conditions and giving him an opportunity to undertake negotiations, designed to improve by this method our declining export business. I repeat, I see nothing inconsistent in that course.

I do not mean to withdraw one iota from the position I have always taken, that I am unalterably opposed to the Executive's, as a national policy, having complete and final control over tariff making; but the present situation is different. I have changed my position on measures radically changing our permanent policies, such as the economy law. Would any of us ever think of voting for such an act under normal conditions? Would any of us think of voting billions of dollars to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purposes for which we have given it to them? Would any of us think of appropriating large sums of money such as we have appropriated to protect the farm owners and home owners? Dozens of measures have been passed in the Congress which are inconsistent with all the policies which we have stood for and advocated as Democrats and United States Senators; but we are in the midst of unusual, exceptional, and extraordinary conditions. That these new measures will succeed no man can predict with certainty; that there has been a measure of success to this hour no man can question. What we are doing is trying, as best we may, in this hour of darkness and depression, to find some way, to grip some lifesaver, which will relieve the distress from which we are suffering, and thus bring about the dawn of a better day.

After serious consideration of this measure and realizing that it has been given exceptional and serious study by the President of the United States and his advisers, I have reached the conclusion that no harm can come—and I hope and pray some good may come—from intrusting the President with this extraordinary power; power which we would not yield, as we would not have yielded other powers we have granted, except for the economic war, a war not so bloody as military war but just as destructive and harmful in the suffering involved, in its danger, in its misery, in its poverty, and in its curtailment of the prosperity which our people have enjoyed for more than a century under the benign guidance of the Supreme Being.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Kentucky, and I yield to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wanted to make an inquiry of the Senator, in connection with the interruption of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who evidently had in mind to create the impression of some inconsistency on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as others, relative to the attitude we took in 1931 when the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was under consideration. My name, as have the names of other Senators, has been bandied about here during this debate because we took a position against the amendment that was adopted in the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill; but is there not a wide difference between a bald delegation on the part of Congress to the President of the power to fix tariff rates and a law making the President the negotiating agency of Congress to bring about agreements by which we hope to sell more of our exportable products?

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. And so there is no inconsistency whatever?

Mr. WALSH. Further, there is an entire difference between a permanent policy and a temporary policy. Of course, conditions determine all policies. We would not permit the President of the United States in peace times to exercise the power he does in war, and we would not permit the President of the United States under normal conditions and circumstances to enjoy the power we propose to give him here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, one more question. Would it not be an act of folly for Congress to authorize the President to enter into agreements designed to bring about a larger sale of our commodities in the markets of the world and by the same act tie his hands and hitch him to a post so that he could not actually negotiate any such agreements without laying all his cards and all our cards on the table, whereby our negotiating opponents might see exactly what we proposed to do or what our limitations of authority might be?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. When the document to which so much reference has been made was signed by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, is it not a fact that the essential controversy involved in the tariff bill of 1930 was whether the flexible provisions of the tariff were to be made the permanent policy of the Government or a temporary policy?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. There is no essential difference between section 415 of the Fordney-McCumber Act and section 336 of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. The controversy was whether the power which had been granted the President in the Fordney-McCumber Act should become a permanent policy of the Government. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. President, I want to say a word to Senators who, like myself, represent manufacturing or industrial communities. Of course, if they are opposed to the bill, and they have a right to be, as I have already pointed out, I could respect the opposition based upon certain grounds; but it does not seem to me they have any right to vote for the Johnson amendment for the purpose of restricting and limiting the trade negotiations simply to industrial products. It seems to me they are discriminating against their own industries in so doing. They are taking the chance that if harm comes it will come only to those industries which are the basis of the prosperity of their own States. I do not assume that harm is going to come.

Those who oppose the measure, many of them at least, base their opposition upon the ground that it is unsound public policy, and that they do not feel they can trust the protection of the particular industries to the investigation and authority and power of the Executive of our country. I take the position that if we are going to give the power to make agreements, the President ought to have the power to make agreements as to all American products, or none. I take the position that the prosperity of the country depends upon the prosperity of agriculture and industry alike, and I go further—a little bit more upon agriculture than industry, because it is fatal to the prosperity of any people to have agriculture prostrate.

Mr. President, I have held the floor longer than I intended and I now yield the floor.

DEBTS OWED THE UNITED STATES BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my address to the Congress January 3 I stated that I expected to report later in regard to debts owed the Government and people of this country by the governments and people of other countries. There has been no formal communication on the subject from the Executive since President Hoover's message of December 19, 1932.

The developments are well known, having been announced to the press as they occurred. Correspondence with debtor governments has been made public promptly and is available in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is, however, timely to review the situation.

Payments on the indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States which fell due in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, were postponed on the proposal of President Hoover announced June 20, 1931, and authorized by the joint resolution of Congress approved December 23, 1931. Yugoslavia alone suspended payment while rejecting President Hoover's offer of postponement.

In the 6 months of July to December 1932, which followed the end of the Hoover moratorium year, payments of $125,000,000 from 12 governments fell due. Requests to postpone the payments due December 15, 1932, were received from Great Britain, France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Poland. The replies made on behalf of President Hoover through the Department of State declined these requests, generally stating that it was not in the power of the Executive to grant them, and expressing a willingness to cooperate with the debtor government in surveying the entire situation. After such correspondence, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Great Britain, Italy, Latvia, and Lithuania met their contractual obligations, while Belgium, Estonia, France, and Poland made no payment.

In a note of December 11, 1932, after the United States had declined to sanction postponement of the payment due December 15, the British Government, in announcing its decision to make payment of the amount due on December 15, made the following important statement:

> For reasons which have already been placed on record His Majesty's Government are convinced that the system of intergovernmental payments in respect of the war debts, as it existed prior to Mr. Hoover's initiative on June 20, 1931, cannot be revived without disaster. Since it is agreed that the whole subject should be reexamined between the United States and the United Kingdom this fundamental point need not be further stressed here.
> In the view of His Majesty's Government therefore the payment to be made on December 15 is not to be regarded as a resumption of the annual payments contemplated by the existing agreement. It is made because there has not been time for discussion with regard to that agreement to take place and because the United States Government have stated that in their opinion such a payment would greatly increase the prospects of a satisfactory approach to the whole question.
> His Majesty's Government propose accordingly to treat the payment on December 15 as a capital payment of which account should be taken in any final settlement and they are making arrangements to effect this payment in gold as being in the circumstances the least prejudicial of the methods open to them.
> This procedure must obviously be exceptional and abnormal and His Majesty's Government desire to urge upon the United States Government the importance of an early exchange of views with the object of concluding the proposed discussion before June 15 next in order to obviate a general break-down of the existing intergovernmental agreements.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, replied to this note on the same day that acceptance by the Secretary of the Treasury of funds tendered in payment of the December 15 installment cannot constitute approval of or agreement to any condition or declaration of policy inconsistent with the terms of the agreement inasmuch as the Executive has no power to amend or to alter those terms either directly or by implied commitment.

No payment was made by France December 15, 1932, as the French Chamber of Deputies by a vote on the morning of December 14 refused authorization to make the payment. The resolution voted by the French Chamber at that time invited the French Government to convoke as soon as possible, in agreement with Great Britain and other debtors, a general conference for the purpose of adjusting all international obligations and putting an end to all international transfers for which there is no compensating transaction. The resolution stated that the Chamber, despite legal and economic considerations, would have authorized settlement had the United States been willing to agree in advance to the convening of the conference for these purposes.

This resolution of the French Chamber is to be read in relation with the public statements of policy made by President Hoover and by myself on November 23, 1932. President Hoover said:

> The United States Government from the beginning has taken the position that it would deal with each of the debtor governments separately, as separate and distinct circumstances surrounded each case. Both in the making of the loans and in the subsequent settlements with the different debtors, this policy has been rigidly made clear to every foreign government concerned.

I said:

> I find myself in complete accord with the four principles discussed in the conference between the President and myself yesterday and set forth in a statement which the President has issued today.
>
> These debts were actual loans made under distinct understanding and with the intention that they would be repaid.
> In dealing with the debts each government has been and is to be considered individually, and all dealings with each government are independent of dealings with any other debtor government. In no case should we deal with the debtor governments collectively.
>
> Debt settlements made in each case take into consideration the capacity to pay of the individual debtor nations.
> The indebtedness of the various European nations to our Government has no relation whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them.

Of the $125,000,000 due and payable December 15, 1932, the Treasury received $98,750,000, of which $95,550,000 was the British payment made subsequent to the above correspondence, and the other $3,000,000 represented payments by five other debtor nations. The amounts due from Belgium, Estonia, France, Hungary, and Poland which were not received amounted to $25,000,000, of which $19,260,000 was due and payable by France.

In my statement issued November 23, 1932, I had said:

> I firmly believe in the principle that an individual debtor should at all times have access to the creditor; that he should have opportunity to lay facts and representations before the creditor and that the creditor always should give courteous, sympathetic, and thoughtful consideration to such facts and representations.
> This is a rule essential to the preservation of the ordinary relationships of life. It is a basic obligation of civilization. It applies to nations as well as to individuals.
> The principle calls for a free access by the debtor to the creditor. Each case should be considered in the light of the conditions and necessities peculiar to the case of each nation concerned.

On January 20, 1933, President Hoover and I agreed upon the following statement:

> The British Government has asked for a discussion of the debts. The incoming administration will be glad to receive their representative early in March for this purpose. It is, of course, necessary to discuss at the same time the world economic problems in which the United States and Great Britain are mutually interested and therefore that representatives should also be sent to discuss ways and means for improving the world situation.

On March 4, 1933, the situation with regard to the indebtedness of other governments to the United States was, in brief, as follows:

France: The French Parliament had refused to permit payment of $19,261,432.50 interest due on the $3,863,650,000 bonds of France owned by the United States.

Great Britain: With respect to the British bonded debt held by the Treasury in the principal amount of $4,368,000,000, Great Britain in meeting a due payment of $30,000,000 principal and $65,550,000 interest had stated that the payment was not to be regarded as a resumption of the annual payments contemplated under the funding agreement of June 19, 1923, but was to be treated, so far as the British Government was concerned, as a capital payment of which account should be taken in any final settlement.

Italy: With respect to the $2,004,900,000 principal amount of bonds of the Italian Government held by the United States Treasury, the Italian Government had paid the sum of $1,245,437 interest due December 15, 1932; but in doing so it referred to a resolution of the Grand Council of Fascism, adopted December 5, 1932, in which "a radical solution of the 'sponging of the slate' type was declared to be necessary for the world's economic recovery."

Czechoslovakia in making a payment of $1,500,000 principal due December 15, 1932, on its debt of $165,000,000 had stated that "this payment constitutes in the utmost self-denial of the Czechoslovak people their final effort to meet the obligation under such extremely unfavorable circumstances."

Belgium had declined to pay $2,125,000 interest due December 15, 1932, on its bonds of $400,680,000 held by the Treasury of the United States, and in doing so had recited circumstances which it stated "prevent it from resuming on December 15 the payments which were suspended by virtue of the agreements made in July 1931", adding, "Belgium is still disposed to collaborate fully in seeking a general settlement of intergovernmental debts and of the other problems arising from the depression."

Poland had not paid the $232,000 principal and $3,070,980 interest due December 15, 1932, on its bond in the principal amount of $206,057,000 held by the Treasury of the United States.

Of the nine other governments whose bonds are held by the Treasury of the United States, Estonia and Hungary had not met payments due December 15, 1932.

Austria is availing itself of a contractual right to postpone payments.

Greece was making only partial payments on its foreign bonded indebtedness, including that held by the United States.

Yugoslavia had declined to sign any Hoover moratorium agreement and had stopped paying.

No payment by Rumania had fallen due since the close of the Hoover moratorium.

Finland, Latvia, and Lithuania were current in their payments.

Although I had informal discussions concerning the British debt with the British Ambassador even before March 4, 1933, and in April there was further discussion of the subject with the Prime Minister of Great Britain and between experts of the two Governments, it was not possible to reach definitive conclusions. On June 13 the British Government gave notice that in the then existing circumstances it was not prepared to make the payment due June 15, 1933, but would make an immediate payment of $10,000,000 as an acknowledgment of the debt pending a final settlement. To this notice reply was made by the Acting Secretary of State, pointing out that it is not within the discretion of the President to reduce or cancel the existing debt owed to the United States nor to alter the schedule of debt payments contained in the existing settlement. At the same time I took occasion to announce that in view of the representations of the British Government, the accompanying acknowledgment of the debt itself and the payment made, I had no personal hesitation in saying that I would not characterize the resultant situation as a default. In view of the suggestion of the expressed desire of the British Government to make representations concerning the debt, I suggested that such representations be made in Washington as soon as convenient.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, had authorized the President for a period of 6 months from that date to accept silver in payment of installments due from any foreign government, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed a price of 50 cents an ounce. In the payments due June 15, 1933, the Governments of Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Italy, Lithuania, and Rumania took advantage of this offer.

On June 15, 1933, payments of about $144,000,000 were due from foreign governments, the larger amounts being $76,000,000 from Great Britain, almost $41,000,000 from France, and $13,500,000 from Italy. The amounts actually paid into the Treasury were $11,374,000, of which $10,000,000 was paid by Great Britain and $1,000,000 by Italy. Communications were received from most of the debtor governments asking a discussion of the debt question with the United States Government.

In October 1933 representatives of the British Government arrived in Washington and conferred for some weeks with representatives of this Government. These discussions made clear the existing difficulties and the discussions were adjourned.

The British Government then stated that it continued to acknowledge the debt without prejudicing its right again to present the matter of readjustment and that it would express this acknowledgment tangibly by a payment of $7,500,000 on December 15. In announcing this I stated that in view of the representations, of the payment, and of the impossibility of accepting at that time any of the proposals for a readjustment of the debt, I had no personal hesitation in saying that I should not regard the British Government as in default.

On December 15, 1933, there was due and payable by foreign governments on their debt-funding agreements and the Hoover moratorium agreements a total of about $153,000,000. The payments actually received were slightly less than $9,000,000, including $7,500,000 paid by Great Britain, $1,000,000 by Italy, and about $230,000 by Finland.

At the present time Finland remains the only foreign government which has met all payments on its indebtedness to the United States punctually and in full.

It is a simple fact that this matter of the repayment of debts contracted to the United States during and after the World War has gravely complicated our trade and financial relationships with the borrowing nations for many years.

These obligations furnished vital means for the successful conclusion of a war which involved the national existence of the borrowers, and later for a quicker restoration of their normal life after the war ended.

The money loaned by the United States Government was in turn borrowed by the United States Government from the people of the United States, and our Government in the absence of payment from foreign governments is compelled to raise the shortage by general taxation of its own people in order to pay off the original Liberty bonds and the later refunding bonds.

It is for these reasons that the American people have felt that their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations. The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors, but are nevertheless in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts.

We shall continue to expect the debtors on their part to show full understanding of the American attitude on this debt question. The people of the debtor nations will also bear in mind the fact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources—whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt owed to the citizens of the United States, or for purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditure or like purposes.

In presenting this report to you I suggest that, in view of all existing circumstances, no legislation at this session of the Congress is either necessary or advisable.

I can only repeat that I have made it clear to the debtor nations again and again that "the indebtedness to our Government has no relation whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them", and that each individual nation has full and free opportunity individually to discuss its problem with the United States.

We are using every means to persuade each debtor nation as to the sacredness of the obligation and also to assure them of our willingness, if they should so request, to discuss frankly and fully the special circumstances relating to means and method of payment.

Recognizing that the final power lies with the Congress, I shall keep the Congress informed from time to time and make such new recommendations as may later seem advisable.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is as to the reference of the message from the President of the United States, which has been read.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that the message ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator refers to the President's debt message?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Does not the Senator from Mississippi think so?

Mr. HARRISON. Let the message rest on the table for the present. All matters with relation to the foreign debts, however, went to the Finance Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator is right as to that. The Finance Committee did have charge of matters with reference to the foreign debts.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Finance had charge of the debt-funding agreements.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us talk of it for a moment subsequently and let it remain in abeyance for the time being.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the message remain on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will lie on the table.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the reciprocal tariff bill has been before the Senate for more than 2 weeks. It has been fully discussed. We are proceeding now under a limitation on debate, entered into by unanimous consent, which many Senators hope will bring the issues involved in the bill to a speedy conclusion.

It is thought that there is a possibility of voting on the passage of the bill before the close of the present day, although in order to do that it may be necessary to remain in session much later than usual. Certainly if that cannot be done the Senate will be asked to stay in session tomorrow and proceed with the measure.

It does not seem to me either necessary or desirable that I should enter into a full discussion of the bill, for the reason that others have presented clearly and forcefully, both of the primary controversies, that relating to constitutionality and that relating to public policy.

In the hearings, which are available for use of Senators, is a statement and a brief submitted by the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, which, in my opinion, foreclose all questions which have been raised or which are likely to be raised touching the power of the Congress under the Constitution to pass the pending legislation.

The statement and the brief referred to embrace the precedents, from the act of 1794, in which the Executive was given authority to place an embargo on all commerce and to rescind it, down through all the successive years. In many of the decades authority was given for the execution of Executive agreements affecting the commerce of the United States in nowise distinguishable, from a legal standpoint, from those which are authorized to be entered into under the terms of the pending bill.

In the cases which are cited in the statement and brief to which I have referred in support of the constitutionality of the measure, it is made to appear that every question involving the legality of the act, or the power of the Congress to pass it, has been resolved, and has been resolved in cases so closely analogous to that now before the bar of the Senate that it would be presuming upon the time and upon the patience of Senators to extend the discussion on that phase of the subject.

I recall that one of the great lawyers in this body, one whom we all love and respect, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in a speech which rang with earnestness and eloquence, a speech which was quoted in the press and which has been referred to here since as authority, took the position that, since the Constitution gives to the President the power to enter into treaties with foreign nations by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and since a treaty is a contract or a compact, there exists no other constitutional way in which the Government of the United States may make a contract with a foreign government.

The statement, at the time it was made, was uttered with such fervor and enthusiasm that it was misleading. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, in the arguments of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] made yesterday, and in other addresses to which the Senate has listened, it has been pointed out that there are at least two ways in which the United States may contract with a foreign government or with foreign governments. One is by the exercise of the treaty-making power; the other is by the exercise of the power to enter into executive agreements.

It has been made clear here, and need not be reaffirmed, that the basis of an executive agreement is authority of law; that no executive agreement may be entered into unless such agreement has been authorized by act of the Congress. I lay down the proposition of law, which has not heretofore been asserted, but which, in my judgment, follows from the authorities which have been cited, that when an executive agreement is entered into by the President under a valid act of the Congress, it is just as much an exercise of the legislative power as any legislation Congress can pass, and it is no more in violation of the legislative power than is the enactment of a joint resolution or the adoption of a concurrent resolution within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

So that it is unsound in law to assert that the United States cannot make a contract with a foreign government except by the exercise of the treaty-making power, and the complete legal answer to the assertion that the pending bill constitutes an unwarranted delegation of the treaty-making power is that it does not presume or assume to exercise the treaty-making power in any particular. It does involve the exercise of the legislative power, and only the legislative power.

The Government has the choice of making reciprocal trade agreements through the employment of the treaty-making power, and it has also the choice of authorizing the Executive to enter into reciprocal trade agreements under the authority of an act of Congress.

In my judgment, that statement of the legal proposition is so clear that it need not be elaborated. There are two ways recognized in the Constitution of the United States, and by the precedents in which contracts may be made with foreign governments, and one of them is just as valid as the other, and no one can correctly say that the employment of the one constitutes a violation of the other.

I proceed now to a discussion of some of the questions which are involved in the policy of the legislation.

Senators have chided those on this side of the Chamber who opposed the enactment of the flexible tariff provision of the act of 1922, and of subsequent acts, on the theory that there is an inconsistency in opposing that act and in favoring the pending bill. In other addresses it has been stated with aggressive earnestness that the enactment of the pending bill would be a violation of the Democratic platform of 1932. I propose to answer both those assertions.

The flexible-tariff provision, as has been ably stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], was an effort permanently to change the policy, under the Constitution, of enacting tariff laws. It was an effort to give the Executive, when advised by an Executive commission, the right to make rates within certain limitations. It did not involve in any sense the primary purpose carried in the pending legislation. This proposed legislation does not contemplate a permanent policy in tariff making different from that which has prevailed throughout the past. Anyone who is able to read must have enough intelligence to know that fact. What the pending legislation does—and I assert it confidently and with great earnestness—is to provide a method by which the foreign commerce of the United States may be revived and extended.

The flexible-tariff provision of the law is not adapted to that end, was not devised for that purpose, has no application to the objects contemplated by this measure. I have made that so plain that even the opponents of this proposed legislation will recognize the conclusion to be unassailable.

The purpose of the pending measure, its outstanding, dominating, and controlling purpose, is to revive the failing commerce of the United States. It is not to destroy or to injure agriculture, and I say to those who sit on the other side of the Chamber who are making every possible effort to discredit the purpose of the proponents of the pending legislation that if the farmers of the country and the people of the country generally are to be compelled to rely for a revival of commerce on the policies which the opponents of the pending legislation have put into force respecting the tariff, then we will go on down, down, down into a bottomless pit. Disaster is threatened, is imminent.

Mr. President, what has been the effect of the tariff policy, of the commercial policy, which has prevailed in the United States and which those on the other side are so anxious to perpetuate? The effect has been to destroy or threaten the destruction of agriculture and other forms of industry.

Time and again during this debate the Senator from Mississippi and others have placed in the RECORD the figures showing that during the last few years—certainly since 1928—the foreign commerce of the United States has been diminished out of proportion to the reduction which has taken place in the foreign commerce of the principal competing nations.

Senators who are so anxious to adopt an amendment which will prevent the President from entering into reciprocal trade agreements affecting any agricultural or horticultural commodity should remember that the tariff has never been effective for the protection of commodities which are produced in large quantities for export. I challenge any Senator here to dispute the statement. We all know that after very high tariff rates were placed on certain agricultural commodities, including wheat, that wheat in the United States sold at times for less than the amount of the tariff. Under the law of economics which has prevailed from the beginning of time, commodities which are produced for foreign export, produced in large surpluses that cannot be disposed of in the domestic markets, do not derive great benefit from any form of protection that has ever been devised.

It was in recognition of this fact, while high tariffs were in the law and prevailed, that we adopted a policy of attempting by automatic and somewhat arbitrary means to raise the domestic prices, prices to our own consumers, of agricultural products, recognizing that the high tariffs imposed by the tariff law on those commodities are not effective for the protection of the commodities.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In confirmation of what the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has just stated about wheat, I recall that in the fall of 1931, in Chicago, wheat was selling for from 47 to 50 cents a bushel and Colorado farmers were receiving less than 40 cents a bushel, with a tariff duty on wheat of 42 cents a bushel.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The instance cited by the Senator confirms the statement I have just made, and I thank him.

At my request I have been supplied with certain figures which I think are further illustrative of this proposition. I am going to place in the RECORD a table which shows the index numbers of farm prices by groups. This table includes grains, fruits and vegetables, meat animals, dairy products, poultry products, cotton and cottonseed. I shall not take the time, Mr. President, to review the table in complete detail. It shows, assuming the base of 100 in 1923 to 1925, that for all groups comprised the lowest point reached was in February 1933, when the index figure was only 35—a little more than one-third of what it was at the end of 1925.

As to grains, beginning again in 1925 at the base figure 100, the price in December 1932 was 25, or one-fourth of what it was in 1925.

With respect to fruits and vegetables, the price, 100 in 1925, fell to 41 in November 1932 and February 1933.

With respect to meat animals, the price has constantly declined from 100 to the lowest figure in January 1933.

Dairy products have declined from 100 to 42. They have been declining constantly through the intervening years down to 42 in March and October 1933.

Poultry products had a similar decline, except that they fell to the low index number of 36 in 1933.

Cotton and cottonseed beginning at 100 in 1925 fell to 18 in June 1932.

Mr. President, the unanswerable conclusion from these figures is that the tariffs which have been imposed have not been effective in maintaining the prices of the commodities referred to.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD the table of index numbers of farm prices by groups to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Index numbers of farm prices, by groups
(1923–25=100)

Yearly average	All groups combined	Grains	Fruits and vegetables	Meat animals	Dairy products	Poultry products	Cotton and cottonseed
1923–25	100	100	100	100	100	100	100

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The table which the Senator has presented proves conclusively two things: First, that during this depression the exportations of agricultural products have decreased in volume more than have the exportations of manufactured articles and, secondly, that the prices of agricultural products have declined in a greater percentage than have the prices of manufactured products.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that is the next thought I am coming to. Not only had the prices of the agricultural products gone down through these years to a very low point, only beginning to rise after the administration price-restoration measures or increased-purchasing-power measures were enacted and put into effect, but it is also shown by the record which I am presenting to the Senate that the prices received for farm products have declined more than have prices paid by farmers for commodities used in production or for personal needs.

In 1932 the farmer's products brought only 41 percent as much as they did on the average in 1923 to 1925. The farmer continued to pay 70 percent of the previous level for the commodities which he had to purchase. And wages which he had to pay in order to hire farm labor had fallen to 51 percent. The commodities which he had to buy for use in farm production had fallen in comparison to only 74 percent.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table which I believe is illuminating as to these assertions of the index numbers of prices received and paid by farmers, 1923 to 1925 being taken as the base period at 100. These figures are taken from the Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Index numbers of prices received and paid by farmers
(1923–25=100)

Yearly average	Prices received for farm products	Prices paid by farmers for commodities bought			Wages paid to hired farm labor
		Total	For living	For production
1923–25	100	100	100	100	100
1929	99	100	98	101	102
1931	58	81	79	84	69
1932	41	70	67	74	51
December 1932	37	68	64	72	44

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The trend of agriculture is further shown by the drastic decline in the export of agricultural commodities between 1928 and 1933. Mark you now, while these prices were going down at an astonishing rate, and while the prices of manufactured products necessary for production and for living necessities among farmers were going down slower than the agricultural products, we find a most astonishing and illuminating comparison. Between the years 1928 to 1933 exports of wheat declined 96 percent in value and 91.7 percent in volume.

Barley declined 92.5 percent in value and 85.7 percent in quantity.

Exports of corn declined 90 percent in value and 79.2 percent in volume.

Wheat exports declined 81.3 percent in value and 66.6 percent in quantity.

Condensed, evaporated, and dried milk declined 79.5 percent in value and 67.5 percent in quantity.

Lard fell to less than one-third of its former value and to less than one-fourth of its former volume in our export trade, while hams and shoulders declined five-eighths in value and three-eighths in volume.

At the same time exports of manufactured cotton were declining from $920,000,000 per annum to less than $400,000,000.

Exports of leaf tobacco declined from $164,000,000 to $18,000,000.

Yet Senators have the nerve to stand on the floor of the Senate and ask to perpetuate a system that has not only wrecked industry but has destroyed or threatened the destruction of agriculture.

Another statement which has been made is that in espousing this bill Members on this side of the aisle repudiate the Democratic platform of 1932. I propose to read that platform and to show that only in the distorted imagination of the visionary can such a contention be made. The language of the platform is:

> We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference.

During the course of this debate, Senators, ignorant of the history or willfully perverting the meaning of that language, have given it an application which intelligence will not justify. It will be remembered that the principal criticism of the way in which the flexible-tariff provision worked was that the President attempted to control the investigations and findings of the Tariff Commission, and when a commissioner refused to subordinate his judgment to that of the Executive who appointed him, the then President required him to place in his hands a resignation, to be held as a threat over the commissioner, to be accepted whenever the President became offended at the decision of the Commission. It was to repudiate influences such as that, forces which came from the appointing power, that the provision of the platform quoted was adopted. I justify that statement not only in the history of the Tariff Commission itself but I justify it also in the following language from the platform of 1932. Listen—> reciprocal tariff agreements with other nations.

Not only is this proposed legislation not discountenanced by the Democratic platform but it is expressly approved and commended by that platform in the language just cited. It is entirely true that the platform does not state how the reciprocal trade agreements are to be entered into. It does not say that they shall be entered into by the Executive under an act of Congress. Neither does it say that they shall be entered into through the treaty-making process. It leaves that subject entirely open; and the Congress, in the passage of this bill, has just as much right under that platform to employ the agency of the Chief Executive to bring about such agreements as it has to employ the treaty-making power. No intelligent man will hereafter take the floor and say that the Democratic platform committed the members of the Democratic Party against the enactment of this proposed legislation. It not only did not do that but it committed them in favor of such legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. How else could the Democratic Party carry out its platform except by setting up an agency by which such trade agreements might be negotiated?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was just coming to that point. I thank the Senator. His mind is logical, and evidently he is following my argument with close attention.

If trade agreements are to be entered into and made effective in the early future they must be negotiated in some way similar to that provided for in this bill. I challenge denial of that assertion.

What is the history of the cases in which the treaty-making power has been resorted to for the making of trade agreements? I do not recall more than a single instance in which such trade agreements were ever carried into effect through ratification. In all other cases, in numerous cases, they have failed of any practical result because not ratified; and now, in a time of national emergency, when the trade and commerce of the United States have been practically destroyed by an unjust policy, when there is necessity for reviving that trade and commerce, we are told that we must resort to a process of doing it which we know can rarely succeed. I ask you, as intelligent men, does that argument appeal to you? No. If you want the United States, its merchants and its shippers, to have a fair chance with those who compete with them in foreign trade, you must employ some practical means of negotiating and giving effect to these agreements; and if you require that all of them shall be brought here to the Senate for ratification, the emergency will have passed, our commerce will have disappeared from the seas, and the suffering of our people will have been intensified by reason of our own foolish policy before ratification can be forced.

We take advantage, I trust, from the lessons of history in delegating this lawful authority, shown to be lawful by all the authority and precedents. We are not doing an act detrimental to the commerce of this country, detrimental to the industries of the country. On the contrary, we are, in good faith, attempting to do something to revive them, and when those who criticize this bill say they will not vote for it, I ask them, are they going on pursuing the same policy that has wrecked the commerce and the safety and the prosperity of our people?

There is not any power in this bill that is granted except for a temporary period. There is not any power in this bill that the Congress cannot quickly take back if the Executive should mistake or abuse his authority.

If you enter into negotiations in any way, you must trust someone to make the negotiations. You cannot make them. I believe that there is none better than the agency that this bill chooses, the President, who has great responsibility for the enforcement of the laws of the country and for the success of the policies which his administration puts into effect.

Gentlemen of the Senate, when we shall pass this bill we will not have put behind us all the serious problems and difficulties which this Nation must meet, but in passing this bill we are doing a practical thing: we are placing him who is in charge, under the Constitution, of our foreign relations, on a footing of equality with the diplomats of other powers, who are authorized, in most instances, to enter into arrangements similar to those provided for in this bill. I feel that the history of our time, the conditions which surround us, and the results which have been obtained by other nations which have increased their commerce by the exercise of power similar to that which we propose to confer on the Executive under this legislation, all justify us in passing this measure. I thank the Senate.

FARMERS' TARIFF RIGHTS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall speak on several amendments before we get through. I want to discuss all these amendments.

Mr. President, I was not aware of the exact purport of the Johnson amendment. I was familiar with the Overton amendment. I had understood the Johnson amendment and the Overton amendment were about the same, but I understand now that they are not. Upon a careful reading of them my attention was called to the difference between the two amendments, and there is rather a striking difference. The Johnson amendment provides:

No foreign-trade agreement shall be entered into under the provisions of this act with respect to any agricultural or horticultural product, including the commercial articles or materials made therefrom by usual first processings.

There is a contention made—and I can well see how it could be a valid contention—that this would prevent agreements with regard to agricultural commodities at all. That is satisfactory from my point of view, being against the bill and all its provisions; but, of course, I can well see that those inclined to vote for some of the provisions of the bill would not want to have it that stringent.

The Fletcher amendment is as follows:

On page 3, lines 13 and 14, after the word "proclamation", insert a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That no agreement shall be made with any foreign government whereby tariffs or import duties on products of agriculture or horticulture shall be reduced below an amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production of such products in the United States with the cost of production in such foreign countries."

In other words, the Fletcher amendment would allow agricultural products to be the subject of negotiation, but in arriving at a basis of trade, under the Fletcher amendment there could not be any foreign imports of agricultural or horticultural products unless there were a tariff to represent the difference in the cost of producing those commodities in the foreign countries and in this country.

We have had many theories about agriculture. We have had a lot of talk here from Senators representing the manufacturing States about agriculture and its need to be restored. But the first thing with which we are faced here is a proposal to take away from the agricultural element the little tariff benefits they have fought for 50 years to get. We have had protective tariffs on manufactured articles since 1789. The first tariff, I believe, was signed July 4, 1789 or 1790, by President George Washington. But agricultural commodities had not been included in any tariff until recently.

For instance, only a few days ago we conducted a fight here, lasting over nearly a week's time, to give protection to the vegetable oil raised in America as against the foreign vegetable oil raised in the Philippine Islands and tropical countries. Over the opposition of the President of the United States, over the opposition of a letter read by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] from the President of the United States, we proceeded here to adopt a tariff against the vegetable oil coming from the Philippine Islands, and the copra out of which it is made. Now we have before us a declaration made by the party, and by the candidate of the party, on vegetable commodities and agricultural commodities.

President Roosevelt said on October 26, 1932:

Of course it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil.

There is not any question that the chief drive made in this tariff bill, just as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] said the other day, is against sugar. Sugar is the entering wedge of all the free-trade and supposed-to-be tariff-for-revenue-only Democrats.

As my friend from Tennessee says, one of the main things he hopes will be accomplished by the passage of this bill is the lowering of the tariff on sugar; and the Senator from Kentucky joins in and says that sugar is the chief commodity that they intend to attack.

Let it be understood that when the Senators from the beet-growing States like Utah and Colorado and Michigan, and all the Middle Western States that are growing beets, vote for this bill, giving the right, as the Senator from Tennessee says, to wipe out the differential existing on sugar, they have been warned in advance of what the purpose is. They know now, unless somebody here is wrong, that this drive is being made in order to take the tariff off sugar. I say it because no one would object to an amendment taking the President of the United States at his word, and at least guaranteeing to the farmers of this country, to the growers of vegetable products out of which vegetable oils are made and to the growers of beets and cane out of which sugar is made, a tariff representing the difference in cost of producing those articles in the foreign countries and in this country, unless he wanted to blind his eyes and stand for a consequence which the people have been assured would not follow.

I read again from the President's words. He said:

My distinguished opponent—

He was talking about Mr. Hoover at the time—is declaring in his speeches that I have proposed to injure or destroy the farmer's markets by reducing the tariff on products of the farm. That is silly.

This is Mr. Roosevelt talking. He says it is silly to talk about reducing the tariff on products of the farm.

Reading further:

Of course, I have made no such proposal, nor can any speech or statement I have made be so construed. * * * Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. * * * I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of farmer's products.

Said the President of the United States, "I promised not to reduce the tariff duties on farm products. I promised to raise them." That is what we were promised.

What does the promise mean? We have here a farm amendment undertaking not to do all that has been promised by the party, not to keep all the word of the President, because that would be against the sense of the Senate. Maybe the Senate would not want to have anything put in here that would make somebody keep his word. Maybe that would not be right. After having listened to the splendid speeches made here today, I am thoroughly converted to the doctrine that United States Senators certainly ought to be allowed not to keep their same viewpoint if moonlight has passed over the country between the time they made the promise and the time they come to perform it. I desire to announce my conversion to that principle for the rest of my colleagues. They have convinced me that when they promise something, and say they will do something, they ought not to be held to their word, if they see matters to change. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has convinced me of that; the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has convinced me of that; and the Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] have driven the nail up to the hilt, that nobody ought to be made to keep his word on campaign promises if he does not want to do it, if something happens in the meantime.

So I do not want to be understood as advocating the radical doctrine that United States Senators and members of the Democratic Party ought to be made to be consistent on what they said last year as compared with this year, or last month with what they say this month; but what I am trying to get done under this amendment is that if we cannot do what the President said, and if we cannot adhere to what the party said, at least we can permit the poor American farmer to retain what little advantage he has so far been able to get from the agricultural tariffs in his favor. At least we will not take away from the cotton farmer and from the beet farmer and from the cane farmer and from various other farmers, such as the apple farmers, the grape farmers, and all of those, the benefits they have managed to get, which we not only told them they were going to retain, but which we told them were going to be increased in their favor.

We said to the farmer of this country, "We are not going to take away the tariff that you have. It would be silly to do it. It would be absurd to do it." We said to the farmer, "It is ridiculous, it is preposterous, it is false, to assert that the Democratic Party will reduce one single tariff item that protects an agricultural product in America today." Now we are asking, if that promise means anything at all, that we shall write into this bill the Fletcher amendment, at least, if the Senate shall not adopt the Johnson amendment, stipulating—

That no agreement shall be made with any foreign government whereby tariffs or import duties on products of agriculture or horticulture shall be reduced below an amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production of such products in the United States with the cost of production in such foreign countries.

That is all the Fletcher amendment provides.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Why not apply the same principle to industry as to agriculture?

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will offer such an amendment for industry, I shall vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania has such an amendment pending.

Mr. LONG. I am going to vote for the Senator's amendment, and I think we promised that. However, I represent an agricultural State. My people are farmers, and it is only natural that I should try to speak from the standpoint of something that I know something about. True, it has been the custom lately to hire somebody to run agriculture who never saw a farm, but in this particular instance I am varying the custom; and as a farm product, since I come from the farm, I am undertaking to espouse the promises made to the farmer. I have no doubt that my friend from Pennsylvania will be able to find where we made just as many promises, perhaps, to some of the industries of the country. I have no doubt that we did make some such promises in generalities, at least; but I am now talking as a man representing a farming State, representing a State that had promises, representing a State that had promises in absolute farm words that the farmers of Louisiana and the farmers of Mississippi and the farmers of Arkansas and the farmers of Colorado and of Michigan and of California should not have one single tariff benefit taken away from them, but that, on the contrary, the tariff should be made effective, and the prices of these farm products raised rather than lowered as a result of the manipulations of the tariff.

Now we come here today faced with the little, simple proposition that we are going to restore prosperity—I do not know what the word "prosperity" means—we are going to bring prosperity back to the farmer. My friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] the other day on the floor invited us to look at all the beneficial measures that had been enacted, that we said were unconstitutional, that had to be passed for the benefit of the farmer. I call on anybody now to tell me anything that has been done by this Congress or by the Agricultural Adjustment Association, or whatever that name is—I only know them by the letters—I call on anyone to tell me anything that has been done that has helped the cotton farmer or the cane farmer or the beet farmer. You may show that his price went up, but I can show you that the purchasing power of that crop was less than the purchasing power of the same crop the year before. You may take the cotton crop and show that the price of cotton went up, and yet I can show you that a bale of cotton will buy only one-half as many pairs of overalls as the same bale of cotton would have bought before these letters were put on top of it. I can prove that before you went into the first reader and took the alphabet out of it and loaded it on top of everything else, the cotton and cane and beet farmers got more for the products they raised, and paid less for the products they had to consume, than is the case under these pretensions.

What are these things that have done so much for anybody—the N.R.A.'s, and the A.A.A.'s, and various and sundry other lettered codes? I do not know of them. We are told that they have been held to be constitutional. Who held them to be constitutional? The Supreme Court of the United States has not yet held the A.A.A. to be constitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States has not yet held the N.R.A. to be constitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States has not yet held most of this other business to be constitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States might do it, and it has the power to hold anything it wants to hold constitutional; but be it said to its credit that as yet it has not finally done so.

Let us get away from the Court, however. Let us deal with promises.

Somebody said the other day—I believe it was the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]—that, as he understood, the reciprocal tariff agreements were not so closely bound under the President's promises and the promises of the party.

Let us read it. I read from a speech by Mr. Roosevelt on September 15, 1932, and I read from another speech on September 30, 1932. Let us take the last first. Said Mr. Roosevelt:

> What does the Democratic Party propose to do in the premises? The platform declares in favor of a competitive tariff, which means one which will put the American producers on a market equality with their foreign competitors—one that equalizes the difference in the cost of production—not a prohibitory tariff back of which domestic producers may combine to practice extortion of the American public.
> But how is reduction to be accomplished? By international negotiation as the first and most desirable method, in view of present world conditions, by consenting to reduce to some extent some of our duties in order to secure a lowering of foreign walls that a larger measure of our surplus may be admitted abroad.
> Next the Democrats propose to accomplish the necessary reductions through the agency of the Tariff Commission.

"Through the agency of the Tariff Commission" these reciprocal trade agreements were to be made, and through that agency of the Tariff Commission, by which it was promised these reciprocal trade agreements should be made, there was assurance that the tariff would be so adjusted as to equalize the difference between the costs of production at home and abroad.

Said the Democratic tariff plank of 1932:

> We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference.

Now let us get back to the farmer. I do not care how anyone votes on the industrial part of the bill. So far as my people are concerned, I will vote to protect those people because the party promised it. I will vote for every promise the party made, because I was in the convention which wrote the platform, and I will vote for the party promises. I will vote to keep the word of the Democratic Party.

I understand that someone has said that those of us over here who are fighting for the Democratic platform ought to move over to the Republican side. Actually, some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber have said to me that I was in league with the Republicans in this tariff fight. In other words, because I still advocate the carrying out of the promises made by the Democratic Party in 1932, because I still stand by the words the President uttered to the people of this country, I ought to move over to the other side and be with the Republicans, according to some of my colleagues on this side.

If that is so, what is the definition of a Democrat? If those of us over here who are still fighting for what we promised the people, still fighting for carrying out the words the President uttered to the people, are to be pronounced changed, what is the definition of these Democrats who are to be left over here when we go over on the other side? A Democrat would be defined something like this in the dictionary:

> Democrat: One who can go before the people and raise hell about something, and say that it is all wrong, and then come back 1 year later and say that it is all right; that he is going to do it, and whoever does not change over from right to wrong and go with him ought to move out of the family.

That will be about how "Democrat" would be defined if those of us over here have to move over to the other side of the Chamber.

Let us read the words of the President's addresses a little. It is amusing to notice just how gentlemen get away from these statements made during the campaign. My friend from over in Massachusetts made a fine farm speech today. The leading speech here against the farmer being given the protection he was promised was made by the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. This gentleman from the shoe-manufacturing center of Boston made a remarkable speech as to why the farmer would be hurt if he were protected.

Beware of the Greeks bringing gifts in this particular case. I think I can imagine them bringing in the sugars from the South Sea; I think I can see the copra and the oils from the Orient going into terms of shoes made in Boston, Mass.; and it does not look good to me. I do not seem to get any particular benefit out of this kind of guaranties made by my friend from Boston, Mass.

My friend from Boston says that this promise was made, but that an emergency has arisen which causes us to change the promise. When did the emergency arise? Did we not write this platform in 1932, and did not the depression come on in 1929, and was it not on us in 1932? If it had not been on in 1932, we might not have elected a Democratic President. But the reason why we elected a Democratic President in 1932 was that there was a depression, and we had prescribed a platform which we said would get the people out of the depression. So we said to the people, "We will give you a tariff which will protect you to the extent of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad."

We said to the farmer, "Fear not", like the old song we used to hear; "fear not; nothing is going to happen to you. We guarantee you farmers—because you have a large percent of the votes of the United States—fear not", said we to the farmers; "fear not, Mr. Farmer; you have the votes, and we are not going to cut any tariffs on you, because with that vote we can win whether we get any of the balance of the vote or not. Fear not; we are not only not going to cut the Republican tariffs you enjoy, but we are going to go the Republicans one better, and increase the tariffs on farm products."

Mr. President, that was the promise uttered from the lips of the candidate of the Democratic Party in the latter part of 1932.

Now it is said that an emergency has arisen. In just a moment I shall take up this great document that was signed by the 9 or 10 Democrats who were members of the Finance Committee and show what a great emergency arose to justify them in getting off the dotted line and crawling over on the other side of the field.

If these gentlemen are still in the Senate, they belong over on the other side of the aisle. They have no business over here any longer, so far as concerns this tariff question, or the flexible-tariff provision enacted into the law at least as late as 1930. No Senator who signed that document which came out of the Democratic Finance Committe membership has any right now to say that he is any longer a Democrat on the tariff question. Any man who has his name on that dotted line, warning the country and calling upon the people to engage in a general uprising against the encroachment of the Executive in legislative government, has any right ever to argue the tariff or any other fundamental question with a Democrat.

To get back to these promises that were made, said President Roosevelt on September 15, 1932:

> I seek to give to that portion of the crop consumed in the United States a benefit equivalent to a tariff sufficient to give your farmers an adequate price.

Said the President of the United States, "I seek to give to you farmers a differential sufficient to make up the difference so as to give the farmers a reasonable price."

Listen to this. Said Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt:

> I want now to state what seems to be the specifications upon which most of the reasonable leaders of agriculture have agreed, and to express here and now my whole-hearted accord with these specifications.
> First, the plan must provide for the producer of staple surplus commodities, such as wheat, cotton, corn (in the form of hogs), and tobacco, a tariff benefit over world prices which is equivalent to the benefit given by the tariff to industrial products.

If that is true, Mr. President, we would receive a material increase in the tariffs prevailing at this time on agricultural commodities, as was shown by the Senator from Idaho the other day.

One week later Mr. Roosevelt said:

I have called for genuine governmental efforts to devise means by which the farmer may get the benefit of the equivalent of a tariff protection similar to that which industry has.

Said he a day or two later:

The platform declares in favor of a competitive tariff, which means one which will put the American producers on a market equality with their foreign competitors—one that equalizes the difference in the cost of production.

Those were the words of the President; not a prohibitive tariff, he said, but one which equalizes the difference in the costs of production.

Mr. President, perhaps some people would feel that this promise having been made by the Democratic Party, this amendment ought to come from the Democratic Party in order to keep its word, and for that reason I shall be glad to vote for the Fletcher amendment.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is one of the two senior Senators on this side of the Chamber. I mean by "senior" that he is in point of service the oldest Member on this side of the Chamber, with the exception of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who has been here the same number of years. The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Florida both represent agricultural States. If we are allowed an amendment which has been proposed here, which proposes to protect agriculture, not in keeping entirely with the promises but half in keeping, we will have no further objection to the provisions of this bill so far as they affect our communities alone.

I will read again from the platform:

We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people, to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe.

Had they been asked to subscribe to anything? I have here, Mr. President, something else with which we went before the people and we got them to act upon. I have here a substitute bill which I have offered. I have offered as a substitute to this pending monstrosity the bill which was introduced here in 1932 by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and reported out of the Finance Committee, passed by the Senate, passed by the House, and vetoed by the President of the United States. I have here in the form of a substitute the bill offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Here is what we went to the people on. Do not let any one beguile you. Here is what the Democratic membership of the Finance Committee meant, and here is what that Democratic membership of the Finance Committee proposed. I have some respect for the opinion of every man who stands out and says, "I blew hot last year, and I am blowing cold this year, and may blow hot again this year." I have respect for the man who says, "Oh, I said it, and I am not going to do it," or "I am going to do just exactly the opposite." I can understand that kind of a man. That is why I understand some of my colleagues so well. I have respect for them. That is why I like them so well.

Ninety-five percent of the Membership who voted for this bill which I have here in my hand simply say now: "Well, that is what I stood for, and that is what I said we ought to do, and that is what I voted we ought to do, but now I am voting for something else, and I am not going to open my mouth and say anything about it."

Of course, we have our linguists, we have our swordsmen of language, we have our swordsmen of party discipline. I mean by "swordsmen" the men who can make so tender a cleavage as to make a thing fall on one side one time and fall on the other side the next time.

Take my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who spoke here the other day. I am not responsible for the fact that he is not here now. Perhaps if he cares to, he can read what I say. Let us take what he said here the other day. He undertook to say that there was not any violation of the promise of the party at all. I think he did not know any better than that. I think that is what he believes, because it is not very hard in this political life to get to believe one thing and then try to convince everyone that you believe that way. And the Senator from Illinois convinced me that he does believe that way.

Yet here, standing and staring in the face of the Senate is the solemn declaration made by the Democratic Party, made by the President of the United States, and made by the membership of the Democratic Senate itself—and the Senator from Illinois was one of the men who voted for it, and I was one of those who voted for it right along with him—that we were going to take out of the hands of the Executive any such thing as the power to negotiate a trade agreement unless that agreement was brought back to the United States Senate to be ratified.

Here is the amendment introduced by the Senator from Mississippi. If the Democratic membership of the Finance Committee meant what it said, here is what they brought back to the United States Senate as the result of that protest. They brought back a recommendation for an adjustment, and they provided this, Mr. President:

Upon the request of the President of the United States, or upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party showing good and sufficient reason therefor, the Commission—shall investigate and ascertain the differences in the cost of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article.

Meaning the Tariff Commission—

And that is the Democratic Party platform, and that is President Roosevelt's promise, too. What else?—

If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duty imposed by law upon the foreign article does not equalize the differences in the cost of production, when efficiently and economically produced, of the domestic article and of the foreign article when produced in the principal competing country or countries, then the Commission shall report to the President and to the Congress its findings and its order with respect to such increases or decreases in the duty upon the foreign article as the Commission finds to be necessary in order to equalize such differences in the cost of production. Any such increased or decreased duty may include the transfer of the article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, a change in the form of duty, or a change in classification. The report shall be accompanied by a statement of the Commission setting forth the findings of the Commission with respect to the differences in cost of production, the elements of cost included in the cost of production of the respective articles as ascertained by the Commission, and any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commission. Sixty days after the date of the report to Congress of such order by said Commission, such changes in classification shall take effect, and such increased or decreased duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on such articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila): Provided, That if before the expiration of such period of 60 days the Congress then in session shall have by joint resolution declared said order of said Commission rejected, then the changes in classification, forms of rate, or increases or decreases in rates of duty specified in such order of said Commission shall not go into effect.

The President, upon receipt of any such report of the Commission, shall promptly transmit the report to the Congress with his recommendations, if any, with respect to the increase or decrease in duty proposed by the Commission.

So, Mr. President, the Democratic membership of the Senate Finance Committee presented here to the Senate following the election in the fall of 1932 its statement or gist of principle that we could not allow any flexible provision of the tariff law to go into effect, even when it was based upon the difference in the cost of production abroad and at home, except and unless such a thing was reported to Congress, and Congress was given 60 days' time in which to express its disapproval of a flexible change made in that manner through the Tariff Commission by order of the President.

In other words, they could not even make a decrease in one rate, they could not make an increase in the tariff on one commodity, unless and except they reported their findings of fact to Congress and, based upon those findings of fact, an order was made by the Congress within 60 days to disapprove, in case it did not want it, and inaction meant consent.

What was the vote on this amendment? Here is the vote: Yeas, Democrats 36, Republicans 6; nays, Democrats none, Republicans 30. Thirty-six Democrats out of 36 came into this Congress, and I was one of them, and said that we ought to change the present existing law so that there could not be a decrease nor increase made except by the approval of Congress, even though it were based upon the difference in the cost of producing it abroad and at home; and today where are the 36 Democrats? Where are the 36 Democrats who pervaded the entire length and breadth of the United States and extolled the virtues of this bill?

Here is the resolution in the party platform. I was not in the resolutions committee of the Chicago convention, but I understood who it was who wrote the tariff plank in the platform we adopted at Chicago. I understood and was told at the time that the tariff plank in the platform was being drafted by Mr. Cordell Hull, at that time a Member of the United States Senate and one of the men to stand out for this principle of the Senate Finance Committee and one of the sponsors of this act which we passed in 1932.

So, Mr. President, Mr. Hull goes to Chicago. I was watching for this tariff plank. It was one of the few things in which I was interested. I wanted to see what they were going to do. Lo and behold, they came out, and I was handed a memorandum one afternoon as to what was going to go into the Democratic platform. I said, "That is O.K. with us; that is fine; we will stand back of that." What did that plank say?

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference,— reciprocal-tariff agreements with other nations, and an international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange.

Does anybody mean to say that the part referring to reciprocal-tariff agreements separated merely by a comma from what precedes it, meant that they were going to abolish the fact-finding Tariff Commission in arriving at the basis for reciprocal-tariff agreements? If he does, I will turn him back to the remarks of the President of the United States in which the President of the United States said in his speech that he intended to use the Tariff Commission to arrive at the difference in the cost in order to make these reciprocal-tariff agreements. If he cannot read that, I will turn him over to the book that has been written by the President of the United States called "Looking Forward", in which he again said:

I propose to accomplish the necessary reductions through the agency of the Tariff Commission.

Both by word of mouth in speeches and in the book, before the election and after the election, the President's mind was running in that order; and no one at the Chicago convention, whom I ever saw, had any different interpretation to make of it. Now, we are here saying this to you, "If you do not want to keep your word all the way, keep your word as far as you can."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there anything in this proposed legislation that will prevent the President from using all the information and facilities of the Tariff Commission in arriving at a trade agreement into which he might enter?

Mr. LONG. No; there is not. Would the Senator from Kentucky be willing to let us write in the bill a provision requiring him to do it?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I would not.

Mr. LONG. That is the trouble.

Mr. BARKLEY. Because I think that he ought to be left free to take advantage of whatever governmental facilities there are; but it is inconceivable that he would arrive at any agreement without taking advantage of all the information of all the departments of the Government of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Yes; and it is inconceivable that they would send a man to jail for pressing a pair of pants for 35 cents instead of 45 cents, but they did it. [Laughter.] There are a whole lot of inconceivable things going on in this country and always will be. At the time we had the N.I.R.A. before us I told Senators what would happen under that thing, and they said it was inconceivable, but it did occur. It is inconceivable that the President of the United States would not keep his word; but I ask, if the United States Senate will not keep its word, how are we going to expect the President to keep his? I do not expect a whole lot more of the President than I expect of Senators. He is no bigger man than the collective Senate is. One is about the same as the other. I have been looking around for all these big men all my life, and I have not found one yet. They look about the same to me. We find one who knows a little bit more about government than another does about farming; but when they are averaged one side up and the other side down, they show up with an average of about 50; you do not get much more than that out of anybody at this time or any other time.

I believe the President is as great a man as any we have had in that office in my recollection, and I believe we can rely upon the President as well as we can upon any other man; but if Senators from sovereign States cannot keep their Democratic campaign pledges, how can we expect the President of the United States to keep his?

In other words, do not set up one yardstick for the President of the United States and another one for yourself. It was stated in the declaration of the Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee that this thing was contrary to democratic government. We said in our platform that we were going to have a fact-finding commission, and we would ascertain nothing but the difference in costs. I will compromise on the matter; I am willing to make a compromise. It is true that we said in the Democratic platform that we were telling the truth; but I am willing to take half the truth, and be satisfied with it, so far as I am concerned; if we cannot get all the truth, I will take part of the truth. I will just ask that we keep that part of our pledge made to the farmers, and I will not even ask for all of that. All in the world I am asking to be done now, and I will be satisfied with that, is that if they cannot vote for the Johnson amendment—and I am going to vote for that amendment, and I am then going to vote for the Fletcher amendment if the Johnson amendment shall be defeated—all in the world I ask to be done by my good friend from Kentucky and my good friends from the other States is to put in the bill these words which the Senator from Florida proposes:

Provided further, That no agreement shall be made with any foreign government whereby tariffs or import duties on products of agriculture or horticulture shall be reduced below an amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production of such products in the United States with the cost of production in such foreign countries.

Can you refuse us this, when the President of the United States said "Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products"? Can you refuse us this and tell us in one breath that the farmer is not being discriminated against when he has this plighted word of the Democratic Party on the one hand and an amendment here merely to carry that out which is offered by a Senator sitting on this side of the Chamber?

That is all we are asking. We are asking you to help us keep the word the party made to the farmers of this country; that is all. All in the world we are asking is that that word to the farmer be kept, that the farmer be guaranteed that his products will not be put into competition with the products the cost of which may be 50 to 75 percent below that of his own products.

Take the case of cottonseed oil. The Filipinos did not know anything on God's earth about vegetable oil. I remember when I first had a job as a traveling man on the road I was introducing vegetable oils to be used for frying and for shortening in the preparation of foods which were cooked. Nobody ever heard about vegetable oil up to that time, until the cottonseed-oil people of the South experimented and refined cottonseed oil so that it could be used for cooking purposes. After that has all been developed by the American southern cotton farmers, you went over to the Philippine Islands, 10,000 miles away, and brought in an article that can be grown on the same land for 30 years and produced at a cost so low that it is impossible for the American cottonseed oil to compete with it.

Now, we ask you to protect the cotton farmer. All right. I know you think we have a one-party system in the South. I know you think you can treat us any way you want and we will still have to vote the Democratic ticket. You think that, do you? Well, break your word a few times more and see whether we have got to do it or not. We are going to expect your word to be kept; and if you think the Democrats of the South have got to stand for any kind of sandbagging of the Democratic farmers because they have got to vote the Democratic ticket, we can forget about the period from 1861 to 1865 in the South before we will let you do this kind of thing to the southern farmer. We are not going to stand for it. Remember that. We are not going to stand for it. There are those here from doubtful States who cannot keep their States in the Democratic Party half the time, while we keep ours there. They are not going to rape the State of Louisiana. We are not going to stand for it. Now, remember what I am telling you; we are not going to stand for you to come down there and promise us one thing and then run the plow through us and destroy the farmers of that section. We are not going to stand for it. We are going to try to see that the Democratic Party keeps its word. We are going to stand only for Democrats who do keep their word to the southern farmers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Russell

Copeland	Hebert	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the opponents of the pending legislation have charged that it constitutes an unconstitutional delegation to the Executive of the powers of Congress. Specifically, the charge is that the bill would delegate to the Executive certain of the treaty-making powers and certain phases of the taxing powers which by the Constitution are lodged in the Congress and which cannot be delegated.

Against this serious charge the proponents of the measure were almost silent for a period of approximately 2 weeks. In the last 2 or 3 days, however, a number of the proponents of the measure have sought to justify the bill against the criticism that it constitutes an unconstitutional delegation to the Executive of the legislative power. I have in mind particularly the argument made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] and the argument made yesterday by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

I am grateful to those Senators and to other Senators for presenting the proponents' side of the controversy. They have not only joined issue upon an important constitutional question which is involved but they have also done another thing in that they have avoided the appearance of contemptuous disregard of views expressed thoughtfully and earnestly by the minority. I believe it will be a relief to the country when the Nation knows that the overwhelming Democratic majority is not so contemptuous of the opinion of the minority and of the people of the Nation that they would pass the bill without making due reference to fundamental constitutional objections which have been raised against it.

What is the argument these Senators present in behalf of the bill? Summarized in a few words, it is that the bill, after all, is not a revenue measure; that in the main it is merely the exercise by the Congress of the powers under the commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate our trade with foreign nations.

In connection with that argument they offer the contention that the taxing provisions of the bill are purely incidental, and that because they are incidental they come within certain precedents established by the courts, and therefore that the making of revenue rates by the Executive constitutes proper Executive action; that the power delegated to the President to make the rates contemplated under the bill and under the treaties authorized to be made by the bill is a power exercised properly by the Executive; and that there is therefore no sound criticism against the delegation.

In this behalf, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] cited two cases—one, the case of the United States against Norton and, the other, a certain banking case. If time permits, I shall refer to both of them as I proceed. Before I attempt to do that, I want to deal with the bill itself and to show, if I may, in the plainest language which I am capable of using, whether or not the bill falls in the category of commercial regulation and whether or not the revenue features of the bill are purely incidental to the dominant purpose of the legislation.

The bill before us, Mr. President, does not present a case of the collection of fees incidental to the performance of a service. The bill by its terms, in its form and in substance, is a bill not only to make treaties but also to levy taxes. Let us examine first the form of the bill.

It is provided in the title that it is "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930." To know what that means requires only a reference to the Tariff Act of 1930. There we find that act, as stated in its title, is "an act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, to protect American labor, and for other purposes."

Not only is the form of the bill a revenue measure, but let me call attention to certain provisions contained in it which I feel justify the assertion just made that the bill is, in its substance, a revenue bill.

I omit some language as I proceed, in order clearly to state the summarized purpose of the measure.

It provides, in substance, that—

> For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States * * * by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States * * * the President * * * is authorized from time to time—

To do two things. The first is:

> To enter into foreign trade agreements.

The second is:

> To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign-trade agreements as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign-trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder.

I wonder if Senators catch the full significance of these two great powers. The revenue features are not of the character of fees collected for the performance of a service. They are the two great authorities which are written into this bill to enable the President to perform acts which he cannot perform under existing law; to do things pursuant to this measure which heretofore have never been done by the Chief Executive of our country, and on what terms. In terms, first, of making foreign-trade agreements with foreign powers and, second, in terms of adjusting tariff duties and in making such additional import restrictions as he may think are necessary or appropriate to carry out the trade agreements.

Analysis of these propositions discloses that the power delegated is far more than the power merely to scale down tariff duties. The President has that power almost without limit, as has been pointed out heretofore in this debate. He may first exercise the power under the flexible provision of the Tariff Act of 1930, and upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission he may reduce any duty 50 percent. After he shall have done so, he may then enter into a foreign-trade agreement, and under that agreement he may cut the duty upon that article another 50 percent. So that, disregarding the powers that are given to him under subsection (c), found at page 4 of the bill—powers to change the form of a duty and powers to change the classification, both of which will enable him to reduce the duty below the amount it otherwise would have been—there exists plainly in the act of 1930 as amended by this bill the power to make a total reduction of 75 percent; and I say, Mr. President, that the exercise of the further power to change the classification and the form of the duty enables the President to reduce a duty substantially more than 75 percent of the amount provided by the Tariff Act of 1930. Whether the ultimate maximum reduction be in the aggregate 80 percent or 85 percent or 90 percent, the plain fact remains that the great powers conferred upon the President by this bill are in reality powers to reduce the duties to some amount in excess of 75 percent of the existing rates.

Duty decreases constitute only the beginning. Not only may the President wipe out substantially all the duty in amount but he may also do another thing: In furtherance of the treaty he may establish such additional import restrictions as he may think appropriate.

To comprehend the possibilities of the bill, let us measure the extent of that power.

Is it assumed by anyone that the President is to make bilateral agreements between the United States and some other nation of the world, one at a time? If that assumption has been indulged in here, let me say that it is wholly unwarranted.

The language is that the President may—

Enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments.

Therefore, he may, if he chooses, enter into one agreement with one government; he may enter into two agreements with two governments; he may enter into one agreement with many governments; he may enter into a number of agreements with governments in combination. There is no restraint upon the President with respect to that matter; and when he exercises the authority conferred upon him by this bill, and enters into the various kinds of agreements that he is permitted to enter into, is it assumed by anyone that the restrictions under which our commerce is to flow thereafter are restrictions that are applicable only to the trade of this Government and of the government with which the President deals? That assumption is not justified by the language, for the President, in making these restrictions, may make such additional restrictions as he thinks appropriate for the purpose of carrying out the foreign-trade treaty. He may enter into an agreement with one nation; he may reduce the duties existing between this country and that nation in furtherance of that agreement; and then, to make the treaty effective, or possibly to induce other nations to enter into a treaty, he may, if he desires, set up trade barriers against other nations of the world.

I leave out of consideration for the moment the favored-nation treaties. Except for the restraint of these treaties, I repeat the assertion already made, which I make with the greatest confidence, that the President may make his foreign-trade agreement with any nation; and then, in furtherance of that agreement, he may establish additional import restrictions against the trade of every other nation.

So, Mr. President, under the manifold powers delegated by this bill, the President may make as many or as few trade agreements as he may desire; he may reduce as many duties as he may think proper, including agricultural duties, and then he may make trade restrictions against the trade of any nation that he may see fit, and he may put it all into one trade agreement or in many, or he may proclaim the reductions in duty all in one proclamation, if he cares to do so.

I should be comforted if some Senator with faithful regard for the meaning of these provisions would tell me that I am wrong in my construction of this language. No Senator has yet even suggested that I am wrong. No Senator, in my opinion, who will give careful attention to the plain language of the bill, will dare say that there is any other construction to be put upon the bill save the one which I now seek to apply to it. If it be true that the President may make as many treaties as he wants to make, reduce as many duties as he pleases, and make as many additional import restrictions as he may think appropriate in connection with his treaty, I ask, What is the limitation upon the power delegated to the President under this bill?

Mr. President, I have said that so far as reduction in the amount of duty is concerned, there is a limitation which prohibits the President to reduce below 25 percent of the existing rates, except for the matter of changes in form or classification. This limitation might prevent him from wiping out duties, even though he exercised the power to change form, and the power to change classification, and the flexible power under the act of 1930, and the additional powers under this bill. It may be that he can only reduce duties 75 or 80 or 85 or 90 percent in amount. I concede that; but, so far as the scope of his authority is concerned in the matter of making import restrictions, and setting up artificial barriers to control the commerce of this country and the commerce of all the nations of the world whose nationals deal with us, I submit that there is absolutely no restriction at all; there is no boundary upon the President's power, save that the restrictions shall be appropriate to the treaty; but he makes the treaty and determines its purpose and effect. Will the President resort to quotas of imports? Will he provide exchange restrictions? Will he prefer to license importers or imports? Will our policy favor the free flow of goods in order to expand our foreign trade or will we adopt a policy of expanding trade by erecting barriers against those who limit importation of American goods into foreign markets? Under the bill Congress does not decide. The authority to decide is delegated to the President.

I repeat that it would be comforting to me if some Senator with faithful attention to the language of this bill would tell me that my construction is wrong.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALCOTT. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a brief editorial bearing precisely upon the point which the distinguished Senator is making. It is an editorial in the current number of the Manufacturers Record, entitled "Protect American Business."

Mr. STEIWER. I have no objection. I suggest, however, that it appear at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The editorial referred to is printed at the end of Mr. STEIWER's remarks.)

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say that it seems to me the position which the Senator takes is an entirely sound position, and I cannot help but believe that what the Senator indicates was the design of the framers of the bill. Otherwise the President would be greatly embarrassed in dealing with the subject. I think it was the design to give the President complete power over the subject.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator, and I am entirely in accord with what he says. This bill was not drawn by novices. Its very structure indicates that it was carefully formulated by somebody who knew what he was doing; and it is difficult to attribute to the authors of this bill anything other than the deliberate design to accomplish that which is so clearly provided in the terms of the bill.

I now come to the phase which I wish to impress upon this body, if I may.

Under the construction which I am outlining to the Senate as to the scope and purpose and possibilities of the bill, I desire to ask, What is there, under the authority of this bill, that the President may not do, save for the restraint of the existing favored-nation treaties and for this mathematical restraint in the amount of the reduction of duty? I have examined the bill just as carefully as I could in an effort to answer that question, and I have reached the conclusion that there is nothing that the President may not do in terms of rewriting the administrative features of the tariff law. There is nothing in terms of reclassification that the President may not do. There is nothing with respect to the change of form of duties in which the President may not indulge; and because he may heap import restriction upon import restriction if he desires to do so there is no limit to the artificial barriers he may erect affecting the trade of the entire world as well as the trade of the United States, because, after all, most of the trade channels lead to our own ports.

This bill in plain language is a bill to authorize the President of the United States to rewrite the Tariff Act of 1930, both with respect to rates and with respect to administrative provisions, and, if he desires, in very substantial respects to wipe out existing statutes and to make a new law.

I ask, as seriously as I can ask, what is the policy the President is to follow in prescribing the new tariff system of this country? Is it to be free trade, tariff for revenue only, is it protection, is it a degree of protection which measures the difference between the costs of production at home and abroad, or is it something else? The policy to be followed is not defined by the bill.

The nearest definition to a policy, I think, is the announced statement that the President may exercise these great powers for the purpose of expanding the foreign markets for the products of the United States.

If the Court is to reach a sensible conclusion as to the purpose of Congress in conferring upon the President the extraordinary powers contemplated in the bill, apparently it will be obliged to say that the Congress has authorized the abandonment of every theory that has ever been adhered to by either great political party in this country; that the Congress has authorized the President to change the American tariff policy, and to embark upon a new and undefined policy which has for its purpose and object the expansion of foreign markets. If that be the test, then what is the procedure? What is the problem of the President? How far will he go, and in what direction?

Mr. President, the quest for an answer to these important questions suggests one thing which determines beyond doubt that this bill does constitute an unconstitutional delegation of the legislative powers to the President, and that is that there is no definition in the bill; it involves so great a scope of undefined authority with respect to the making of rates, the taxation of the people, the making of treaties, and the creation of policy legislative in its character, the delegation cannot be sustained.

Let us examine briefly some of the authorities which have been referred to in connection with this matter. I shall not detain the Senate long to deal with matters which are purely legalistic and technical.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], invoking his brilliant gifts and talents into this discussion, assured us that this was not a revenue bill at all. He says it is a bill for the regulation of foreign commerce; that the revenue features are purely incidental, and that, because they are incidental, the bill is not within the constitutional provision requiring that revenue bills shall originate in the House of Representatives.

On that proposition the Senator cited two cases. The first was the case of Twin City Bank against Nebeker, which is found in One Hundred and Sixty-seventh United States Reports, page 196. That was a case which dealt with an act affecting the national currency, requiring, as I remember, the security of the currency by a pledge of bonds of the United States. The act required a tax for the purpose of carrying out the main object of providing a national currency. The Court said:

> The tax was a means for effectually accomplishing the great object of giving to the people a currency that would rest, primarily, upon the honor of the United States and be available in every part of the country. There was no purpose by the act or by any of its provisions to raise revenue to be applied in meeting the expenses or obligations of the Government.

I call attention to the very last part of the quoted language. The Court justified the legislation upon the distinction that there was no purpose of raising revenue. Now we are dealing with a measure which has for its primary purpose the raising of revenue. The Tariff Act of 1930 would be amended with respect to the important matter of changing rates of duty under which taxes are levied and collected by our Government.

The Court also said, in sustaining the act against objections then made:

> It is sufficient in the present case to say that an act of Congress providing a national currency secured by a pledge of bonds of the United States, and which, in the furtherance of that object, and also to meet the expenses attending the execution of the act, imposed a tax on the notes in circulation of the banking association organized under the statute, is clearly not a revenue bill which the Constitution declares must originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the other case upon which the Senator from Illinois placed emphasis was the Norton case, to which I referred earlier in my remarks. That was the case reported in Ninety-first United States Reports, page 566. In the Norton case the Court was dealing with a question arising under the act of May 17, 1864. I read from the decision of the Court. Referring to the act, the Court said:

> Its object, as expressly declared at the outset of the first section, was to promote public convenience and to insure greater security in the transmission of money through the United States mails. All moneys received from the sale of money orders, all fees received for selling them, and all moneys transferred in administering the act, are "to be deemed and taken to be money in the Treasury of the United States."

How different is the pending proposal from the two acts referred to in these two cases. One is a great revenue act, which applies in every port, which lays its duties at every customhouse, and which has for its express object, among other things, the raising of revenue, and which, in fact, does raise revenue to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars each year. The two acts referred to in these two cases are acts in which the raising of revenue was purely, completely, and admittedly, incidental to other purposes. They were not revenue acts.

What is the force and effect of the argument made by the Senator from Illinois? I contend that the only effect, if he were correct in his contention, would be that the pending bill would of necessity have to originate in the House of Representatives, for the only difference between the exercise of the different powers of the Congress enumerated in section 8 of article I, like the power to regulate commerce, and the exercise of the taxing power, is that the taxing power must be availed of by legislation which originates in the House of Representatives. That condition is not imposed with respect to the exercise of the other powers; but with any of these powers, whether the bill must originate in the House or whether it may originate in the Senate, the requirement still exists that such powers cannot be delegated to someone else.

Even if the Senators from Illinois and Kentucky are right that the bill is a bill to regulate commerce with foreign nations, in either case the power is a constitutional power of the Congress. It cannot be delegated to the President except for acts of execution.

The Senator from Illinois disposed of the case of Clark against Field merely by saying that in that case the Court had denied the contention that the powers delegated were legislative powers. In his wisdom he seemed to believe that that determined the question.

Permit me to analyze the case briefly, because I think it affords illumination which we need if we are to arrive at a correct conclusion in this matter.

The case of Clark against Field dealt with the Revenue Act of 1890. That act conferred a certain authority upon the President in connection with our foreign trade. I find on page 680 the provision of the act which was before the Court in its decision. I read from the statement of the Court:

> The third section of the act of October 1, 1890, chapter 1244, section 3, is in these words:
> "SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January 1892, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides (raw and uncured), or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country as follows, namely "—

And there follows the rates of duties, which I shall not read.

What is the effect of that legislation? It is merely this, that Congress in advance fixed definitely the rates of duties, and then suspended those rates and authorized the President to determine whether the action of the other country had operated unequally against our commerce on account of duties or other exactions upon our products which the President deemed to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable. Do Senators know the question that distressed the Court in its consideration of that language? Let me call attention to the fact that when the Court considered it, it dealt with the words "he may deem." I quote:

> The words "he may deem", in the third section, of course, implied that the President would examine the commercial regulations of other countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, and form a judgment as to whether they were reciprocally equal and reasonable, or the contrary, in their effect upon American products.

That language is most significant and arrests the attention of every lawyer who comes in contact with this case, because the plain fact of the matter is that the Court construed the phrase "he may deem" to mean he may find. And the significant reason for that is found in other language used by the Court, because the decision declared that although Congress may write tariff laws, fix the amount of duties, suspend their application, and direct the President to apply or not to apply those rates to the articles enumerated, the Court said that the President must act upon a finding of fact, and evidently the phrase "he may deem" was regarded by the Court as trespassing upon the legislative domain of Congress, because it purported to give to the President the authority to exercise discretion, and it is the exercise of discretion by the Executive which condemns delegation of power as unconstitutional.

To withhold from the Executive the legislative discretion, to limit him merely to the finding of a fact within a formula, as was done in the flexible provision of the Tariff Act of 1922, and in the act of 1930, is merely to leave to him an administrative authority. The delegation of this authority is not an unconstitutional delegation, but the delegation of authority to exercise discretion as to policy is the thing that characterizes the legislation as unconstitutional.

I will now read from the decision an important paragraph which makes this argument perfectly clear. The Court said:

> That Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The act of October 1, 1890, in the particular under consideration, is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not, in any real sense, invest the President with the power of legislation. For the purpose of securing reciprocal trade with countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, Congress itself determined that the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, permitting the free introduction of such articles, should be suspended as to any country producing and exporting them, that imposed exactions and duties on the agricultural and other products of the United States, which the President deemed, that is, which he found to be, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable. Congress itself prescribed, in advance, the duties to be levied, collected, and paid, on sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, produced by or exported from such designated country, while the suspension lasted. Nothing involving the expediency or the just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President. The words, "he may deem" in the third section, of course, implied that the President would examine the commercial regulations of other countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, and form a judgment as to whether they were reciprocally equal and reasonable, or the contrary, in their effect upon American products. But when he ascertained the fact that duties and exactions, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, were imposed upon the agricultural or other products of the United States by a country producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, it became his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the suspension, as to that country, which Congress had determined should occur. He had no discretion in the premises except in respect to the duration of the suspension so ordered. But that related only to the enforcement of the policy established by Congress. As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it cannot be said that in ascertaining that fact and in issuing his proclamation, in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. It was a part of the law itself as it left the hands of Congress that the provisions, full and complete in themselves, permitting the free introduction of sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, from particular countries, should be suspended, in a given contingency, and that in case of such suspensions certain duties should be imposed.

Comment on language of the character to which I have just called attention would seem almost unnecessary.

The Court, in sustaining the act of 1890, expressed views which condemn this act. The Court there pointed out that the President was to perform merely an administrative duty; that he was to do it upon a named contingency, and that when he proclaimed the fact contemplated within the act certain prescribed duties were to go into effect.

Let us now consider the pending bill. What is required of the President? Where is there something equivalent to the mandatory requirements of the act of 1890? What defines when and how he is to exercise his authority? Where is there a determination as to what rates of duty he shall apply in the event that he deems it expedient under this law to change tariff duties and to make treaties with foreign nations?

I desire to emphasize, if I can, in the plainest language which I am capable of using, that the act of 1890, as well as the acts of 1922 and 1930, did provide a formula for the guidance of the President. These acts were sustained because they provided such a formula. They and all of them were sustained because the Congress defined the President's authority. They did not say to him, as is said in this bill, that "you may in your judgment from time to time when you see fit", or "you may not in your judgment from time to time as you see fit enter into a trade agreement." They did not say, as this act says, "If you enter into a trade agreement you may change duties, you may modify them up or down substantially to such extent as you may think proper."

Those acts did not say to the President, "In case you enter into a trade agreement, you may impose import restrictions upon the trade of all the nations of the world that deal with the United States." None of those acts said in effect to the President, "You may use your discretion, whatever it may be, to enter into treaties wherever you may desire, and to fix duties at whatever rate you may please." There is not an act in the history of our country that even approaches the extent of this bill. There is not an act that has been sustained by the courts that would go even 10 percent as far as this act goes in conferring extraordinary and unusual powers upon the President.

I am bound to conclude, in faithful adherence to the plain language of the bill, that for want of legislative formula in controlling the action of the President it does, in fact, delegate to him powers which are highly legislative in character, and the delegation is, therefore, invalid.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator think the authority written in this proposal extends to permitting the President to establish a policy in reference to the rates of duties?

Mr. STEIWER. There cannot be any possible doubt about it. The President's function is to expand American markets for the products of the United States by the means which are afforded under the bill, but when he seeks to accomplish the chief object of the act, namely, to expand our foreign trade, he is just the same as the first man who stood naked and alone upon this earth. There is not any restraint from any point of the compass save the mathematical restraints which are quite nebulous and uncertain and which I have attempted to define but which I confess I do not quite comprehend. But so far as policy is concerned in the making of these import restrictions, it is for the President to determine. I assume that in the performance of his duty he will determine what the policy of our country shall be as to whether we will engage in commercial trade entanglements or whether we will not. It is for him to say. There is not a word or a syllable here by which Congress indicates what his important duty may be.

Mr. FESS. That is my interpretation of the power written in this proposed legislation, and it is such a radical departure from anything that has ever been proposed. The policy-determining function is always legislative, never executive. There is not a case in our history where the policy-determining power has been given to the Executive. That is a legislative prerogative, while the Executive function is to administer that policy. If this measure goes to the extent of allowing the Executive to declare a policy, it is certainly in contravention to all principles of a government such as ours.

Mr. STEIWER. I should feel very comforted, Mr. President, if I could find in the bill one line that tells the President what he shall do with respect to imposing import restrictions.

Mr. FESS. That is my view of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope the Senator's reference to the first man contemplates that period before he lost his rib. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will excuse me from dealing further with the "first man." The matters before this body, including the pending bill, are so grave in their implications that I know Senators will permit me to treat them with the serious purpose I should like to accord to them.

I wish for a few moments to refer to the pending amendment. One-third of our Nation is suffering from drought. In the entire Nation the agricultural elements are suffering from economic distress. Speaking largely, they have been in trouble since the first deflation following the World War. In only limited areas and in special lines have our agricultural groups enjoyed real prosperity since 1921. Their situation was so serious that both political parties declared that they were entitled to special consideration as far back as 1924. In the great campaign of 1928 the Republican Party took the position that the American farmer was entitled to the American market to the extent of his ability to supply that market, and, to some extent, the Democratic Party took the same position. There was almost complete agreement in this body in providing agricultural tariffs in the Tariff Act of 1930. I think such tariffs received more votes, on the whole, than any of the industrial tariffs which were written into that act, and nearly everyone was in accord with the idea that there could be no sustained, dependable prosperity in America until the buying power of the American farmer had been restored.

Those of us who come from the agricultural areas of the West are thoroughly convinced of the correctness of this conclusion. We cannot look with favor upon legislation which even admits the possibility of a blow being struck at agriculture. In my judgment, there is every reason why we should not subject any part of our economic structure to the so-called "bargaining deals" that are contemplated under this proposed legislation. I think there is a special reason why we should not subject agriculture to the hazards that would come from legislation of this kind.

Let me make very plain, if I can, some reasons why agriculture will suffer from the mere enactment of this bill, even though the President, in his wisdom, would never exercise one of the powers conferred upon him by its enactment. Some months ago the wool price had been stabilized at a fairly satisfactory figure; it was not as high as some of us would have liked, but it was a fairly satisfactory figure. When this bill came before the Congress, I think it was not 2 weeks until there was a sharp decline in the price of wool. The growers felt that they were threatened by this proposed legislation, the wool trade sought to profit by the pendency of the legislation, and the forces in every direction crowded the price down.

I asked a gentleman who is interested in the wool business to verify certain facts for me. He has supplied me with two or three telegrams, from which I wish to read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. In the clipping season does not the price of wool go down, as a general rule?

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Do not the records and statistics show that to be the fact?

Mr. STEIWER. No; it sometimes is true, but very often in the spring of the year there is a brisk demand for wool, and it is also true that the period prior to the clipping season is very often a very satisfactory contract period for the sale of the wool clip.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not mean that there is not a demand, but I mean does not the clipping of the wool have an effect upon the price which usually is apparent in some slight decline in the price of wool?

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator might find instances where that has happened; but, generally speaking, it is not true. There is no better wool market ordinarily than the spring market. I have some knowledge of the subject. At one time I was engaged in the sheep business, but I practiced law in order to get money to pay the losses from my farming and livestock operations. My painful experiences I will not recount, but I think I am reasonably well qualified to answer the Senator's question. There is no reason why the spring market should not be a good market. This spring the market was good until tariff tinkering was heralded to the country, and then the price broke, not a little, not the slight amount that it might have done under old conditions, but it broke very substantially; and not only that, but the whole market became stagnant, and for weeks in the State of Oregon I think it is true that not a clip was sold, that it was not possible to make a transaction of any kind in connection with the moving of the 1934 clip.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Has that condition improved in the last week? I know it was very bad last week.

Mr. STEIWER. It improved, I think, 2 or 3 weeks ago after certain reassuring statements had been made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and others. Those statements were printed in the intermountain region, and I have clippings from newspapers in Wyoming, Texas, and other States. Momentarily the market improved, but I think now it has subsided again and the market is very unsatisfactory. The intermediate credit bank has cut down its loaning ratio within the last 2 or 3 weeks by reason of the deliberate judgment of the executives of that agency that the market is unstable.

Mr. LONG. I was just going to ask the Senator if it was not a fact that it subsided, as I understood, about 7 or 8 days ago, when the Government itself, who ought to know what the Government is fixing to do to the woolgrower—and if the Government does not know what it is fixing to do to the woolgrower, who does?—cut the margin upon which the woolgrower was allowed to figure?

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator does not mean "the Government", but I think he means the intermediate credit bank.

Mr. LONG. That is true; but it is practically the Government; there is very little difference.

Mr. McCARRAN. The subject now being discussed by the Senator from Oregon is exceedingly interesting. It is interesting to me from two standpoints. I hope I correctly construe the expression of the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] some days ago when he stated, and I quote him rather in substance than literally, that there had been an understanding or agreement that wool should not be subject to the terms of the bill. If I misquote the substance of his statement, I wish to be corrected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I stated it as my opinion that wool would not be affected by the entering into these trade agreements. Then I placed in the RECORD a letter which the Secretary of the Treasury had written to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator from Oregon will permit the further interruption, I have in my office, and I hope to produce here either tomorrow or when the discussion of the subject is continued, an excerpt from a statement by the Secretary of Agriculture to the effect, or at least leading to the conclusion that wool would be one of the commodities that would have to suffer by reason of conditions prevailing. I have not that statement with me, neither do I assume to quote its substance, but I have it in my office and shall produce it at a later hour.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator for his contribution. The Senator from Mississippi has suggested his hope and understanding that wool will not be disturbed. We know that one of the agencies to be consulted under the terms of the bill is the Department of Agriculture. We know the views of the Secretary of Agriculture and the expressions he has made. He has said that his policy might cause pain to woolgrowers and that they would howl continuously to high heaven.

There is only one way to safeguard a great industry, an industry staggering under a load of debts and depression and drought. The only way we can protect that industry is to write into the bill that the rates may not be disturbed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. We have just as good assurance on agricultural commodities as the wool people have. We were told the authorities were not going to do anything about agricultural commodities. Mr. Hull said that. The President said that. Every time we mention a commodity we can find assurance that they are not going to disturb it, but are going to leave the competitive difference existing, and yet we cannot get them to let us write it in the law. They are not going to hurt anybody; everybody is going to be all right, but we are not going to except you. It is said that they are taking into consideration "the other man." Who is the other man? Who is the "nigger in the woodpile" that is going to get burned in this matter? I have never been able to find anyone who has not received an assurance in writing. Every man has an assurance from somebody that he is not going to be hurt, and still they will not let us write it in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon on the amendment has expired.

Mr. STEIWER. I will proceed on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 20 minutes on the bill.

Mr. LONG. Why is it that they stand up and say they will protect the woolman, and yet at the same time they are letting him lose everything he has, and will not let us write in the bill a provision to protect him? That is what I want to know. Why should they let the wool people lose everything they have today when they say they are not going to hurt him, and still they will not let us write it in the bill? We cannot get them to write it in the bill, and yet they say they will not hurt the woolman, who is losing everything he has.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think the tariff on wool is an effective tariff?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes. It is not always equally effective, it is not always 100-percent effective, but there have been times when it was 100-percent effective, and all the time it has been partially effective. The best-informed minds in the wool industry feel they cannot live without protection, and I agree with their conclusion.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I asked the Senator the question is that he expressed some doubt about the Secretary of Agriculture and what he had stated. Of course, the President of the United States is more in authority than the Secretary of Agriculture. Will the Senator permit me to read just a sentence or two?

Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products—

Said the President in his Baltimore address—

I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of his products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

Is not that strong enough language to give the Senator assurance and to give the woolgrowers assurance?

Mr. STEIWER. I agree that is strong language, and I claim it is strong enough to justify the Congress in excluding agricultural products from the scope of this bill. It would seem to me if there is one single argument which justifies the exclusion of agricultural products, it is the language just read by the Senator from Mississippi from the speech which the President made at Baltimore during the 1932 campaign. That is the statement upon which the President carried great areas in the West in that campaign. That is the assurance which gave him his votes. Certainly the President is not going to deny his own statement, and certainly he could not or should not complain if we should write into the bill in plain, simple language the provision that he may not have the power to do that which he has said he does not propose to do.

Mr. HARRISON. Is not the price today over 80 cents a pound for clean wool?

Mr. STEIWER. In 1930 we enacted a new tariff law.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not talking about 1930. I am talking about now. There is quite a difference between what it is now and what it was 3 years ago when the Senator's party controlled the Government.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Is it not a fact that the price of grease wool after the passage of the act of 1930 went down as low as 4 or 5 cents a pound?

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know the price in the Senator's area. Of course we all know the value of grease wool depends upon its clean content. I am told that New Mexico has very inferior and very dirty wool, but I do not like to state that in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. HATCH. There were seasons when it could not be sold at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that in 1929 the price of wool was very low? What was the lowest price?

Mr. STEIWER. I cannot tell the Senator the lowest price in 1929.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator was at that time engaged in the wool business.

Mr. STEIWER. Not at that time. My experience was prior to that time. Wool was very low. I think the lowest price was 3 years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the price then?

Mr. STEIWER. In the West we figure prices on wool in the grease. There was a grease price in the Pacific coast area as low as 8 or 9 cents a pound.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the price on clean wool?

Mr. STEIWER. Substantially three times that or a little more.

Of course, that was due to a variety of causes and due to many other things, including the condition of the textile industry.

In that connection I want to add one more observation and that is that although the President stated in his Baltimore speech that he did not propose to reduce the duties upon agricultural products, everyone who knows even the beginning of the theory of protection for wool knows that there must be compensatories upon the manufactured articles, and the President has made no assurance to the country that he will not reduce the duty upon yarns and upon cloth and upon woolen garments or other products of wool.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I, with the permission of the Senator from Oregon, refer to the learned Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to say that American wool can never be considered as on a basis with the wool which comes across the Mexican line. That is an answer to the 4-cent wool which existed, perchance, in southern New Mexico.

Let me answer the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]—and I am answering his position in a spirit entirely friendly to the administration, entirely fair to it, entirely desirous of following it. Since the speech was made to which he referred, an excerpt from which was read by the learned Senator from Mississippi, there has been an intervening agency, to wit, the Secretary of Agriculture, whose precepts and teachings have gone forth to the country to merit condemnation from the agricultural communities of the country.

Mr. STEIWER. There has been another intervening agency. There has been an apparent surrender upon the part of our Government to a new philosophy, to a belief that we must serve the world, that we must better the world, that we must improve the trade and economic conditions of foreign countries. The record is written at large. Numerous statements have been presented to this body, made by advisers of this administration, indicating that we are to embark upon a new policy, and not a man in this body knows exactly what that policy may be, and yet we feel it in the very air. We know that under the trade agreements, when we start to engage in entangling commercial alliances with all the nations of the world, to pile import restriction upon import restriction, and then possibly trade them off again, the new advisers under the new deal, the new policy, may intervene even more effectually than the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I must hurry on, Mr. President. I hope the Senator will not be offended if I decline to yield. I have only 5 minutes more.

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, no, Mr. President; I was only going to ask the Senator from Oregon if he would let me know, for information, to what he refers. The matter he related is new to me.

Mr. STEIWER. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. LEWIS. I will ask the question, and if it takes too much time to answer it, I pray the Senator will feel free not to do so. What did the able Senator mean in his allusion, in response to the Senator from Louisiana, to some banking establishment which the Senator from Oregon felt was influencing the price of wool?

Mr. STEIWER. I did not mean that, Mr. President. This bill is influencing the price of wool; but the intermediate credit bank, for fear of the lack of stability in the market, has cut down its loan ratio within very recent times, 2 or 3 weeks ago. That is a significant thing; and not only that, but here is the kind of material we find:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. STEIWER. I am sorry, but I cannot yield. I cannot finish my statement for lack of time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like the authority for the Senator's latter statement regarding the intermediate credit bank.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEIWER. I am sorry, but I cannot yield. I desire to proceed. I wish to give an illustration of why we know so definitely that agriculture is being hurt by the mere pendency of this bill, and that it will be injured by the proposed delegation of powers in the Executive.

Here is a telegram referring to a transaction in Utah, sent to Mr. F. R. Marshall, who is the secretary of the National Wool Growers' Association. It says:

> Following is statement of Sevy Bros. on sale of their wool: "Howard Candland offered 17 cents on consignment, 21½ cents outright sale, and if tariff is not lowered would add 5 cents to above prices."

I have, from another gentleman, a telegram which relates to some of the same transactions. It is to this effect:

> Understanding is that Candland agreed to raise offered prices 5 cents if pending tariff bill was not passed at time wool was received in Boston.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STEIWER. I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

It is inevitably true that when uncertainty is introduced into business life, stability is destroyed. There is no power that depends upon ipse dixit that can be employed by any executive of any nation without enabling the purchaser to take advantage of the seller. It will always be a "bear" influence. It is now, and it will be, a "bear" influence, injurious to the agricultural elements of our country; and I submit that they ought not to be required to meet a condition of that kind.

Mr. President, I have about exhausted my time. I desire to read a summarized statement as a conclusion of the remarks I am making. This statement was prepared by another, but it exemplifies my thought so well that I will read it.

> If the Democratic leaders today deny that their reciprocal tariff program will injure the American farmer, let them explain now what will happen when around the table of that international conference Denmark and other Scandinavian countries demand a lowering of the duties on dairy products, particularly butter, and Argentina demands a lowering of our agricultural rates on corn and wheat and beef, and Australia and New Zealand demand a lowering of our rates on dairy products and wool and lamb, and Canada demands a lowering of our agricultural rates on wheat and dairy products, livestock, and lumber? Practically all of Canada's protest against our tariff is due to our agricultural rates. The same is true of the protests of all South American countries, of Australia and New Zealand, of Italy and Spain, of the Scandinavian countries, of Russia, of Cuba, and Mexico. None of these countries are manufacturing countries. Their exports are agricultural almost exclusively. Their protests against the present tariff are against its agricultural schedules.

There could be no possible reciprocable tariff agreement between the United States and any of those countries which did not open American markets to the agricultural exports of those countries.

The American producer may be given access to foreign markets under a reciprocal tariff, but he will not be given orders for goods; he will not be given any special privileges in those markets, and he will be able to extend his sales in those foreign markets only if he meets the competitive prices of Soviet Russia, the Argentine, New Zealand, and Australia in food products, and Czechoslovakia, Germany, Hungary, Australia, Japan, Italy, and France in the manufactured products. And if he meets their prices in order to extend his sales, wherein does he profit?

We will be trading a good market for a bad one, a profitable market for a bankrupt one.

Mr. President, I conclude with the expression of the thought that there is no possible gain in this bill which can compensate the inevitable losses that will occur under it; and there is especially no hope for the American farmer in this bill. Nothing but injury can come to him if we hang this sword over his head.

There is only one course by which we can assure agriculture that the threat implied in this legislation will not be carried into effect, and that is by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], thus writing into the bill definite legislative exemptions so that all will know that agriculture in this country is not to be doomed by instability, uncertainty, and fear, all caused by reposing in the Executive a power to injure industry by taking away the protection which it now enjoys, and subjecting it to the competition of the world.

(The editorial from the Manufacturers Record submitted by Mr. WALCOTT and ordered printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of Mr. STEIWER's remarks, is as follows:)

PROTECT AMERICAN BUSINESS

Last year we bought $1,449,000,000 worth of goods from foreign countries. This was $126,000,000 more than in 1932. Of our total imports in 1933, more than $1,113,000,000, or 76 percent, was expended for foreign farm and forest products, manufactured and unmanufactured, the balance of $336,100,000 was for minerals, metals, machinery, chemicals, etc.

We are now told we must lower our tariff and buy more from abroad in order to sell more. The cotton growing sections of the South which export about half of its cotton crop is particularly interested in this movement, but what other industrial group is to share its domestic market with foreign producers and what is to happen to the workers in the affected groups when increased foreign competition curtails their sales? Surely general farmers, now overburdened with surplus crops, should not be made to suffer additional import competition. With our industrial capacity in many lines now beyond our domestic requirements the jobs of industrial workers should not further be jeopardized by opening wide our home markets to foreign producers. Employed American factory workers create wealth and buying power in the United States. They are the best customers of our farmers.

Let us not forget that over 60 percent of our import values in 1933 entered this country free of duty. Ninety percent of the imported crude foodstuffs, 38 percent of the manufactured foodstuffs, 71 percent of the crude materials, 60 percent of the semimanufactures and 41 percent of the finished manufactures pay no duty and directly compete with American producers.

With the rise in the price of commodities under N.R.A., with the increased cost of farm products under the A.A.A. and the procesing tax, it is all the more vital that American producers and labor's jobs be protected against cheap foreign goods. It is more important to protect our domestic business, which is about 95 percent of our total trade, than to make doubtful concessions to the remaining 5 percent done with foreign countries. With the exception of certain tropical products and manufactured specialties not produced in this country, there is nothing that we need to import and nothing that can be imported without direct competition with American producers and labor.

With the amount of import business now being done, we are paying a high proportion of our ocean shipping costs to foreign carriers; foreign investors in American enterprises are still receiving millions in dividends and interest from this country, and American tourists spend abroad hundreds of millions of dollars a year, all of which must be taken into account in considering foreign capacity to buy American products.

There always will be a certain amount of trade between the United States and foreign countries but since many foreign countries have rapidly developed their own manufactures and have improved their agricultural situation to the point where many are raising their food supply, they do not require as much of our goods as formerly and unless another war disorganizes production and distribution facilities they will not buy on the scale of former years. Certainly with our own productive capacity and possibilities of development of industries we do not require so much of foreign goods. Foreigners only buy from us or other countries when they can do so at a saving or because of superior quality. They have bought our cotton because of its better quality in the past and they have bought more of it when prices were comparatively low.

It has been said that we cannot sell cotton abroad except on a reciprocal trade basis and that means tariff revision downward. We have not lowered the tariff and yet in the calendar year 1933 we shipped 8,354,000 bales of cotton abroad. In the past 2 years of the worst of the depression we shipped abroad more than 17,400,000 bales of cotton. In the two most prosperous years, 1928–29, when we were lending billions to foreign countries, we shipped abroad only 16,314,000 bales. In the 5 years, 1921–25, our average of cotton exports were only 6,639,000 bales when presumably Europe was replenishing its textile supplies. In the 5 years, 1929–33, since the beginning of the world depression our average cotton exports have been 7,309,000 bales.

It is not conceivable that we would have sold any more cotton had we been buying twice as much from foreign producers. They would not have bought more cotton at prevailing American prices than their capacity to consume. They would not have bought more wheat or any other commodity that they were endeavoring to produce and which they have been protecting against competitive imports.

As more than 76 percent of our import values represent unmanufactured and manufactured products of the farm, any general lowering of the tariff would adversely affect the American farmer in opening his own home market to cheap foreign farm competition.

Foreign growers have been increasing their acreage and production while we have been curtailing acreage. In 1933 we cut off 6,000,000 acres, foreign countries added 4,000,000 acres. Many foreign countries have been increasing industrial capacity while we have taken a short-sighted policy of limiting new construction even in the establishment of pulp and paper plants that would enable us to supply our own requirements. Are we now to open the way for foreign producers to enter our home markets, causing further unemployment in our factories?

What we need to do is—

To concentrate on the development of our home market by producing the things we use in the United States, giving employment to American workers, instead of trying to see how much employment we can create abroad by buying more from foreign producers.

To increase the buying power of American industrial workers so they can buy more manufactured cotton and other products of American producers.

To protect American sugar producers and American sugar workers.

To protect American clay workers and our ceramic industries, our lumber and steel, as well as our farmers against foreign imports produced by cheap labor.

To produce our own wood pulp and paper requirements. If we produced in the United the pulpwood products now imported we could give year-round jobs to 70,000 American workmen. The South can supply the raw material needed. We paid $143,000,000 for pulp and paper imports in 1933, including free of duty $5,362,000 of pulpwood and $57,398,000 of manufactured wood pulp.

The existence of thousands of local industries, and all that we have been trying to accomplish through the recovery movement in creating employment, raising wages, and reducing working hours will be at stake if we allow foreign goods to undermine our domestic trade.

RELIEF OF DEBTORS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 32, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "whether filed before or after this section becomes effective, provided the present operations of such corporation do not exclude it hereunder, and whether or not the corporation has been adjudicated a bankrupt"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or in any territorial jurisdiction in the State in which it was incorporated. The court shall upon petition transfer such proceedings to the territorial jurisdiction where the interests of all the parties will be best subserved"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"In case an executory contract or unexpired lease of real estate shall be rejected pursuant to direction of the judge given in a proceeding instituted under this section, or shall have been rejected by a trustee or receiver in bankruptcy or receiver in equity in a proceeding pending prior to the institution of a proceeding under this section, any person injured by such rejection shall, for all purposes of this section and of the reorganization plan, its acceptance and confirmation, be deemed to be a creditor. The claim of a landlord for injury resulting from the rejection of an unexpired lease of real estate or for damages or indemnity under a covenant contained in such lease shall be treated as a claim ranking on a parity with debts which would be provable under section 63 (a) of this act, but shall be limited to an amount not to exceed the rent, without acceleration, reserved by said lease for the 3 years next succeeding the date of surrender of the premises to the landlord or the date of reentry of the landlord, whichever first occurs, whether before or after the filing of the petition, plus unpaid rent accrued up to such date of surrender or reentry: Provided, That the court shall scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages allowed assignee hereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 10, line 23, of the House engrossed copy of the bill, after the word "committee", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the judge shall scrutinize and may disregard any limitations or provisions of any depositary agreements, trust indentures, committee or other authorizations affecting any creditor acting under this section and may enforce an accounting thereunder or restrain the exercise of any power which he finds to be unfair or not consistent with public policy and may limit any claims filed by such committee member or agent, to the actual consideration paid therefor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the Senate amendment strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That such personal representative shall first obtain the consent and authority of the court which has assumed jurisdiction of said estate, to invoke the relief provided by said act of March 3, 1933. The first sentence of subdivision (m) of said section 74 is amended to read as follows: 'The filing of a debtor's petition or answer seeking relief under this section shall subject the debtor and his property, wherever located, to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court in which the order approving the petition or answer as provided in subdivision (a) is filed, and this shall include property of the debtor in the possession of a trustee under a trust deed or a mortgage, or a receiver, custodian or other officer of any court in a pending cause, irrespective of the date of appointment of such receiver or other officer, or the date of the institution of such proceedings: Provided, That it shall not affect any proceeding in any court in which a final decree has been entered.'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 28 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. In the administration of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, as amended, the district court or any judge thereof shall, in its or his discretion, so apportion appointments of receivers and trustees among persons, firms, or corporations, or attorneys therefor, within the district, eligible thereto, as to prevent any person, firm, or corporation from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district. No person shall be appointed as a receiver or trustee who is a near relative of the judge of the court making such appointment. The compensation allowed a receiver or trustee or an attorney for a receiver or trustee shall in no case be excessive or exorbitant, and the court in fixing such compensation shall have in mind the conservation and preservation of the estate of the bankrupt and the interests of the creditors therein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 30 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but the claim of a landlord for injury resulting from the rejection by the trustee of an unexpired lease of real estate or for damages or indemnity under a covenant contained in such lease shall in no event be allowed in an amount exceeding the rent reserved by the lease, without acceleration, for the year next succeeding the date of the surrender of the premises plus an amount equal to the unpaid rent accrued up to said date: Provided, That the court shall scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages allowed assignee hereunder: Provided further, That the provisions of this clause (7) shall apply to estates pending at the time of the enactment of this amendatory act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 31 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. Proceedings under section 77 of chapter 8, amendment to the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as amended, approved March 3, 1933, shall not be grounds for the removal of any cause of action to the United States District Court which was not removable before the passage and approval of this section, and any cause of action heretofore removed from a State court on account of this section shall be remanded to the court from which it was removed, and such order of removal vacated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 33 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That the second sentence of subdivision (b) of section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services, including all expenses, a fee of $25 for each case docketed and submitted to him, to be paid out of the Treasury.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a unanimous report on the corporate bankruptcy bill; and I ask for its adoption at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT OF HOUSE BILL 5884

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay House Concurrent Resolution 40 before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the concurent resolution (H.Con.Res. 40), which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill, H.R. 5884, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", to strike out in the first section of said bill "Sec. 78" and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 77A", and in said section to strike out "section 79" wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof "section 77B", and in said section to strike out "Sec. 70" and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 77B."

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which makes certain corrections in the conference report I have just filed, and I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion for just a moment?

Mr. FESS. I withhold it.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me to make an observation, I desire to say that if it is humanly possible to stay in session tonight and reach a conclusion as to this bill, I hope we may do it, and that the Senate will remain in session as long as possible.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, merely for information, and perhaps out of curiosity, whether he said "all night"?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not say "all night", but I said I hoped we could stay here and try to finish the bill tonight.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ought to observe that I do not intend to delay the progress of the bill by what I have to say. I think it will not take me long.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, I was not leveling my remarks at the Senator. A great many Senators have inquired whether we intended to remain in session late. We do hope to finish the bill tonight if it is possible; so I did not direct my remark to the Senator at all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, did the Senator direct his remark to me?

Mr. HARRISON. Not a bit in the world. The Senator from Ohio was about to make the point of no quorum, and I was thankful to the Senator for withholding the point of no quorum until we could get a quorum, if the Senator still insists on having a quorum.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if it is desirable to make speeches, a night session would be a splendid time for doing so. I do not object to the suggestion of a night session; but I did desire to get a quorum for my friend from Vermont, who has something worth while to say.

Mr. HARRISON. I can appreciate that; but I thought it was well to make the observation that I did at this time.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I favor the agricultural amendment, and shall vote for it. I shall do so partly because if it should become the law some of the principal products of the State of Vermont, as well as the United States generally, would be removed from under the baneful shadow of the pending bill, for, regardless of what choice the Executive may make of articles to pay the cost of the trades he negotiates, regardless of the fact that he may omit therefrom the principal products of Vermont, notwithstanding that, there is always the shadow of that power overhanging the State. So, if these commodities should be removed from the bill, and the bill should thereupon be enacted, I would feel that a great benefit to the State of Vermont and to the United States generally had been accomplished by the Senator from California in the presentation of his amendment, and by the Senate in adopting it.

I intend to discuss only two points, and very briefly. During the course of the debate I have heard Senators who are very distinguished lawyers make the observation that authority has heretofore been given to commercial attachés to negotiate trade agreements, and being somewhat surprised by that claim, I made a very thorough search of the statutes to see whether or not the claim was accurate. I believe it to be true that the only authority granted to commercial attachés is contained in the law which I read from Supplement 7 to the Code of Laws of the United States of America, title 15, "Commerce and Trade", sections 197 and 197a entitled "Foreign Commerce Service." I read section 197:

Establishment; officers; grades: There is hereby established in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce the Foreign Commerce Service of the United States (hereinafter referred to as the Foreign Commerce Service), consisting of officers to be graded in the following order, and to be known as "commercial attachés, assistant commercial attachés, trade commissioners, and assistant trade commissioners."

197a. Duties of officers: Under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary) the officers of the Foreign Commerce Service shall—

(a) Promote the Foreign Service of the United States;

(b) Investigate and report upon commercial and industrial conditions and activities in foreign countries which may be of interest to the United States;

(c) Perform such other duties as the Secretary may direct in connection with the promotion of the industries, trade, or commerce of the United States;

(d) Make such inspections of the foreign commerce service as the Secretary may direct.

I submit that unless, owing to human frailties, in the efforts employed by me in this search I have overlooked some provision in the statutes, there is no authority for any official of the United States or any representative of the United States to make any trade agreement whatever, save only the President of the United States, who has always exercised the power of entering into Executive agreements which did not have that scope and effect which come within the purview of the constitutional provision requiring that all treaties must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate before becoming effective, although they have been negotiated by the President.

There seems to me to have been a lack of precision, a lack of certainty regarding Executive agreements. No definition of trade agreements as used in the bill upon which anyone in the Senate has agreed, has been put into the RECORD. To be sure, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] stated, and I quote from page 10072 of the RECORD of May 31, 1934, as follows:

The well-recognized distinction between an Executive agreement and a treaty is that the former cannot alter the existing law and must conform to all prior statutory enactments, whereas a treaty, if ratified by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, itself becomes the supreme law of the land and takes precedence over any prior statutory enactments.

Mr. President, I suggest that that is not a definition; that it lacks two qualities, namely, inclusion and exclusion. It is a mere statement of a truth. It may be admitted to be entirely accurate so far as it goes, but it does not comprehend the connotation of the words "trade agreement"; it does not exclude those things which constitute a treaty, and therefore it does not distinguish at all between "trade agreement" and "treaty."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. From what page did the Senator read?

Mr. AUSTIN. Ten thousand three hundred and sixty-five.

Mr. BORAH. If I understood correctly the Senator's quotation from the Senator from Georgia, even the definition given by the Senator from Georgia, would clearly bring this proposed law within the prohibition of the Constitution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is my understanding also; that if we were to adopt that as a definition of "trade agreement", then the proposed law would be unconstitutional, because it undertakes to give the Executive the power to negotiate what must be construed only as a treaty when put into effect.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. But the quotation was:

The well-recognized distinction between an Executive agreement and a treaty is that the former cannot alter the existing law.

Whereas these agreements would alter existing law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; they must alter the law, or there is no use for this particular bill. This measure seeks an alteration of the law in respect to rates and other exactions, to import restrictions, limitations, and all sorts of things; in fact, every aspect of tariff making.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, does he have any doubt that with this authority the President can go right over the quotas which we have established? Is there not sufficient authority given to the Agricultural Department and everyone else; so that, with this power given to the President, he would not be bound by the quotas we have established?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think this being the most recent utterance of the Congress on the subject, it would repeal or amend to the necessary extent any prior statute in pari materia, and therefore that he could do so.

I now wish to refer to such authorities as are available, touching the distinction between a trade agreement or Executive agreement and a treaty; and I make this point in advance in order that what I read from the authorities may be applied to the point as I proceed, and that is that no Executive agreement, no trade agreement was ever authorized by Congress to be made, or was ever made heretofore, which authorized the following things: Created a rate, created the form of an import duty, wrote the classification of an article, fixed charges and exactions other than duties for imports, and thereupon applied them to articles of manufacture or produce of all foreign countries. That is a strong statement, which, if true, makes absolutely unanswerable the proposition that there is no precedent for this proposed law, there is no precedent for a construction of this bill as constitutional. There is absolutely no importance or effect to all these pages from page 82 and following, found in the hearings before the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, where the Assistant Secretary of State, Dr. Sayre, has undertaken to set forth in detail the history of Executive agreements and reciprocal treaties relating to commerce. If we recognize as correct the statement I have just made, then all that history goes for naught, because it does not apply to the present situation in any way at all. In other words, every page in that hearing may be scanned, every statement made by the learned doctor there about our history may be examined, and it will be found that not one single example exists in the history of this country of an Executive agreement or a foreign trade agreement that comprehends the points to which I have called attention and which are included in this bill.

So I should like now to refer to the authorities in order to show, if possible, experience, construction by others, practical application, and all those things that may be dug out of history from which we may provide a rule or a definition or a distinction, for it is my opinion, after much study, that no author, no lawyer, no judge, has undertaken to crystallize into any definite form the distinction between a trade agreement and a treaty, or between an Executive agreement and a treaty. I shall use those terms interchangeably. When I speak of trade agreements I mean to comprehend Executive agreements.

I first call attention to the work by Dr. Quincy Wright, professor of international law in the University of Minnesota, entitled "The Control of American Foreign Relations", which was published in 1922, and I refer to page 234:

With respect to such Presidential agreements, the questions arise: (1) What subject matter may they cover? (2) What sort of an application do they impose? No general answer can be given to the latter question. An Executive agreement may impose an absolute obligation, as would be true of the Executive settlement of a claim by an American citizen against a foreign government. After the President has agreed to a settlement, the claim becomes res judicata, and if against the American citizen it cannot be raised by a subsequent administration against the foreign government. If injustice has been done the American citizen, it is a moral duty of the United States itself to compensate him. On the other hand, an Executive agreement may impose an obligation strictly binding only the President, who makes it, as would be true of an exchange of notes over foreign policy, such as the Root-Takahira agreement or the Lansing-Ishii agreement.

In general, the President can bind only himself and his successors in office by Executive agreements, but in certain cases Executive agreements may impose a strong moral obligation upon the treaty-making power and Congress, and they may even be cognizable in the courts. The form of the obligation does not affect its obligatory character. Executive agreements may be by exchange of notes, protocols, cartels, modi videndi, etc., but in any case the obligation depends upon the subject matter.

The last few words constitute the meat of this particular authority—

The obligation depends upon the subject matter.

In other words, he might have said, "Every tub rests upon its own bottom." We have to examine every bill that is presented to us on the basis of its own subject matter in order to ascertain whether its scope and effect are of sufficient importance to the public welfare in order to come within those safeguards which the people require of the Congress and of the Chief Executive with respect to international agreements which affect them.

Mr. President, I turn to volume 20 of the Political Science Quarterly, page 388, where is found a discussion by such a great authority as John Bassett Moore. I do not need to introduce him to the Senate of the United States. In this article, entitled "Treaties and Executive Agreements", a very comprehensive discussion takes place. Of course, I cannot weary the Senate or take the space in the RECORD to do more than extract from it what seems to me pertinent in connection with the objective of ascertaining a dividing line between Executive agreements and treatis and applying that distinction to this measure, in order to ascertain whether or not this measure undertakes to violate the terms of the Constitution. Now I read that portion of this article entitled "The terms 'treaty', 'convention', 'protocol'":

In diplomatic literature, the words "treaty", "convention", and "protocol" are applied, more or less indiscriminately, to international agreements. The words "convention" and "protocol" are indeed usually reserved for agreements of lesser dignity, but not necessarily so. In the jurisprudence of the United States, however, the term "treaty" is properly to be limited, although the Federal statutes and the courts do not always so confine it, to agreements approved by the Senate. Such an agreement may be and often is denominated a "convention", and perchance might be called a "protocol", but it is also, by reason of its approval by the Senate, in the strict sense a "treaty", and possesses, as the product of the treaty-making process, a specific legal character. By the Constitution of the United States a "treaty" is a "supreme law of the land", having the force of an act of congressional legislation and overriding any inconsistent provisions not only in the constitutions and laws of the various States, but also in prior national statutes.

Here is another characteristic that helps to identify a treaty from one of these agreements that may be manufactured by mere act of Congress, authorizing the Executive or anyone else, it matters not who, to make an agreement. In the one case the action is taken by a mere majority vote of the two Houses; the other requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate in the nature of ratification. In the one the solemnity and dignity of the result is such that it overrides prior statutes; it has the effect of the supreme law of the land; and if a law undertakes to occupy the same ground with the treaty the law goes down and the treaty stands, whereas in the case of a mere executive agreement, it may be changed and it must be and is changed if Congress acts upon it and changes it. Does that not lead us somewhere with respect to this bill? If a trade agreement is subject to a subsequent act of the legislature to the degree that it is changed by it, if a trade agreement is also subject to all the statutes that have preceded it, then we observe a characteristic which is entirely inconsistent with this measure, for this measure gives time and effect to these contracts which cannot be shortened and cannot be affected. It gives legal operation to them which cannot be changed and cannot be cut off by an act of Congress.

These agreements contemplated by the pending bill may endure for 3 years, and until due notice has been given of not more than 6 months. Congress may come and go and do what it pleases, but it cannot change that obligation during the period of the contract. Therefore, is it not obvious that this agreement, this contract, this convention, this protocol, or whatever name it may be called by, has the attribute of permanency, of supremacy, of being supreme over the laws; and therefore we have one identifying characteristic, have we not, of a treaty as opposed to a simple executive agreement?

Some examples are given of purely executive agreements, which throw light upon the pursuit of truth here. Under the title, "Examples of Purely Executive Agreements", found at page 389 of the same book——

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The argument has been made here, as I understand, that on notice for a period of 6 months the 3-year contract shall be terminated.

Mr. AUSTIN. Within 3 years?

Mr. HATFIELD. Within 3 years, upon 6 months' notice.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us examine that.

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say that that was pointed out by an argument presented to the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me read the bill. I read from page 5 of the bill, after line 11:

(b) Every foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date on which the agreement comes into force, and, if not then terminated, shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

I do not think that is obscure in its meaning. It seems perfectly clear that that means that the agreement when entered upon for 3 years will endure for 3 years; that it may not be terminated by due notice within 3 years; and that only after 3 years have gone by, if it shall not be terminated at the end of 3 years by due notice referred to therein, it may then be terminated, although it may run for 20 years or more, provided a similar due notice of not exceeding 6 months shall not be given. But in order to terminate it at the end of 3 years, and not have it hold over, it is necessary to give a notice looking to the end of the term before the 3 years have arrived. Due notice must be given at the end of the term it is intended to conclude the agreement in order to accomplish that result.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Then, unless at the end of 3 years notice shall be given, which must extend over a period of 6 months, the treaty may run over for an indefinite period of time, as the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. AUSTIN. The bill so provides.

I now will read what I was about to read when interrupted, as follows:

Such being the nature and meaning of the term "treaty" in the jurisprudence of the United States, we find that the Government has been in the habit of entering into various kinds of agreements with foreign powers without going through the process of treaty making. The conclusion of agreements between governments with more or less formality, is in reality a matter of constant practice, without which current diplomatic business could not be carried on. A question arises as to the rights of an individual, the treatment of a vessel, a matter of ceremonial, or any of the thousand and one things that daily occupy the attention of foreign offices without attracting public notice: The governments directly concerned exchange views and reach a conclusion by which the difference is disposed of. They have entered into an international "agreement"; and to assert that the Secretary of State of the United States, when he has engaged in routine transactions of this kind, as he has constantly done since the foundation of the Government, has violated the Constitution because he did not make a treaty, would be to invite ridicule. Without the exercise of such power it would be impossible to conduct the business of his office.

But, in addition to agreements made in the transaction of current business, we find that the Executive has entered into international agreements of a more formal kind without resorting to the treaty-making process.

From this point I do not quote exactly, but merely point out examples such as, for instance, the agreement of 1817 for limitation of naval armaments on the Great Lakes; the cession to the United States of Horseshoe Reef in Lake Erie and its acceptance by the United States.

To be sure, in the latter instance the United States Congress did act upon the matter by making an appropriation for the erection of a lighthouse, and other acts in connection with that cession; but, so far as the question before us is concerned, we ought not to let these facts confuse us at all. It had more than a mere routine effect. It had more importance than the routine affairs to which I first called attention.

In 1882 an agreement was made between the United States and Mexico for the reciprocal passage of troops of the two countries across the border when in pursuit of hostile Indians.

In 1898 the protocol with Spain in settlement of the Spanish-American War. Of course there was after that a treaty of peace.

This marks a certain class of executive agreements which is well defined, namely, the type of agreement which contemplates a treaty that is to be entered into in the future.

I wish to pass over some pages to page 393, in order to point out in a general way the types of agreements which have been made under authority of an act of Congress passed in advance, for certainly there is a definite class of those executive agreements which are made under acts of Congress. The author, Judge Moore, states as follows, quoting from page 393:

It is a peculiarity of these agreements that, so long as the statute under which they are concluded stands unrepealed—

Please note that word "unrepealed", showing the temporary duration of these agreements.

So long as the statute under which they are concluded stands unrepealed, they have precisely the same municipal force as treaties, being in effect laws of the land. And sometimes they relate to subjects which might be and perhaps have been dealt with by the treaty-making power.

I am going hastily through this article in order to point out some of the types. The first type is postal treaties, which have already been called to the attention of the Senate by the learned Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; reciprocity arrangements, discriminating duties, copyrights, and trade marks, Indian treaties, the modus vivendi, the settlement of pecuniary claims. Those are the general types to which Judge Moore refers in this excellent article by him.

I wish to recur only to the reciprocity arrangements, because they are the nearest type to the arrangements suggested in the pending bill. This is what Judge Moore said about that, quoting from page 394:

Another class of international agreements, concluded by the Government of the United States under the authority of an act of Congress, is that of arrangements with foreign powers in relation to commercial reciprocity. Such were the agreements made by the United States under section 3 of the act of October 1, 1890, commonly called the "McKinley Act." By section 3 of this act the President was authorized to impose duties at certain rates—

"Certain rates!" That is the point—

on specified articles—

There is another direction and rule of measure and conduct—whenever, in his judgment, the duties imposed by the country of exportation on goods imported from the United States were, in view of the free admission of such specified articles into the United States, "reciprocally unequal or unreasonable." This retaliatory provision was used for the purpose of securing reciprocal commercial agreements with other powers; and 10 such agreements were in fact concluded, with Austria-Hungary, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Germany, Great Britain, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, and Spain. These agreements remained in force till they were terminated by section 71 of the tariff of August 27, 1894, generally known as the "Wilson-Gorman Act."

The subject of commercial arrangements is also provided for by the act of July 24, 1897, called the "Dingley Act."

He discusses that and says, among other things:

Whenever an agreement is made by which the products and manufactures of the United States are, in his judgment, admitted on reciprocal and equivalent terms, he is authorized—

Of course, this is the milk of the coconut:

He is authorized to suspend by proclamation the imposition and collection of duties on the article in question.

That is a vastly different power from legislating the rate of duty or legislating import restrictions or doing any of the other things which are provided for in this bill, such as writing the classification of articles or fixing the charges and exactions other than duties on imports. There was a definite rule. He took it or left it. It was so much per article or so much percent ad valorem, or it was nothing. The condition upon which and when the law should apply to it was the only matter upon which the Executive had to pass. That is well-known authority within the Constitution—the right to determine when the law shall be applied to the subject.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the able Senator if he has not noted that in many of the agreements to which he has alluded, which his industry clearly has developed after much research, there has been no submission of them to the Senate, the word "treaty" being really taken as a mere expression of a compact? And may I take the liberty of inviting the attention of the Senator to the fact that in the case of the bill to which he has just referred—as the eminent Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who sits near him, will recall in his official relation at that time—I cast my first vote in the House of Representatives, where, being a Democrat, as I am if I understand the definition, I nevertheless voted for a measure of tariff, because of my conception that tariff is an economic adjustment of business, and voted for the very measure which the able Senator from Vermont is now reading.

I ask the Senator, has he not, in the very careful research which his industry indicates he has given, disclosed the fact that none of the particular agreements referred to by Judge Moore in his treatise was ever submitted to the Senate for ratification?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is just what I myself observed, and what I am trying to show to the Senate. I am undertaking to give as thorough a history of executive agreements not submitted to the Senate for ratification as I can give in the time at my disposal, in order to have it made clear that the entire story of executive agreements and trade arrangements made by the President under authority given in advance by Congress shows that they are limited in their scope, and that never before in the entire history of the United States has a single agreement been made or authorized which had the effect of giving the President the power to create the duty, to create the form of the import duty, to write the classification of the article, to fix the charges and other exactions—that is, the exactions other than duties—for imports, and to apply the rates determined upon to articles produced in all foreign countries. Never before in the history of this country was such a thing attempted. Heretofore, in every one of the instances to which I have referred—and I have not finished the recital—there has been a rule more definite than the rule contained in the pending bill, which would guide the President, or the other officer who executed the duties, in applying the law. That is the point. That was the sole principle which supported these laws against the attack that they were unconstitutional when they reached the Supreme Court for consideration.

Now I call attention to another eminent authority, Edward S. Corwin, professor of politics at Princeton University, author of The President's Control of Foreign Relations. This book was published in 1917. At page 117 this learned doctor says:

Turning now to the class of agreements which rests on the power of the President alone, we may first consider certain ones which he has entered into by virtue of his powers as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Then he goes on and tells about the early conventions which are set forth in rather informal notes between various countries—Great Britain and the United States, Mexico and the United States—and finally he refers to a very interesting episode, the action of President Theodore Roosevelt with reference to Santo Domingo. This is spoken of at page 120, as follows:

The question that suggests itself at this point is: How, in the face of all these devices, is the Senate to be assured its due participation in treaty-making? Whenever it is desirable that an agreement have the force of domestic law, the Senate must, ordinarily, certainly be resorted to.

This is the same distinction, expressed in another way, to which I alluded some time ago.

Yet again, what executive authority has called into existence the same authority may also abate. For the rest, however, the criteria seem lacking for a nice differentiation of the prerogative under discussion from the treaty-making power, with the result that its curtailment, like that of the power of the President in appointing "special agents", is a problem of practical statesmanship rather than of constitutional law.

This was proved most strikingly in the case of the agreement which President Roosevelt made in 1905 with Santo Domingo, for putting the customs houses of that island under American control. Mr. Roosevelt tells the story of this agreement in his autobiography, as follows:

"The Constitution did not explicitly give me power to bring about the necessary agreement with Santo Domingo. But the Constitution did not forbid my doing what I did. I put the agreement into effect, and I continued its execution for 2 years before the Senate acted; and I would have continued it until the end of my term, if necessary, without any action by Congress. But it was far preferable that there should be action by Congress, so that we might be proceeding under a treaty which was the law of the land and not merely by a direction of the Chief Executive which would lapse when that particular Executive left office. I therefore did my best to get the Senate to ratify what I had done. There was a good deal of difficulty about it. * * * Enough Republicans were absent to prevent the securing of a two-thirds vote for the treaty, and the Senate adjourned without any action at all, and with the feeling of entire self-satisfaction at having left the country in the position of assuming a responsibility and then failing to fulfill it. Apparently the Senators in question felt that in some way they had upheld their dignity. All that they had really done was to shirk their duty. Somebody had to do that duty, and accordingly I did it. I went ahead and administered the proposed treaty anyhow, considering it as a simple agreement on the part of the Executive which would be converted into a treaty whenever the Senate acted. After a couple of years the Senate did act, having previously made some utterly unimportant changes which I ratified and persuaded Santo Domingo to ratify. In all its history Santo Domingo has had nothing happen to it as fortunate as this treaty, and the passing of it saved the United States from having to face serious difficulties with one or more foreign powers."

Now we pass on to what the doctor says:

In other words, the only important difference between the President's "agreement" and the "treaty" which superseded it is to be found in the fact that the latter was ratified by the Senate, with the result, however, of putting affairs on a durable basis.

Do we not get something out of this? Is there not in the heart of this extract this principle, to add to those which we have extracted from the others, namely, the durability?

But it was far preferable that there should be action by Congress, so that we might be proceeding under a treaty which was the law of the land and not merely by a direction of the Chief Executive which would lapse when that particular Executive left office.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. It occurs to me that the action of President Roosevelt in the instance just cited was almost identical with the action of President McKinley in the protocol which anticipated or was preliminary to the treaty of peace with Spain. In each instance the act was what might be called "preliminary" to an anticipated treaty which was to be ratified by the duly constituted ratifying agency of the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maine for his comment. I am in hearty agreement with him about it. I think, crystalized into the form of principle, that what we gather from this particular citation is that an executive agreement is one which lapses with the end of the term of the Executive.

Apply that to this bill, and what do we find? This bill is intended and designed to endure after the lapse of the term of the Chief Executive which is now pending. We have to assume no politics in this to get the point. It is a question of the term. The term of his office will expire before the term of these agreements. Therefore, are these agreements executive agreements, as tested by the principle that an executive agreement is one which lapses with the end of the term of the Executive? They are not. The agreements provided for by this bill are treaties because of that distinction.

Now I pass to Samuel B. Crandall, of the bar of New York and the District of Columbia, and his work entitled "Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement", published in 1916. At page 122 and following, Mr. Crandall discusses agreements reached by the Executive in virtue of acts of Congress, and particularizes respecting reciprocal agreements. All the treaties following 1890 to which allusion has been made heretofore in the debate are referred to in this discussion, and the author says as follows:

Speaking for the Court—

That is, the Court in the case of Field against Clark, referring to these powers—

Mr. Justice Harlan said: "As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it cannot be said that in ascertaining that fact and in issuing his proclamation, in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law"—

As it is in this case. He was a mere agent of the law-making department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. I omit some, and read further:

"It further authorized the President, when such concessions were in his judgment reciprocal and equivalent, to suspend by proclamation the collection on these articles of the regular duties imposed by the act, and to subject them to special rates as provided for in the section."

There is nothing in the pending bill which establishes a rate or provides for special rates. The bill authorizes the President to legislate upon that point.

I now refer to Fifteen Yale Law Journal, an article by James T. Barrett, of the Michigan bar, on International Agreements Without the Advice and Consent of the Senate. I read at page 18, only a short extract, because my time is passing:

It might be supposed that an agreement with a foreign state, to which the approbation of the Senate has not been given, is a thing unknown to our constitutional practice. This is, however, not the fact, and it will be the purpose of this article to point out that there are certain classes of international agreements in the making of which the Senate does not have a share.

Turning to page 19, this author refers to some pertinent comment by Judge Story, written in 1833, saying:

Judge Story, writing in 1833, considered that the precise distinction between the words, "treaty", "agreement", and "compact" was not clear. He seemed inclined, however, to assign to the first term engagements of a political character. The other two, he thought, might apply to "what might be deemed mere private rights of sovereignty", such as questions of boundary, interests in land, situated in the territory of each other, and other internal regulations for the mutual comfort and convenience of states bordering on each other.

That is the end of what he quotes from Judge Story on the Constitution. The author states:

The meaning of the words "treaty", "agreement", and "compact", as applied in international relations was discussed by Chief Justice Taney in the case of Holmes against Jennison in the year 1840.

That case was reported in 14 Peters, 540.

The question here involved was the right of a State (Vermont) to surrender a fugitive from justice, on the request of a foreign government (Lower Canada), and it was there held that the surrender might not lawfully be made, because it necessarily involved an agreement between a State and a foreign power to which the assent of Congress had not been given. In considering the meaning of the words "treaty", "agreement", and "compact" as used in article I, section 10 of the Constitution, Chief Justice Taney observed that "the words 'agreement' and 'compact' cannot be construed as synonymous with one another."

That is an important thing. That is one of the principles to be taken from this particular citation. They cannot be regarded as synonymous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will continue on the bill. The quotation concludes:

And still less can either of them be held to mean the same thing with the word "treaty" in the preceding clause.

I now refer to page 63 of the Yale Law Journal, being a second chapter of this article by Mr. Barrett, of the Michigan bar, in which he gives us certain information, as follows:

International agreements entered into by the President, and which become binding, without the concurrence of the Senate, may be classified as follows: (1) Agreements authorized by act of Congress; (2) agreements entered into by virtue of the military powers of the President; (3) modi vivendi and other provisional agreements; (4) agreements for the adjustment of claims of American citizens against foreign governments.

He discusses that first classification as follows:

1. Agreements entered into by virtue of an act of Congress differ from ordinary treaty arrangements, in that they have the sanction of a majority of both Houses of Congress, instead of the vote of two-thirds of the Senators present in executive session. They also are usually entered into subsequent to the passing of the enabling act of Congress, whereas with treaties the negotiations, in theory at least, precedes action by the Senate.

As illustrative of these agreements, this author refers to the same agreements to which I have already referred as succeeding the Tariff Act of 1890 and the Tariff Act of 1897.

Referring to page 70, we get at what the author's understanding of the reason of this power is. He says:

In the United States, as we have seen, the participation of Congress has manifested itself chiefly in relation to regulations of commerce, and as to trade marks, copyright, and postal regulations. In all of these cases there has been a general law, in pursuance of which the President has made agreements. In all, except the case of postal conventions, the theory on which the President acts, is that he is merely putting into execution a law whose operation is contingent upon the existence of certain facts—reciprocal legislation or practice in a foreign state.

The author reaches the following conclusion on page 82:

From the foregoing facts and precedents we may derive the following conclusions:

That an arrangement with a foreign power, whether made by a State, with the consent of Congress, or by the President with or without that consent, is not a contract included under the term "treaty" as used in the Federal Constitution.

That an agreement, if so made by a State, comes within this category if—

Here is the point—

if it relates to local or temporary matters, and especially, if it relates to property rights rather than to political objects.

That the President, under an act or resolution of Congress, and by virtue of his duty to see that the laws are faithfully executed, may make agreements to carry such legislation into effect.

That the President alone may enter into an agreement where it (a) involves an exercise of the military power, (b) regulates temporarily a matter to be ultimately adjusted by formal treaty, (c) relates to private claims against foreign governments.

That the President, by virtue of a general arbitration treaty, specifically enumerating certain causes to be referred to arbitration, may lawfully make the agreements necessary for that purpose, without submitting the same to the Senate for its approval.

These conclusions, as well as the facts stated by this author, show that never in the history of the exercise of this power by the President, when given power by Congress, has it ever been employed in a case which undertook what is undertaken in this instance, namely, to invest the President with the power to create a rate, to establish a form of import duties, to write a classification of articles, to fix charges and exactions other than duties for imposts, and to make them applicable to commodities from every nation on earth. That one power to create import restrictions without any limitations upon him whatever is obviously legislative, and is a power which never before has been granted to the President. That is a political power; that is a power which affects the public welfare generally; and that is a distinguishing feature which we dig out of this particular author.

I refer now to Charles Cheney Hyde, who is probably well known to the Senate. He has published an important work on international law, chiefly as interpreted and applied by the United States. I read now, however, from an article by him in Seventeenth Greenbag, page 229, where he discusses the exercise of power, under the tariff acts of 1890 and of other years, to make executive agreements, and he refers to the exercise of power in detail.

I consider this comment very important. I believe it should have influence with the Senate, because it is the judgment and opinion of an expert upon this subject, a man who had special knowledge and special experience. He said of the reciprocity agreements made under these several tariff acts as follows:

It is to be observed that these reciprocity arrangements, although expressed in the form of contract, imposed no restriction on the United States or other parties thereto to alter their tariff schedules and thus terminate their obligations to exact reduced or limited duties on articles brought into their territory.

Is that not a test of the character of this proposed act? This measure is to be so effective in time and in scope and in objective as to bind the Congress of the United States when once the power under it is exercised so that it may not within 3 years, in any event, change the rate of duty that is so established by the Chief Executive under this authority and power. Worse than that; it binds the hands of Congress so that Congress may not change these limitations, prohibitions, classifications, forms of import duty, charges, and exactions other than duties, imposed on importations or imposed for the regulation of imports. We, the United States, become bound to every country on earth by one agreement made with one small country anywhere on earth with respect to such article or articles as are comprehended in that agreement and the duties thereon fixed or as to any of the other classifications or limitations made. We become bound for at least 3 years, and we cannot during that period alter the tariff schedules, we cannot exact, reduce, or limit duties on those articles during the whole period of time. That is the test which determines the fact that these agreements will not be trade agreements, according to precedents or according to theory, but will have such power and scope and effect that they should have the solemnity of ratification by the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FESS. In case we wish to repeal the particular authority which we are about to grant, and the President should not look with favor upon it, it would take two-thirds of both Houses to do it.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true. That question was asked me when I was previously discussing the subject. At that time I did not understand its scope, but it is apparent that if we should undertake to repeal this bill when it shall become a law the same rules that affect the veto would affect such an attempt, and the degree of vote indicated would be required.

I do not undertake, Mr. President, to formulate the rule. I do not undertake to write a definition on my feet. I think I am not qualified to make a definition that is general in its scope, that is exclusive and inclusive enough to fit all cases and to be an accurate test in every case. What I do think is that whenever a bill is presented for enactment by Congress, that particular bill must be tested not with reference to probabilities but with reference to every possibility under that bill. We should test this bill on that basis, and so doing, applying the principles which have come up differently in every instance, and been discussed by so many different authorities, applying the precedents—and they are numerous—it is seen that there is nothing in the history of this subject which justifies any other conclusion save that the power granted to the President to fix rates, the power granted to the President with respect to rate and form of import duties, the power granted to the President to write the very terms which shall characterize the classification of articles, the power to fix limitations, prohibitions, charges, and exactions other than duties, have such scope, have such political effect, have such duration in time, and become so far the supreme law of the land, if the conception of the bill shall be carried out, that they are entitled to have validity only if they have been passed upon by a two-thirds vote of the Senate and are therefore treaty powers.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. I think the Senator discussed the effect of paragraph (b) on page 5 of the bill, regarding the termination of the agreements; but I was not quite clear in my mind, especially as I read that provision in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in his speech appearing at page 8989 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17. The Senator will observe that paragraph (b) reads:

(b) Every foreign-trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date on which the agreement comes into force, and, if not then terminated, shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

I suppose that the effect of that provision would be to make such trade agreements continue in effect 3 years from and after their date, during which time they could not be terminated. They could be terminated after the expiration of 3 years upon due notice, and if not terminated at the end of 3 years, then they would be subject to termination on not more than 6 months' notice.

In that connection, let me read the statement of the Senator from Mississippi to which I have alluded. It is on page 8989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has expired. It is now 4 o'clock.

Mr. HEBERT. I am sorry to take up the Senator's time. I wanted to have his view on this one point.

I quote from the statement of the Senator from Mississippi:

In other words, after 3 years from the enactment of the law the President will have no more authority to enter into these trade agreements, and if trade agreements are made, say two and a half years from now, they might run along for 3 years, but they can be terminated at any time after that time upon 6 months' notice.

And then in the preceding paragraph, referring again to the terms of these agreements:

These terms must provide for opportunity to terminate the agreements on not exceeding 6 months' notice at any time under 3 years from the date on which the agreements come into force.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if that were intended by the bill I cannot imagine phrasing the bill in a way to confuse it any more than its present phraseology does. This bill expressly says the agreement may be terminated at the end of 3 years if due notice is given. The implication is that the agreement will continue in effect, subject to termination upon a notice to be made within 6 months of the operation of the notice, after that time of 3 years. There is absolutely nothing in clause (b) providing for the termination of agreement within 3 years or which enables anyone to terminate the agreement within 3 years. It makes the agreements operative for 3 years without termination by anyone.

My opinion is, Mr. President, that if the bill shall be passed, and agreements shall be attempted to be made under its provisions, they will not be good for 3 minutes. They will not get by the first test made in the Supreme Court of the United States, because I think it is perfectly absurd to undertake to give to the Chief Executive power to place an obligation to this effect upon the United States without submitting it to the Senate for ratification by two-thirds vote.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have already discussed what I consider the practical effect of the enactment of the bill. On a previous occasion I tried to show what I believe would be the result in the industrial sections of the country if the measure should be enacted into law. At that time I made no reference to the constitutional provision involved, nor did I consider the question from the standpoint of the treaty-making power. I now want to address myself to that phase of the question. It has already been discussed here at some length, but I find my views are not quite in accord with those expressed by Senators on the other side of the Chamber in relation to that particular phase of the question under debate.

I think we are all agreed that the treaty-making power under the Constitution resides in the Chief Executive and the Senate. Where we come to the parting of the ways is in our conception of what is a treaty and whether there is any difference in point of fact between a treaty and an executive agreement, to which reference has repeatedly been made.

The first question which I wish to propound is, What is a treaty? Answering the question I bring to the attention of the Senate the observations of some of the most distinguished writers on international law. I shall not quote from them at great length, but sufficiently for the Senate to know what their views are in relation to treaties, what constitutes a treaty, and how treaties are to be entered into and ratified.

First I quote from Woolsey's Introduction to the Study of International Law, and I read from section 101, "Of the right of contract and especially of treaties." He said:

SEC. 101. Of the right of contract and especially of treaties: A contract is one of the highest acts of human free will; it is the will binding itself in regard to the future, and surrendering its right to change a certain expressed intention, so that it becomes morally and jurally a wrong to act otherwise; it is the act of two parties in which each or one of the two conveys power over himself to the other in consideration of something done or to be done by the other. The binding force of contracts is to be deduced from the freedom and foresight of man, which would have almost no sphere in society or power of cooperation unless trust could be excited. Trust lies at the basis of society; society is essential for the development of the individual; the individual could not develop his free forethought, unless an acknowledged obligation made him sure in regard to the actions of others. That nations, as well as individuals, are bound by contract, will not be doubted when we remember that they have the same properties of free will and forecast; that they could have no safe intercourse otherwise, and could scarcely be sure of any settled relations toward one another except a state of war, and that thus a state of society, to which the different needs and aptitudes of the parts of the world invite men would be impossible. We have already seen, that without this power a positive law of nations could not exist, which needs for its establishment the consent of all who are bound by its provisions. National contracts are even more solemn and sacred than private ones, on account of the great interests involved of the deliberateness with which the obligations are assumed, of the permanence and generality of the obligations—measured by the national life, and including thousands of particular cases—and of each nation's calling, under God, to be a teacher of right to all within and without its borders.

Contracts can be made by states with individuals or bodies of individuals, or with other states. Contracts between states may be called "conventions" or "treaties." Among the species of treaties those which put an end to a war and introduce a new state of intercourse, or treaties of peace, will be considered here, only so far as they partake of the general character of treaties; their relations to war will be considered in the chapter devoted to that subject.

SEC. 102. Treaties allowed under the law of nations are unconstrained acts of independent powers, placing them under an obligation to do something which is not wrong, or—

"1. Treaties can be made only by the constituted authorities of nations, or by persons specially deputed by them for that purpose. An unauthorized agreement, or a sponsio, like that of the consul Postumius at the Caudine Forks, does not bind the sovereign, it is held, for the engager had no power to convey rights belonging to another. And yet it may be morally wrong in a high degree for the sovereign to violate such an engagement of a subordinate; for it might be an act of extreme necessity, to which the usual forms of governmental proceedings would not apply. Moreover the actions of military or naval commanders must be to a certain extent left without positive restrictions, and usage might be pleaded for many transactions of this nature. Again, from the nature of the case, a faction, a province, or an integral part of a close confederation has no treaty-making power, although a loose confederation, like the Germanic, might exist, while conceding such a prerogative to its members."

I quote now from Anson's Law of the Constitution, as follows:

This much appears to be certain: that where a treaty involves either a charge on the people or a change in the law of the land it may be made, but cannot be carried into effect, without the sanction of Parliament. Such treaties are therefore made subject to the approval of Parliament and are submitted for its approval before ratification, or ratified under condition.

Such are treaties of commerce which might require a change in the character or the amount of duties charged on exported or imported goods; or extradition treaties which confer on the executive a power to seize, take up, and hand over to a foreign state persons who have committed crime there and taken refuge here.

It will be observed that the writer in the article from which I have quoted refers to the necessity of parliamentary sanction before a treaty may be made effective. There has been very serious question in the minds of writers on international law whether that is really so, for example, under the form of government that obtains in England. Of course, we know that in our own country treaties can be made in no way other than that provided in our fundamental law; that is, they must be negotiated by the Chief Executive and must be ratified by two-thirds of the Senate. In England it has been held that the sovereign might of his own volition and without the concurrence of Parliament enter into treaties; but, of course, the conditions in this country are not as they are there.

It seems to me we have gone far afield in our definition, and I repeat we have come to the parting of the ways because the so-called "Executive agreements" are held, on the part of those who argue in favor of the bill, not to be treaties within the meaning of our Constitution and not required to be ratified by the Senate.

I desire to quote now from an article by Butler on The Treaty-Making Power of the United States. I read section 122, page 212, of volume 1 of that work, as follows:

A treaty negotiated by the Secretary of State of the United States and the British Ambassador relating to Canadian matters might be ratified by the Senate and by the foreign office in London; if it were unacceptable to the Canadian Parliament, the necessary legislation or appropriations to carry it into effect might not be passed; in that manner the final effect of an unsatisfactory treaty might be defeated; and, therefore, as a matter of practice and policy the treaty-making power is not now, as a general rule, exercised by the British Crown except through the agency of commissioners representing the colonies whose interests are to be affected; the final exchange of ratifications of negotiated treaties is also generally withheld until the parliaments of the colonies affected have expressed their approval. Notwithstanding this practice, however, the principle remains unaffected that the treaty is concluded by the highest sovereign power and not through the colonial government. The negotiating commissioners always hold their powers from the Crown, and not from any colonial authority; in fact, if negotiations in regard to a treaty affecting only colonial interests were commenced by any nation with persons claiming to represent any colony of Great Britain, the first step would be the examination of the powers of the plenipotentiaries, and only such commissions, or as they are called in diplomatic terms, "full powers", as emanated from the foreign office at London with the royal approval, and so certified by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Imperial Government, would be accepted as authority for the continuance of the negotiations.

Precisely that condition obtained in the efforts of the United States some years ago to effect reciprocal trade agreements with the Dominion of Canada.

The views of William Rawle, on the subject of treaties, were expressed by him away back in 1825. He says (par. 261, p. 396):

In its general sense we can be at no loss to understand the meaning of the word "treaty." It is a compact entered into with a foreign power, and it extends to all those matters which are generally the subjects of compact between independent nations. Such subjects are peace, alliance, commerce, neutrality, and others of a similar nature. To make treaties is an essential attribute of a nation. One which disabled itself from the power of making, and the capacity of observing and enforcing them when made, would exclude itself from the international equality which its own interests require it to preserve, and thus in many respects commit an injury on itself. In modern times and among civilized nations we have no instances of such absurdity. The power must, then, reside somewhere. Under the Articles of Confederation it was given with some restrictions, proceeding from the nature of that imperfect compact, to Congress, which then nominally exercised both the legislative and executive powers of general government. In our present Constitution no limitations were held necessary. The only question was where to deposit it. Now, this must be either in Congress generally, in the two Houses exclusive of the President, in the President conjunctly with them, or one of them, or in the President alone. * * *

SECTION 275, PAGE 414

Mr. Tucker's views as to limitations, however, are here quoted at length in regard to the effect of treaties upon the essential liberties of the people. In that respect he says:

"A treaty, therefore, cannot take away essential liberties secured by the Constitution to the people. A treaty cannot bind the United States to do what their Constitution forbids them to do. We may suggest a further limitation. A treaty cannot compel any department of the Government to do what the Constitution submits to its exclusive and absolute will. On these questions the true canon of construction, that the treaty-making power, in its seeming absoluteness and unconditional extent, is confronted with equally absolute and unconditional authority vested in the judiciary. Therefore, neither must be construed as absolute and unconditioned, but each must be construed and conditioned upon the equally clear power vested in the others. For example, Congress has power to lay and collect duties; the President and Senate have power to make and contract with a foreign nation in respect to such duties. Can any other construction be given to these two apparently contradictory powers than that the general power to make treaties must yield to the specific power of Congress to lay and collect all duties; and while the treaty may propose a contract as to duties on articles coming from a foreign nation, such an executory contract cannot be valid and binding unless Congress, which has supreme authority to lay and collect duties, consents to it. If it is then asked, how are you to reconcile these two powers which appear to be antagonistic, the answer is clear. Congress has no capacity to negotiate a treaty with a foreign power. The extent of its Membership makes this impracticable. The Constitution, therefore, left the House of Representatives out of all consideration in negotiating treaties. The executory contract between the United States and a foreign nation is therefore confided to the one man who can conduct the negotiations, and to a select body who can advise and consent to the treaty he has negotiated. But this executory contract must depend for its execution upon the supreme power vested in Congress 'to lay and collect duties.' It is therefore a contract not completed, but inchoate, and can only be completed and binding when Congress shall by legislation consent thereto, and lay duties in accordance with the executory contract or treaty. The same reasoning may apply to all of the great powers vested in Congress, such as to 'borrow money, regulate commerce, coin money, raise armies and provide a navy, make laws as to naturalization, bankruptcies, and exercise exclusive legislation' in the District of Columbia and Territories of the country. If these are sought by treaty to be regulated by the President and Senate, it can only be done when the Congress, vested with these great powers, shall give it unconditional consent."

Mr. Cyrus King, who at one time was a Member of the House of Representatives, said, in the course of a debate in that body on the subject of treaty-making (par. 301):

The result of my investigation on this subject is that whenever a treaty or convention does, by any of its provisions, encroach upon any of the enumerated powers vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, or any of the laws by them enacted in execution of those powers, such treaty or convention, after being ratified, must be laid before Congress, and such provisions cannot be carried into effect without an act of Congress. For instance, whenever a treaty affected duties on imposts, enlarging or diminishing them, as the present one did to diminish; whenever a treaty went to regulate commerce with foreign nations, as that expressly did with one, as the power to lay duties and the power to regulate commerce are expressly given to Congress, such provisions of such treaty must receive the sanction of Congress before they can be considered as obligatory and as part of the municipal law of this country. And this construction is strengthened by a part of the general power given to Congress, following the enumerated powers, "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof."

President Jackson in 1834 had under consideration the French Treaty of 1831. In a message to Congress he said, in effect, that a treaty involving commercial regulations had to be submitted to Congress in order to be carried into full execution.

I have quoted from these authors at some length in order that we may have clearly in mind the extent of the meaning of the word "treaty," and to show, as I think those authorities show, that any agreement with a foreign nation entered into by the Government of the United States, whether in relation to tariff duties or in relation to commercial transactions of any kind, is in all essentials a treaty within the meaning of international law, and is subject to ratification by the Senate.

Of course, there is a limitation of the powers of the Chief Executive in tariff laws heretofore enacted, including that enacted in 1930; and, as the authorities point out, the power conferred upon the Chief Executive in those laws is purely ministerial. In other words, the law fixes a limitation upon the power which the Executive may exercise. The law goes on to say, "If, under such and such conditions, the government of the country of A or of B or of C extends some liberal treatment to the nationals of our country, then to the same extent, but within the limits of the rates of duty fixed in the law, the Executive is hereby directed or empowered to grant to those nationals the same treatment that is granted to our nationals."

The bill now before us, however, is nothing of that kind. There is no limitation upon the action which may be taken by the Executive in pursuance of its provisions. We find on page 2, paragraph (1), that the President under this bill would be authorized—

To enter into foreign-trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof.

What is the meaning of that? There is no limitation there. He is not bound by any tariff duties that may be fixed by law. He may change the existing law as it affects the nationals of other countries. He may grant special privileges to tradesmen in other countries exporting their goods to the United States. It seems to me that is about as broad as the Congress could make a piece of legislation.

There is no limitation in that provision. It can be read separately, because it is not contingent upon any other part of the bill. It does provide that if the President finds as a fact that existing duties or restrictions imposed upon our country are disadvantageous, and so forth, then what can he do? He can enter into foreign-trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof. Does that mean that he is limited in the scope of the agreements into which he may enter? There is no limitation fixed in the bill. It seems to me that if there ever was a provision in law authorizing the Chief Executive to enter into treaties with foreign nations without getting the sanction of the Senate of the United States, this is a provision of that kind.

Mr. President, much has been made of agreements heretofore entered into in pursuance of tariff legislation enacted through the years. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in his argument this morning, referred to a very considerable number of instances to be found in the statement of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, when he appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives last March. But I wish to point out that in every one of the instances to which Mr. Sayre referred there was a limitation upon the extent to which the Chief Executive might go in entering into these so-called "Executive agreements."

I wish to refer to some of them, as I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in calling attention to all. They are available to Senators. They are printed in the report of the hearings.

Mr. Sayre referred to an incident where, in the case of a treaty with Great Britain, the President was to give effect to it after receiving satisfactory evidence of certain facts. He goes on to say in his memorandum:

By an act of Congress approved August 5, 1854, to carry into effect the treaty aforesaid, the President was given power after he "shall receive satisfactory evidence that the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain", etc., had passed laws on their part, to give full effect to the provisions of the treaty.

That did not confer upon the Chief Executive the power to make a treaty with Great Britain. It merely fixed the limitations within which the President might act upon the happening of a given contingency. The measure of the power is fixed by the legislative authority in that instance. In other words, when the President should receive satisfactory evidence that certain things had taken place, then and in that event he should declare the treaty to be in effect a purely ministerial duty, as I view it, carrying out the will of Congress.

Congress had expressed itself upon the question. It had consented to a treaty with Great Britain, but it said that before the treaty should become effective it must be shown to the satisfaction of the Chief Executive that certain treatment was accorded to the people of the United States, and thereupon, when that fact was established, the President might declare the treaty to be in full force and effect.

Again, Mr. Sayre referred to the McKinley Act of 1890:

McKinley Rates Applicable When President Ascertained That There Was a Failure Reciprocally To Grant Free Introduction of Articles.

That is the heading. He says:

The Tariff Act of 1890, "to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports", made provision for the imposition of penalty duties upon imports from countries discriminating in their tariff treatment against goods from the United States. This was apparently the first act under which the President entered upon a comprehensive program of tariff bargaining by Executive agreements.

Section 3 of this act provided that, with a view to securing reciprocal trade with countries producing certain specified articles (sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides), the President, when he was satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting these articles, or any of them, imposed duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States which, in view of the free introduction of such articles into the United States he might regard as reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, should have the power to suspend by proclamation the provisions of the act relating to the free introduction of the above-mentioned articles.

No power was conferred by Congress upon the Chief Executive to enter into a trade agreement with any foreign nation in that bill. It provided that when the President had ascertained the existence of a given fact, then he should apply a certain formula set forth clearly and definitely and distinctly in the enactment of Congress.

I call attention to the difference between the provision in the McKinley Act, to which I have just referred, and the provisions contained in paragraph 1, on page 2, of the bill under discussion. There is no limitation in the bill now before us. There is no yardstick with which to measure the extent to which the President may go in formulating so-called "Executive agreements." It provides, the President is authorized—

To enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof.

That is unlike the provision in the McKinley Act, which sets forth clearly what might be done under a given state of circumstances; namely, Congress says in effect, "We shall collect duties of so much on certain articles, but because of the imposition of higher duties upon those articles exported from this country, the same rate of duty shall apply to articles coming from those countries to us until such time as equal treatment shall be accorded to our people."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, does the Senator take the position that when once a treaty has been entered into for a period of 3 years it can be terminated within that period of 3 years? There seems to be some difference of opinion in the Senate with respect to that question. The able Senator from Mississippi, in his opening statement, took the position that it could be terminated within the period of 3 years provided 6 months' notice was given.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I do not so read the provision in the bill in relation to termination of treaties. The Senator has reference, I assume, to paragraph (b) on page 5 of the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. HEBERT. It reads:

Every foreign-trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date on which the agreement comes into force—

Up to that point it is my opinion that an agreement of this nature could not be terminated within the period of 3 years, if it were made for that length of time, and then only upon notice could it be terminated. I quote the remainder of the paragraph:

and, if not then terminated—

That is, if not terminated at the end of 3 years—shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

Mr. HATFIELD. I think the Senator will agree with me that the able Senator from Mississippi took the position that a 6 months' notice would terminate the treaty agreement within the 3-year period.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the construction just contended for is not the accurate one no matter by whom contended. As I read the provision just referred to, it would seem that the agreement might be terminated at any time, according to its terms, within 3 years. If at the end of the 3 years it were to continue longer, then the 6 months' notice would be required. But it is subject to termination by the terms of the agreement at any time, within a week or a month.

Mr. HATFIELD. Within the 3 years.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. If the treaty provided by its terms that it should continue for 1 year, of course, it would terminate in that time. But if there were no provision for its termination, then it would continue for 3 years from its date, as I read the wording of the statute.

Mr. KING. Probably that is correct. But it depends upon the terms of the treaty itself.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course that would be controlling, I believe.

I come now to a reference to the 1890 Tariff Act in the memorandum submitted by the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Is the Senator about to deal with the present law touching the same subject?

Mr. HEBERT. I am.

Mr. FESS. I thought there was a retaliatory feature written into the law, which evidently is being misused as a justification for what is now proposed. I thought the Senator would deal with that subject, because it has been referred to heretofore. We have already authorized retaliatory action.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I do not know that I understand very clearly what the Senator has in mind. I have not considered the retaliatory feature of the 1930 Tariff Act, if there is such a provision in it.

Mr. FESS. I am referring to section 338, wherein the act says:

> The President, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, shall by proclamation specify and declare new or additional duties as hereinafter provided upon articles wholly or in part the growth or product of, or imported in a vessel of, any foreign country whenever he shall find as a fact that such country—

Is doing certain things; but that would be in pursuance of what is thereinafter written.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, that is in line with what I have tried to bring to the attention of the Senate in my discussion of the agreements that have been entered into in pursuance of all these laws, and references made to them by the Assistant Secretary of State, that in no instance has any broad power or treaty-making power been conferred upon or been intended to be conferred upon the Chief Executive. The legislative branch of the Government in every instance has placed limitations upon what the Chief Executive may do. It has said to him, in effect, "When you find certain conditions to exist, here is your line of conduct. You may go to this extent, but you may not go beyond it." All sorts of limitations have been placed upon the Chief Executive in what he may do in making these agreements, but in no case has unlimited power been conferred upon the Chief Executive in making the agreements.

Mr. FESS. Precisely. The law says, "You may go to this extent, but only in pursuance of the authority given and the limitations prescribed."

Mr. HEBERT. The Congress simply says, "The authority to legislate is ours, and not that of the Chief Executive. We will fix the rules of conduct, and you must abide by them, because it is your duty to execute them."

Mr. Sayre goes on to say, in relation to the reciprocity agreement for the free introduction of articles named in the 1890 act:

> Following the passage of the act, Secretary Blaine began the negotiation of a series of agreements, and between January 31, 1891, and May 26, 1892, 10 reciprocity agreements were concluded, all but 2 of which were with countries of the Western Hemisphere. In each of the agreements the United States undertook to admit free of duty, when coming from the other country, the five articles—sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides—enumerated in the penalizing provision of the act. In the majority of these agreements the other contracting parties undertook to admit free or at substantially reduced tariff rates the bulk of its imports from the United States. The penalty duties were imposed on Colombia, Venezuela, and Haiti after they had failed to respond to requests of this Government to negotiate agreements.

Again, there were penalties fixed by the act of 1890; and in pursuance of the authority conferred by Congress on the Chief Executive, 10 reciprocity agreements were entered into. They were mere understandings fixed upon the conditions set out in the tariff bill itself. In other words, again in this instance Congress said, "We will fix certain penalties upon the importations from certain countries; but when the Chief Executive finds that those countries are not imposing obligations upon us in the case of our exportations to them, he may enter into agreements absolving them from the penalties fixed in the law." It is always "fixed in the law."

Then Mr. Sayre refers to the case of Field against Clark, which has been discussed here at very considerable length, and says:

> The constitutionality of this provision of the tariff act was attacked in the case of Field v. Clark (1892) (143 U.S. 649, 681) on the ground that, in authorizing the President to suspend the free importation of certain products, the Congress had delegated to him both legislative and treaty-making powers. The claimants, therefore, sought to obtain the refund of certain duties claimed to have been illegally exacted on imported merchandise under this act.

Of course the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff in that case was not entitled to recover. No treaty-making power was intended to be conferred upon the Chief Executive by the act of 1890, and none was conferred. The Chief Executive merely carried out the mandate of the legislative branch of the Government in fixing certain penalties upon importations to this country under conditions fixed in the law itself.

As the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] very aptly remarked, the Chief Executive in this case merely acts as a legislative agent to carry out the will of Congress in execution of the law enacted by Congress. He has no power to go beyond the limit fixed in the legislation enacted by the Congress.

The court very aptly said in Field v. Clark (143 U.S. 649):

> That Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution.

Of course, that is the utterance of a truism under our form of government. It could not be otherwise. Yet as I read the provisions of the bill now under consideration, I am forced to the conclusion that if we shall pass the bill we will confer upon the Chief Executive the power to enter into treaty agreements with foreign nations. Paragraph 1, page 2 of the bill, provides:

> To enter into foreign-trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof.

Under what conditions? None are fixed. Subject to what limitations? There are no limitations stated. How much shall we concede to foreign nations of those provisions of our laws now in force in the making of such agreements? No yardstick is furnished by which it can be measured. How far may the President go in making trade agreements and binding our country to them? No one can tell. No one has attempted to tell the Senate up to the present time to what extent the President could go under the provisions of the bill. If he can go beyond the provisions of existing law, in other words, if Congress is attempting to confer upon the Chief Executive the power to enter into treaty agreements with foreign nations, then manifestly the bill is unconstitutional, because it violates the provisions regarding the making of treaties. It must be conceded on all hands that the Senate may not delegate the treaty-making power to the Chief Executive any more than it can delegate any other of its legislative powers to the Chief Executive.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FESS. On page 2 of the bill, where the authority is given to the President, this language is used:

The President, whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States—

And so forth; and then follows what he may do. Is that language broad enough that within the limits of 50 percent the President could eliminate the duties upon all the goods which are now upon the dutiable list?

Mr. HEBERT. Not only could he do that, Mr. President, but he could also enter into foreign-trade agreements of any kind within the limits of 50 percent of such duties and, in addition to that, any agreements that would remove the burdensome restrictions upon the foreign trade of the United States. I confess I do not know what is intended by the language. It is so broad that almost anything could be done under it. Bear in mind that paragraph 1 does not apply alone to a reduction of 50 percent in duties, but it relates back to the premise from which it proceeds, namely—

The President, whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly burdening or restricting.

That goes for our entire trade with other countries. It seems to me that it is so broad that it amounts to a treaty-making power, which we may not delegate to the Chief Executive.

Mr. FESS. Assuming we did have constitutional authority to do it—which I do not assume—but for argument's sake assuming there is such authority, suppose the person in charge of carrying out the provisions of the bill should be one who does not believe at all in the principle of protection and wants to limit all duties to revenue purposes, could he not entirely eliminate the protective system on all the articles on the dutiable list, if he thought they were interfering with our foreign trade?

Mr. HEBERT. It seems to me he would have ample power to do so. He could go farther and remove all restrictions, all embargoes, all countervailing duties, all those provisions now in existing tariff laws set up for the protection of American industry, American commerce, and American agriculture. There is no limit to which he might not go under this provision, as I read it.

Mr. FESS. I think that is true, and I do not believe there is a Senator on either side of the aisle who would dispute that that power is written into the bill.

Mr. HEBERT. It seems to me that it is so plain that it cannot be gainsaid.

Mr. President, I should like, if time permitted and if it could be done without taxing the patience of Senators, to discuss all the instances to which Mr. Sayre referred in his memorandum submitted to the Ways and Means Committee on the occasion of his appearance before that body.

He refers to the Dingley Act of 1897 and the fact that in pursuance of the provisions of that law certain trade agreements were entered into, but again with all the limitations contained in it.

Again, he refers to the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909. That act provided maximum and minimum duties. I think it was one of the few instances where Congress provided for both maximum and minimum duties.

Under the provisions of the act the Chief Executive was authorized to apply either the maximum or the minimum duties upon certain contingencies very definitely set out in the act. Again, that is not the treaty-making power. All the President was authorized to do was to ascertain the facts and, once the facts had been ascertained, to proceed to apply the provisions of law as enacted by Congress—a purely ministerial act. The only requirement on the President was to ascertain the existence of certain facts; and once the President had ascertained the existence of those facts, he was to apply the provisions of the law as previously set out and clearly defined by Congress.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is making a very impressive argument on the legal and constitutional phase of the matter. I am sure he does not overlook the fact, however, that all these treaties and all these agreements, without a single exception, after trial were repealed. In other words, even if we should assume that the policy originally tried out, with its limitations, was within the Constitution, as I fear this proposal is not, yet all the reciprocal arrangements were discontinued. Every treaty on the reciprocal plan that we have had with any country has been tried, found wanting, and repealed.

Mr. HEBERT. I come now to the observations of Mr. Sayre in relation to the Fordney-McCumber Act:

Section 315 of the 1922 Tariff Act, which, together with other sections, contains the so-called "flexible provisions" of the act—

I am not certain that that was the first tariff act which contained a flexible provision, but I think it was—provided for the lowering or raising of the duty by proclamations of the President—

By proclamations of the President—to equalize the cost of production of articles in the United States and the like or similar articles of competing foreign countries.

What did Congress do in relation to authorizing the President, by proclamation, to equalize the cost of production here and abroad?

These proclamations were to be issued after investigation by the Tariff Commission to ascertain the facts necessary to enable the President to determine whether increases or decreases in the rates of duty should be made. The section provided that the total increase or decrease should not exceed 50 percent of the rates specified in title I of the act.

Section 316 gave the President power, whenever the existence of methods of unfair competition and unfair acts in the importation of articles into the United States or in their sale therein should tend to destroy or substantially injure an industry, or to prevent the establishment of such an industry, or to restrain and monopolize trade and commerce in the United States, had been established to his satisfaction, to cause additional import duties to be imposed, or, in extreme cases, to cause such articles to be excluded from the United States.

There was no delegation of treaty-making power in that act. Congress merely said to the President, in effect, "Here is a pattern which you are to follow. Upon the happening of certain contingencies you are to impose this duty and that duty, and this obligation and that obligation, and this restriction and that restriction upon importations from abroad. You cannot go beyond those limitations which we have fixed in the law, but you are directed by proclamation to put those rates into effect." Again, that clearly is not the treaty-making power.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. I desire to bring to the Senator's attention a suggestion which was made to me by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], that even in that case there was not one kind of agreement with one country and a different kind of agreement with another country, but the agreements were uniform with all countries. Not only that, but whatever flexibility was to be exercised had to be exercised upon a rule of action laid down by Congress, making up the difference between the cost of production in another country and in ours.

Mr. HEBERT. That was absolutely so, and necessarily so, because of the universality of the legislation and of its effects. Congress did not single out any one country to which the President might apply the provisions of the law. It said, "In every instance where different treatment is accorded by a country to our people than we accord to the people of that country, such provisions shall be applied to them."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I hope what I am about to say will not be taken out of his time.

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to see if we cannot enter into a unanimous-consent agreement which I am about to propose. If there seems to be no objection to the proposal I shall then necessarily have to call for a quorum under the rule.

I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock a.m. tomorrow; that not later than 12 o'clock meridian on tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote without further debate upon the pending amendment or any other agricultural amendment that may be proposed, and that thereafter no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 5 minutes upon the pending bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered thereto; and that on tomorrow, not later than 4 o'clock p.m., the Senate proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending or any amendment or motion that may be offered and upon the passage of the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to have the privilege of expressing my view before a quorum is called.

For obvious reasons I cannot consent to have the vote occur tomorrow or that we shall hold a session tomorrow. We have been in session from early morning until late in the afternoon during the week, and there is a great accumulation of work in the offices of the various Senators. I shall consent to the proposal with the modification that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island we shall recess until 10 o'clock a.m. Monday; that at 12 o'clock we shall proceed to vote on the pending amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; that thereafter debate on amendments shall be limited to 5 minutes; and that not later than 5 o'clock on Monday we shall vote upon the pending amendments and the bill without further debate.

On that proposal I think I can speak for those on this side of the aisle.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, may I ask whether the limitation of debate to 5 minutes on Monday applies to amendments of which notice has been given and which are now on the table?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it would apply to all amendments pending, or which may be offered in the meantime, of course.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I had given notice of a proposed amendment to the bill, and I had expected to discuss it for a very reasonable length of time. I have no such consuming desire, however, to talk to the Senate as to lead me to interpose any objection to the proposal. I do feel that the 5-minute limitation is a little severe, though personally I shall not interpose objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I suggest that as to at least one amendment, in various forms presented by different Members of the Senate, relating to the return to the Congress and the approval by the Congress of the particular agreements which might be made, there should be a 10-minute limitation. I would not ask any more than that, but a 5-minute limitation on an amendment of that character, which to me is quite as important as the amendment we are now considering, if not more important, is rather severe.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to fix a time for a vote on the bill at 5 o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. My viewpoint is this: If we cannot get through with the amendments by 5 o'clock, that is just too bad, and those of us who have amendments which are not presented will have to take the consequences.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Oregon a question, of course the way the unanimous-consent request is submitted, it carries out the agreement already entered into, that when we shall have voted on the so-called "Johnson amendment", we will immediately begin to vote on the other agricultural amendments. The way the Senator stated the proposal we would not do that; Senators could have 5 minutes on the other amendments. Was that the intention of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. I thought I made myself quite definite. My intention, at least, was to suggest that at the conclusion of the debate and the vote upon the Johnson amendment the limitation of 5 minutes should apply to any other amendment offered, and that at 5 o'clock we should proceed to vote upon all the amendments and on the bill to its final passage.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had very much hoped we could conclude this matter tomorrow, and that is why I presented the request for unanimous consent, but the proposal offered by the Senator from Oregon would assure us a vote beginning at 5 o'clock on Monday, and I am willing to modify my request to that extent.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have an amendment lying on the table which I very much desire to take up at the proper time. It is important, I consider, to the industries of my State, and I question whether I can say very much about it in 5 minutes. Yet, under the proposed agreement I would be limited to that length of time to give the Senate the reasons why I think the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator had already been discussing his amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. I have not, Mr. President; I have been discussing the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Could the Senator discuss the amendment in 10 minutes?

Mr. HEBERT. I will agree to do it in 10 minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, since it would not extend the length of time for debate, I would be willing to modify the request so that the limitation on debate would be 10 minutes instead of 5.

Mr. HARRISON. I am willing to modify my proposal so as to make the limitation not more than 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Provided the vote comes at 5 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I do not modify my request in that regard. It would mean a Senator would have 10 minutes on each amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I adhere to the proposition originally submitted, that the vote shall commence at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it the understanding now that if the unanimous-consent proposal shall go into effect we will meet at 10 o'clock on Monday and that the voting will not begin until 12?

Mr. HARRISON. The voting on the so-called "Johnson amendment" will begin at 12 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON. And thereafter we will have 10 minutes on each amendment, but with the distinct understanding that at 5 o'clock we shall begin voting and close the transaction.

Mr. HARRISON. I have modified my request accordingly. Now I ask that the clerk read the modified request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, while the clerk is getting the request in shape, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator a question. It is my understanding that in the proposal made by the Senator that we proceed to vote at 5 o'clock he does not exclude the offering of amendments after that time, though they may not be debated?

Mr. HARRISON. All amendments ought to be offered, and if they are pending at 5 o'clock they will be voted on.

Mr. HEBERT. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Black	Capper	Couzens
Ashurst	Bone	Caraway	Davis
Austin	Borah	Carey	Dickinson
Bachman	Brown	Clark	Dieterich
Bailey	Bulkley	Connally	Dill
Bankhead	Bulow	Coolidge	Duffy
Barbour	Byrd	Copeland	Erickson
Barkley	Byrnes	Costigan	Fess

Fletcher	Kean	Norbeck	Steiwer
Frazier	Keyes	Norris	Stephens
George	King	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Gibson	La Follette	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Utah
Glass	Lewis	Overton	Thompson
Goldsborough	Logan	Patterson	Townsend
Gore	Lonergan	Pittman	Tydings
Hale	Long	Pope	Vandenberg
Harrison	McCarran	Reynolds	Van Nuys
Hastings	McGill	Robinson, Ark.	Wagner
Hatch	McKellar	Russell	Walcott
Hatfield	McNary	Schall	Walsh
Hayden	Metcalf	Sheppard	Wheeler
Hebert	Murphy	Shipstead	White
Johnson	Neely	Smith

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the request for unanimous consent has now been reduced to writing, and I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed agreement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock a.m. Monday and that not later than 12 o'clock m. on Monday next the Senate proceed to vote without further debate upon the pending amendment or any other agricultural amendment that may be proposed, and that thereafter no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the pending bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered thereto, and that on Monday at not later than 5 o'clock p.m. the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending or any amendment or motion that may be offered and upon the passage of the bill itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, does that mean that a Senator may have a total of 20 minutes?

Mr. HARRISON. It means 10 minutes on any amendment, after 12 o'clock.

Mr. DILL. And 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if we could fix the hour for limiting the debate at 1 o'clock. I myself may make a few remarks. I do not desire to exclude anyone else.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that between 10 and 12 o'clock the Senator should be able to find time to make his remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GORE. I shall seek recognition when we meet on Monday. I give notice to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hope to recognize the Senator from Oklahoma.

Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I had intended to refer to a very considerable number of instances adverted to by the Assistant Secretary of State in the statement which he filed with the Committee on Ways and Means, but I shall not detain the Senate unduly at this late hour; so I pass to some observations on the provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930. I shall not take time to read that in its entirety, Mr. President, though I shall ask to have the entire section appear in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 336. Equalization of costs of production: (a) Change of classification or duties: In order to put into force and effect the policy of Congress by this act intended, the Commission (1) upon request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon its own motion, or (4) when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article. In the course of the investigation the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. The Commission shall report to the President the results of the investigation and its findings with respect to such differences in costs of production. If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duties expressly fixed by statute do not equalize the differences in the costs of production of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article when produced in the principal competing country, the Commission shall specify in its report such increases or decreases in rates of duty expressly fixed by statute (including any necessary change in classification) as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute.

(b) Change to American selling price: If the Commission finds upon any such investigation that such differences cannot be equalized by proceeding as hereinbefore provided, it shall so state in its report to the President and shall specify therein such ad valorem rates of duty based upon the American selling price (as defined in section 402 (g)) of the domestic article, as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute, and no such rate shall be increased.

(c) Proclamation by the President: The President shall by proclamation approve the rates of duty and changes in classification and in basis of value specified in any report of the Commission under this section, if in his judgment such rates of duty and changes are shown by such investigation of the Commission to be necessary to equalize such differences in costs of production.

(d) Effective date of rates and changes: Commencing 30 days after the date of any Presidential proclamation of approval, the increased or decreased rates of duty and changes in classification or in basis of value specified in the report of the Commission shall take effect.

(e) Ascertainment of differences in costs of production: In ascertaining under this section the differences in cost of production, the Commission shall take into consideration, insofar as it finds it practicable:

(1) In the case of a domestic article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined; (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; and (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition.

(2) In the case of a foreign article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined, or, if the Commission finds that such cost is not readily ascertainable, the Commission may accept as evidence thereof, or as supplemental thereto, the weighted average of the invoice prices or values for a representative period and/or the average wholesale selling price for a representative period (which price shall be that at which the article is freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal market or markets of the principal competing country or countries in the ordinary course of trade and in the usual wholesale quantities in such market or markets); (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition, including advantages granted to the foreign producers by a government, person, partnership, corporation, or association in a foreign country.

(f) Modification of changes in duty: Any increased or decreased rate of duty or change in classification or in basis of value which has taken effect as above provided may be modified or terminated in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations (including time of taking effect) as is provided in this section in the case of original increases, decreases, or changes.

(g) Prohibition against transfers from the free list to the dutiable list or from the dutiable list to the free list: Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize a transfer of an article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, nor a change in form of duty. Whenever it is provided in any paragraph of title I of this act, or in any amendatory act, that the duty or duties shall not exceed a specified ad valorem rate upon the articles provided for in such paragraph, no rate determined under the provisions of this section upon such articles shall exceed the maximum ad valorem rate so specified.

(h) Definitions: For the purpose of this section—

(1) The term "domestic article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States; and the term "foreign article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of a foreign country.

(2) The term "United States" includes the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia.

(3) The term "foreign country" means any empire, country, dominion, colony, or protectorate, or any subdivision or subdivisions thereof (other than the United States and its possessions).

(4) The term "cost of production", when applied with respect to either a domestic article or a foreign article, includes for a period which is representative of conditions in production of the article: (A) The price or cost of materials, labor costs, and other direct charges incurred in the production of the article and in the processes or methods employed in its production; (B) the usual general expenses, including charges for depreciation or depletion which are representative of the equipment and property employed in the production of the article and charges for rent or interest which are representative of the cost of obtaining capital or instruments of production; and (C) the cost of containers and coverings of whatever nature, and other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the article in condition packed ready for delivery.

(i) Rules and regulations of President: The President is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for carrying out his functions under the provisions of this section.

(j) Rules and regulations of Secretary of Treasury: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the entry and declaration of foreign articles of the class or kind of articles with respect to which a change in basis of value has been made under the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section, and for the form of invoice required at time of entry.

(k) Investigations prior to enactment of act: All uncompleted investigations instituted prior to the approval of this act under the provisions of section 315 of the Tariff Act of 1922, including investigations in which the President has not proclaimed changes in classification or in basis of value or increases or decreases in rates of duty, shall be dismissed without prejudice; but the information and evidence secured by the Commission in any such investigation may be given due consideration in any investigation instituted under the provisions of this section.

Mr. HEBERT. Section 336 is entitled "Equalization of Costs of Production." It provides:

In order to put into force and effect the policy of Congress by this act intended, the Commission—

That is, the Tariff Commission—

(1) Upon request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon its own motion, or (4) when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences in the cost of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article.

They have to report to the President, and the President has the authority conferred by the provisions of this section to increase or decrease to the extent of 50 percent the tariff provided in this act.

The provisions of section 336, as the Senators will observe if they will take the time to study them, are sufficiently broad to encompass all that the Chief Executive might wish to do in aid of our foreign commerce. They were intentionally made so by Congress at the time it enacted this law.

My only conclusion, as I have read section 336 and compared it with the bill now under consideration, is that the Chief Executive must be seeking legislative powers. If that were not so, he could find all necessary power to carry into effect these trade agreements under the provisions of section 336. He has full power to modify existing tariffs to the extent of 50 percent; so why the need of this legislation, unless he wants legislative power?

If, as I believe, the pending bill attempts to confer legislative power upon the Chief Executive, I return to my original proposal that the bill is without the Constitution, because Congress may not delegate to the Chief Executive the treaty-making power, or the power to legislate. I cannot reach any other conclusion, Mr. President, because of the breadth of the provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, under which we have operated now for 3 years. We have made certain changes when the need appears to have existed. There is no constraint upon the Chief Executive to make changes within the limit of 50 percent. It seems to me that unless the Chief Executive were seeking to have conferred upon him some of the legislative powers existing in the Congress, there would be no need for this legislation.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1932. An act for the relief of Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe by removing cloud on title;

S. 2623. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended;

S. 3290. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932;

H.R. 2032. An act for the relief of Richard A. Chavis;

H.R. 3985. An act for the relief of Charles T. Moll; and

H.R. 9061. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

COOPERATION OF STATES IN PREVENTION OF CRIME

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of House bill 7353, granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It merely authorizes the States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and in the enforcement of criminal law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and in the enforcement of their respective criminal laws and policies, and to establish such agencies, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements and compacts.

APPREHENSION OF CRIMINALS

Mr. LOGAN. I also ask the present consideration of House bill (9370), to authorize an appropriation of money to facilitate the apprehension of certain persons charged with crime.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "for the", to strike out "capture, dead or alive" and insert "capture"; in line 8, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "who is designated by the Attorney General of the United States as a public enemy"; on page 2, line 4, after the word "person", to strike out "who has been designated by the Attorney General of the United States as a public enemy"; and at the end of the bill to strike out "Provided further, That no person shall be designated as a public enemy within the purview of this act who has not theretofore been convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of a felony involving violence", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a reward or rewards for the capture of anyone who is charged with violation of criminal laws of the United States or any State or of the District of Columbia, the sum of $25,000, to be apportioned and expended in the discretion of, and upon such conditions as may be imposed by, the Attorney General of the United States. That there is also hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a reward or rewards for information leading to the arrest of any such person, the sum of $25,000 to be apportioned and expended in the discretion of, and upon such conditions as may be imposed by, the Attorney General of the United States: Provided, That not more than $25,000 shall be expended for information or capture of any one person.

If the said persons or any of them shall be killed in resisting lawful arrests, the Attorney General may pay any part of the reward or rewards in his discretion to the person or persons whom he shall adjudge to be entitled thereto: Provided, That no part of the money authorized to be appropriated by this act shall be paid to any official or employee of the Department of Justice of the United States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, was there any division in the committee regarding this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. The committee amended the bill, which authorizes an appropriation of $25,000, and allows the Attorney General to determine a sum not exceeding $25,000 to be offered for the apprehension of a criminal. That is all it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF SO-CALLED "BOOK TRUST"

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 243.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.Res. 243) appointing a special committee to investigate certain charges against text-book concerns in connection with the obtaining of contracts for the sale of school books, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, on page 2, line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$20,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Whereas it has been openly published and charged for a period of years that the American Book Co. and other textbook concerns, commonly known as the "Book Trust", all dealing in textbooks and school books, throughout the country have been engaged in unlawful practices in obtaining of contracts for furnishing school books through State legislation, and from public officials in States, and that, in the obtention of these contracts to furnish textbooks, it is charged that they have used large sums of money for entertainment and use of various officials; and

Whereas it was published in the newspapers on Saturday, May 5, 1934, that, in a secret N.R.A. code hearing held in Washington, D.C., in April 1934, it was disclosed that $500,000 had been paid out by the textbook manufacturers for meals and other gratuities to public officials having to do with the purchase of school textbooks for the children and the youth of our country; and

Whereas these books are sold in interstate commerce: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee of 5 Members of the Senate, not more than 3 Members of any one political party, which committee is authorized and directed, during the session of the Senate and during the recess of the Congress, to examine into such charges made concerning the book manufacturers selling books in interstate commerce and report its findings to the next Congress.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the purpose of the investigation?

Mr. CLARK. The school-book monopoly, as the Senator well knows, has for many years been the most vicious monopoly in the United States. It has been brought out in recent N.R.A. hearings that the various school-textbook companies have spent as much as $500,000 in gratuities to public officials. The purpose of the investigation is to break up the practice, if possible.

Mr. McNARY. Is this a special committee to be appointed by the Vice President?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What is the emergency that calls up the resolution at this late hour, just as we are about to recess?

Mr. CLARK. There is no emergency. The resolution has been considered by the Committee on Education and Labor and again by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, but we have a calendar. I have always thought it bad practice to take any order of business off the calendar unless there is some emergency.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator desires to object he has undoubtedly the right to do so.

Mr. McNARY. I think I shall object under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2714) to amend section 895 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after "necessary" down to and including "both", in line 10.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill was sent to the House of Representatives by the Senate, and the House passed the bill with an unimportant amendment. The committee yesterday agreed to accept the amendment, and I now move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ALLEY DWELLINGS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1780) to provide for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in alleys in the District of Columbia, and for the replatting and development of squares containing inhabited alleys, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, safety, and welfare, and for other purposes, which was, on pages 5 and 6, to strike out all of section 3 and to insert:

SEC. 3. (a) The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to make immediately available to the authority for its lawful uses and as needed, from the allocation made from the appropriation to carry out the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act, contained in the Fourth Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1933, now carried under the title "National Industrial Recovery, Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, Housing, 1933-35", symbol 03/5666, not to exceed $500,000 of any amount thereof dedicated for low-cost housing and slum-clearance projects in the District of Columbia, to be set aside in the Treasury and be known as "Conversion of inhabited alleys fund" (hereinafter referred to as the "fund").

(b) The authority is hereby authorized and empowered to borrow such moneys from individuals or private corporations as may be secured by the property and assets acquired under the provisions of this act, and such moneys, together with all receipts from sales, leases, or other sources shall be deposited in the fund and shall be available for the purposes of this act.

(c) The fund shall remain available until June 30, 1935, and thereafter shall be available annually in such amount as may be specified in the annual appropriation acts.

(d) The total amount paid for property or properties acquired in any square shall not exceed 30 percent over and above the present assessed value of all the property or properties acquired in any square to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill passed the Senate several days ago, went to the House, and passed the House with an amendment, to which the Senate committee agreed yesterday, and as to which I was instructed to move concurrence by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the House of Representatives is concurred in.

ALFRED HOHENLOHE AND OTHERS

Mr. KING. I move to postpone indefinitely the consideration of House bill 6099, for the relief of Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe by removing cloud on title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

ERECTION OF FIRE ESCAPES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING. I move to postpone indefinitely the consideration of House bill 7208, to amend an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906 (34 Stat. 70), as amended by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1247).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BOARD OF INDETERMINATE SENTENCE AND PAROLE FOR THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. I move to postpone indefinitely the consideration of House bill 8987, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

USE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IN CANAL ZONE

Mr. GORE. From the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I report back favorably Senate bill 3696, authorizing the President to make rules and regulations in respect to alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes; and I submit a report (No. 1229) thereon.

This bill ought to pass before the adjournment of Congress and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations in respect to the sale and manufacture of alcoholic beverages within, and the importation thereof into and exportation thereof from, the Canal Zone, including the authority to prescribe licenses and fees for the sale and manufacture of such beverages.

SEC. 2. Any person violating any provision of such rules and regulations shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisoned in jail for not more than 6 months, or by both, and in addition the license of such person may be revoked or suspended, as the President may by such rules and regulations prescribe.

SEC. 3. All laws, rules, regulations, and orders in force prior to the date this act takes effect, insofar as they apply to the sale, manufacture, possession, transportation, importation, and exportation of alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, are repealed.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

ENOCH E. LUNQUIST—WITHDRAWAL OF NOMINATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I withdraw the nomination sent to the Senate on May 23, 1934, of Enoch E. Lunquist to be postmaster at Sheffield, in the State of Pennsylvania.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., June 1, 1934.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Regular Army and of several general officers in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Thomas C. Kasper, of Aberdeen, S.Dak., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of South Dakota, in place of Leslie Jensen.

Mr. LONERGAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported adversely the nomination of Edward G. Dolan, of Connecticut, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Connecticut, in place of Robert O. Eaton, resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably, without reservation, Executive I, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at Mexico City on April 24, 1934, providing for the en bloc settlement of the claims presented by the Government of the United States to the commission established by the special claims convention concluded September 10, 1923, instead of by international adjudication in each case as provided in that convention, and submitted a report (Exec. Rept. No. 5) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

EDWARD G. DOLAN

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, there has just been reported adversely from the Committee on Finance the nomination of Edward G. Dolan, of Connecticut, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination. It is an adverse report, made unanimously by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this an effort upon the part of the able Senator from Connecticut to adopt an unfavorable report made by the committee?

Mr. LONERGAN. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report of the committee is unanimous?

Mr. LONERGAN. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be reported.

The Legislative Clerk read the nomination of Edward G. Dolan, of Connecticut, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Connecticut.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

Mr. LONERGAN. I ask the Senate to reject the nomination.

The nomination was rejected.

THE CALENDAR—POSTMASTERS

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock a.m. Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, took a recess until Monday, June 4, 1934, at 10 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 1, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed God, our Father, we thank Thee that by our yearnings and longings and manifold needs we wait at the altar of prayer with grateful hearts. Thou merciful One, by Thy wise guidance, make it easier for us to be good, virtuous, true, and generous. Life, with its unmatched conditions and circumstances, is filled with perplexities, whose history lies within the soul, never to be read until they are read in the Book of God. When success is turned into misfortune, our Father, may it not embitter us. Having done all, help us to stand. In the school of experience enable us to be patient, believe in Thee, and be trustful to the end. Gracious Lord, let Thy grace ripen all of us to peace, hope, and joy, and that with outward liberty there may come the more abundant liberty of the soul. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, before the reading of the Journal, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 161]

Abernethy	Connolly	Kniffin	Shannon
Allgood	Corning	Kvale	Shoemaker

Claiborne	Jenkins, Ohio	Rogers, Okla.	Zioncheck
Clark, N.C.	Kennedy, N.Y.	Sadowski

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-five have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 29, 1934:

H.R. 6803. An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 9068. An act to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant, to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

On May 30, 1934:

H.R. 2837. An act to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 8617. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4460. An act to provide for the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3533. An act to amend the act entitled "An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its powers and purposes", approved February 25, 1929, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H.Con.Res. 40. Concurrent resolution authorizing and directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make certain corrections in the enrolling of the bill H.R. 5884, "An act to amend and act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto."

The message also announceed that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) entitled "An act to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 253

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE F. BRUMM, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now take a recess until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. FESS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Smithsonian Institution.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the complete Journal as provided under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the complete Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that is always done and it is not necessary for the gentleman to make such a demand.

Mr. SNELL. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, it is not always done, and I demand the reading of the complete Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard the gentleman's demand, and the Clerk will read the complete Journal.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

During the reading of the Journal the following occurred:

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk did not read the next motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is now reading the next motion appearing on the Journal.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the names of those who failed to answer be read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the Speaker ought not to pay any attention to this mescalpeyote mode of procedure on the Republican side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that the Journal is going to be read, and the Chair may state that it will aid the Chair and the House if the gentlemen will remain quiet while the Journal is being read.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of the gentleman's demand, let him listen to it read from top to bottom.

Mr. SNELL. If the Journal is read all the way through according to the rule, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants to hear his name read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will hear it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Is it proper at this time to ask that the RECORD be corrected?

The SPEAKER. It is not at this time.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit me to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. In the 35 or 36 years of the Speaker's connection with the Congress, has he ever known of any requirement under the rule for reading every name of every roll call that occurred and every single word of every proceeding in the Journal?

The SPEAKER. The rule provides for that.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides for that, but the Speaker has never known it to be done.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to know from the Speaker whether, in his own experience, he has known of this being done before?

The SPEAKER. It can be done, but the Chair has never known of its being done.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit one more parliamentary inquiry.

Does the Speaker, in his 35 years of experience in Congress, know of any good reason for taking up the time of the Congress with such foolishness?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like for the Speaker to answer that inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of none.

The Clerk completed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. A motion to amend cannot be had after the previous question is moved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a direct decision on that.

Mr. SNELL. A motion to amend has preference over the motion to approve.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the ruling made by Speaker Clark, January 23, 1913, in which he said:

> The contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], for whose parliamentary knowledge the Chair has a great deal of respect, would, if sustained, absolutely nullify the previous question, and the previous question is intended to put an end to things.

That ruling was made on the identical contention the gentleman from New York is making now.

Mr. SNELL. I make the point of order that the motion to amend has preference.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In addition to that there are previous decisions on which Speaker Clark based his decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is familiar with the decisions mentioned. Speaker Reed, in a decision in 1897, held that a motion to amend the Journal may not be had after the moving of the previous question on a motion to approve the Journal.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 248, nays 76, answered "present" 1, not voting 105, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, is it not now in order to vote on the bill that came over from yesterday?

Mr. SNELL. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The engrossed copy is here now.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief announcement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] are holding hearings as a subcommittee for the Committee on Military Affairs, and for that reason were not present.

APPROPRIATIONS TO THE PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION FOR NONFEDERAL PROJECTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short letter written by me to the Administrator of Public Works, together with his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the applications pending before the Public Works Administration for loans and grants on non-Federal projects. It will require an appropriation of at least $1,250,000,000, earmarked for this purpose, to satisfy this class of applications. These projects are just as meritorious as those of a like nature which have been granted. They meet the requirements as to legal validity, financial security, and engineering soundness.

If Congress should fail to provide this money, after having provided it for the many thousands whose applications have been granted, then it occurs to me that it would have been better never to have commenced such a program.

Applicants for these loans and grants have gone to great trouble and expense in the prosecution of their claims. They have met all the requirements prescribed, and many of them have been notified that their applications are now dependent solely upon the amount of money to be appropriated by Congress. If sufficient funds are not appropriated, then the Administrator of Public Works will be compelled to reject many of the pending applications, notwithstanding the fact that the applicants may have been notified that all conditions had been satisfactorily met and that nothing remained but providing the funds. Such a dilemma would certainly prove very unsatisfactory, especially after hundreds of millions have been granted to others on applications of like merit.

I include as a part of my remarks a letter written by me to the Administrator of Public Works on May 25, and his reply on May 29, 1934. They are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 25, 1934.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. ICKES: In view of the fact that the deficiency appropriation bill, carrying the appropriations for the Public Works Administration, is soon to be considered by Congress, I am requesting that you please give me the following information:

What is the approximate total amount in dollars of applications for loans with or without grants, or grants without loans, now pending before the Public Works Administration, and on which no final action has been taken?

I am judging the rest of the country by conditions in my own district. A number of applications for loans and grants have been made, and many other applications are pending upon which final action has not yet been taken. Many of these projects are beyond question just as meritorious as those which have been granted, and if funds are available, a very large percent of them will, of course, be approved in due time. It occurs to me that if sufficient funds are not to be provided, after having gone so far with this program, it would certainly be a great disappointment to the many thousands interested in projects of merit which may not reach the stage of approval for want of sufficient funds.

If you will give me the information here called for, I assure you it will be highly appreciated. I am,

Yours very truly,

J. J. MANSFIELD, M.C.

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 29, 1934.

Hon. J. J. MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of May 25 inquiring as to the approximate amount in dollars of non-Federal applications now pending with the Public Works Administration on which no final action has been taken.

As of May 26 we had pending in Washington 5,327 non-Federal projects, aggregating $3,122,000,000, on which no final action had been taken. My staff estimates that about 40 to 50 percent of this amount will be able to meet our requirements as to legal validity, financial security, and engineering soundness.

So far as the amount of new appropriations, if any, is concerned, that is a question which is for the Congress to decide, and as to which I am foreclosed by the President's Budget message. I may say, however, that, in line with the thought expressed in your letter, we have received a number of letters charging us with bad faith in soliciting municipalities to file applications, for which we now have not sufficient funds.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works,
Washington, D.C.

ADDRESSES AT GETTYSBURG, PA., MEMORIAL DAY, 1934

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the memorial address of the President of the United States at Gettysburg on May 30 and also an address delivered by the Governor of Pennsylvania upon the same occasion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Memorial Day addresses delivered at Gettysburg, Pa., May 30, 1934:

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

My friends, on these hills of Gettysburg two brave armies of Americans once met in combat. Not far from here, in a valley likewise consecrated to American valor, a ragged Continental Army survived a bitter winter to keep alive the expiring hope of a new nation; and near to this battlefield and that valley stands that invincible city where the Declaration of Independence was born and the Constitution of the United States was written by the fathers. Surely, all this is holy ground.

It was in Philadelphia, too, that Washington spoke his solemn, tender, wise words of farewell—a farewell not alone to his generation but to the generation of those who laid down their lives here and to our generation and to the America of tomorrow. Perhaps if our fathers and grandfathers had truly heeded those words we should have had no family quarrel, no Battle of Gettysburg, no Appomattox.

As a Virginian, President Washington had a natural pride in Virginia; but as an American, in his stately phrase, "the name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discrimination."

Recognizing the strength of local and State and sectional prejudices and how strong they might grow to be, and how they might take from the National Government some of the loyalty the citizens owed to it, he made three historic tours during his Presidency. One was through New England in 1789, another through the Northern States in 1790, and still another through the Southern States in 1791. He did this, as he said, "in order to become better acquainted with their principal characters and internal circumstances, as well as to be more accessible to numbers of well-informed persons who might give him useful advices on political subjects."

But he did more to stimulate patriotism than merely to travel and mingle with the people. He knew that nations grow as their commerce and manufactures and agriculture grow, and that all of these grow as the means of transportation are extended. He sought to knit the sections together by their common interest in these great enterprises; and he projected highways and canals as aids not to sectional, but to national development.

But the Nation expanded geographically after the death of Washington far more rapidly than the Nation's means of intercommunication. The small national area of 1789 grew to the great expanse of the Nation of 1860. Even in terms of the crude transportation of that day, the Thirteen States were but within "driving distance" of each other.

With the settling and the peopling of the continent to the shores of the Pacific there developed the problem of self-contained territories because the Nation's expansion exceeded its development of means of transportation. The early building of railroads did not proceed on national lines.

Contrary to belief, the South and the West were not laggard in developing this new form of transportation; but there, as in the East, most of the railroads were local and sectional. It was a chartless procedure: people were not thinking in terms of national transportation or national communication. In the days before the brothers' war not a single line of railroad was projected from the South to the North; not even one from the South reached to the National Capital itself.

It was an inspired prophet of the South who said: "My brethren, if we know one another we will love one another." The tragedy of the Nation was that the people did not know one another because they had not the necessary means of visiting one another.

Two subsequent wars, both with foreign nations, measurably allayed and softened the ancient passions. It has been left to us of this generation to see the healing made permanent.

We are all brothers now in a new understanding. The grain farmers of the West do not set themselves up for preference if we seek at the same time to help the cotton farmers of the South; nor do the tobacco growers complain of discrimination if, at the same time, we help the cattlemen of the plains and mountains.

In our planning to lift industry to normal prosperity the farmer upholds our efforts. And as we give the farmer a long-sought equality the city worker understands and helps. All of us share in whatever good comes to the average man. We know that we all have a stake—a partnership in the government of our country.

Today we have many means of knowing each other—means that have sounded the doom of sectionalism. It is, I think, as I survey the picture from every angle, a simple fact that the chief hindrance to progress comes from three elements which, thank God, grow less in importance with the growth of a clearer understanding of our purposes on the part of the overwhelming majority. These groups are those who seek to stir up political animosity or to build political advantage by the distortion of facts; those who, by declining to follow the rules of the game, seek to gain an unfair advantage over those who live up to the rules; and those few who still, because they have never been willing to take an interest in their fellow Americans, dwell inside of their own narrow spheres and still represent the selfishness of sectionalism which has no place in our national life.

Washington and Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson sought and worked for a consolidated nation. You and I have it in our power to attain that great ideal. We can do this by following the peaceful methods prescribed under the broad and resilient provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Here, in the presence of the spirits of those who fell on this ground, we give renewed assurance that the passions of war are moldering in the tombs of time and the purposes of peace are flowing in the hearts of a united people.

ADDRESS OF HON. GIFFORD PINCHOT, GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA

Until a little more than a year ago the people of the United States faced the great depression without hope, leaderless, and without a plan.

In the Civil War, whose decisive battle we commemorate today, division of council brought suffering, waste, and loss beyond counting, both to the South and to the North. Just so divided councils were leading the people of the United States deeper and deeper into the slough of despond.

The men who brought the depression upon us had but one idea, which was to do nothing and pass the buck. Despair covered the Nation like a blanket.

Then at the darkest moment was heard a clear and confident voice. It said: "I accept the responsibility. I assume unhesitatingly the leadership of this great army of our people dedicated to a disciplined attack upon our common problems."

From that moment every man's hope was stronger, every man's head was lifted up, because here at last was a leader who was a man—a man whose daring rose to the high level of his great task.

Here at last was a figure large enough to fill the common eye, human enough to keep the common touch, brave enough to tell the truth, and strong enough to lead the Nation from a needless depression to a planned and general prosperity—from failure to success.

From that moment our recovery began. From that moment our people turned their faces from the darkness to the light. From that moment they had a common purpose and a common road.

Discord and division did nothing for us. They can do nothing now. We may still differ in details. We may differ in party. But in the one great object of relief from the depression we must stand as one.

This is no time to look backward. The profit of a few must not bar the road to the welfare of the people. The special interests which would re-create the causes of the depression must be thrust aside. The fleshpots of Egypt must not hinder us in our march to the promised land. There is but one way out, and that is to follow the President.

Today, a Nation united, and united behind one leader, we commemorate the battle and the victory at Gettysburg because of which the United States has become the greatest Nation the world has ever seen. So hereafter may the people, having followed their leader out of the depression, look back upon dark days which are no more and thank God for their deliverance.

It is my great honor, here in this valley of a great decision, to present to you a maker of decisions, a leader fit to be followed, the first citizen of the world, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF HON. HARRY L. HAINES, OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Nation approaches no ceremony with such universal sanction as that which is held in commemoration over the graves of those who have performed military duty. America has demonstrated that she is not ungrateful, and, again on this day set apart to pay our tribute of respect, we gather in this sacred spot to pay this tribute to the sons of a great nation who made the supreme sacrifice for a cause that they believed to be right. As we gather here today we cannot help but exclaim as did the prophet of old, "Take off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the ground whereon thou standest is holy ground." We are meeting here today for an hour of sacrament and consecration. Wherever our flag flies today, within the boundaries of the Republic, it is over lands whose freedom and security have been wrought through the sacrifices of our fellow citizens. It is a great privilege, my fellow citizens, that you and I have to offer our tribute of love and gratitude to those who made this supreme sacrifice. In our respect for the living and our reverence for our heroic dead, in the unbounded treasure which we have poured out in bounties, in the continual requiem services which we have held, we are showing to the world the soul of America. Today the sons and daughters of other lands, to which they gave their all, are placing with loving hands their laurels upon American graves, not less reverently than we are doing here.

This then is not a day of weakening memory, but a day of stimulation. To me no thought comes with more of inspiration than this: That now our Memorial Day is become an international occasion, that it calls upon the fortunate free of many lands and countries to help in its observance; and that equally to them and to us it is a reminder of our common faith to civilization, humanity, and everlasting justice.

Let us be true to the ideals that have made us a great nation and thus continue to bless mankind.

The valor of the fine men, who rest in this holy place, still lives and will continue to live in the hearts and minds of our people so long as we remain true to the ideals for which they died. Let us look to God for continued guidance and wisdom and pray that He may strengthen us, that He may keep our great Executive, the President of the United States, in these trying days of unrest, give him continued good health and strength to lead and direct us in the paths that God would have us go.

Let us pray.

NEW-DEAL REVIEW SHOWS BIG RESULTS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, when the people of the United States gave Franklin D. Roosevelt the job of replacing our worn-out economic machine, they did not suggest the type of vehicle he was to use. Their one hope was that he would not start predicting that prosperity was just around the corner, but that he would employ a plan that could be set into action so that it could turn out aid for the millions who were in dire need of assistance.

The President called on probably the greatest authorities in the various fields of social and economic life and requested that each of them submit plans for building up a certain part of his machine. As the plans came in, he selected those most likely to succeed and assembled them with hundreds of others into one large model. After he had his large draft completed, he called in the numerous Democratic leaders in the House and Senate and requested that they furnish him with the necessary power and money to carry out its construction. After a session of 100 days, the most fearless Congress in the history of a nation made it possible for him to erect the foundation upon which his new machine was to operate. When exposed to public view, the people found that this new machine was unlike anything that had ever before been created.

The first function of the new economic machine was to furnish relief. Tremendous achievements of recovery so far are shown in a new-deal balance sheet.

Favorable developments brighten many fronts as the Nation enters the sixteenth month of further business improvements. Continued progress depends upon the soundness of the administration's judgment, and the people alone can insure success if they are not misled by Wall Street.

High lights of the recovery accounting are:

First. Approximately 6,000,000 persons have been reemployed, either privately or directly, by the Government.

Second. The fiscal-year deficit may be less than President Roosevelt said he expected.

Third. Federal revenue is meeting Budget expenditures.

Fourth. Reopened banks appear to be safe and sound.

Fifth. Agricultural crop and mortgage loans and A.A.A. benefits exceed $1,172,000,000.

Sixth. The 10-percent wage-increase plan is spreading through industry.

Emergency loans, gifts, and benefits have been distributed by the administration from coast to coast through the multiplicity of agencies to revive industry, agriculture, and commerce.

President Roosevelt's recovery schedule provides that purely emergency aid shall cease 14 months hence, on June 30, 1935. Thereafter the country is to live within its income. One month of the current fiscal year remains.

The Treasury balance sheet for the first 11 months of the fiscal year shows:

1. Income	$2,701,436,596.95
2. Expenditures	6,328,892,261.60
3. Deficit to date	3,627,455,664.65

President Roosevelt budgeted for fiscal year expenditures of $10,569,006,967 and a deficit of $7,309,068,211. It is unlikely so much can or will be spent between now and June 30.

The principal job-making organizations of the new deal have furnished me with data from the Division of Research and Planning and from the office of the Chief Clerk.

EMPLOYMENT

More than 560,000 men and women went back to work in industry and agriculture in March, according to Federation estimates. The total number out of work decreased from 11,467,000 in February to 10,905,000 in March.

This gain in employment is an important mark of progress toward recovery.

Of the 10,905,000 who had no work in industry in March, nearly 253,000 were in Emergency Conservation Work, and 300,000 had work under P.W.A. At the end of March, C.W.A. was terminated, except for a few workers kept on the pay rolls to finish Federal projects. On April 12, only 92,000 were left of the 4,000,000 who had work at the peak of C.W.A. activity. Those in need were given work under the works division of the Emergency Relief Administration or received help through State and local relief channels. In February, 2,610,000 families, with 11,610,000 individuals were receiving relief, and from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 had been taken from relief rolls and were working under C.W.A. This compares to 4,140,000 families on relief in February a year ago. In March, with the termination of C.W.A., the number of straight relief increased, and thousands were also given work under the Relief Administration. By the third week in April the number at work under relief was about 750,000.

Continued increases during April in employment and pay rolls, which usually decline in that month following seasonal expansions in February and March, were shown May 17 by Secretary Perkins.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated that more than 224,000 workers were returned to employment in manufacturing and nonmanufacturing industries, with an estimated increase of $7,700,000 in weekly pay rolls.

The factory-employment index rose 1.9 percent, and factory pay rolls 3.9 percent.

Thirteen of the fifteen nonmanufacturing industries surveyed monthly by the Bureau reported gains in employment from March to April, and 11 industries reported increased pay rolls over the month interval.

In addition to the gains reported by private industry, there was an increase in April of 85,000 workers employed on Public Works projects, and a gain of nearly 13,000 workers reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission for class I railroads.

THE BUSINESS TREND

The Federal Reserve Board business-activity index takes the average of 1923–25 business as an arbitrary 100. On that basis, business hit a bottom index of 60 in March 1933, rose to 100 in July 1933, and declined to 72 in November 1933.

It is rising now from a beginning of 75 in December 1933 and a mark of 78 in January.

AGRICULTURE

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration approximately 46,621,000 acres of corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco lands have been withdrawn from production since March 4, 1932, as follows:

Corn	acres	12,000,000
Wheat	do	7,500,000
Cotton (under 1933 adjustment program)	do	10,304,000
Cotton (under 1934 adjustment program)	do	15,317,000
Tobacco, estimated	do	1,500,000
Disbursements for administrative purposes to and including Apr. 30, 1934, the latest figure available, totaled	dollars	13,833,187.20
Commodity Credit Corporation loans on corn to May 16, 1934, totaled	dollars	90,035,981.47
Commodity Credit Corporation loans on cotton to May 16, 1934, totaled	dolars	61,114,410.45

Rental and benefit payments and payments for removal of surplus agricultural commodities to close of Apr. 30, 1934

Commodity	Number of checks issued	Total	Rental and benefit payments	Removal of surplus
Cotton	1,062,017	$112,515,866.07	$112,515,866.07
Tobacco	141,592	5,206,778.25	5,206,778.25

FARMS TAKE MORE WORKERS

Reports on agricultural employment indicated a seasonal increase in that field.

Computed on the former series of the Bureau of Labor Statistics which was based on the 12-month average of 1926 as 100 and was not adjusted to census trends, the index of factory employment in April rose from 76.4 to 77.8, and the index of pay rolls rose from 59.4 to 61.9.

INDUSTRY

Recovery Administrator Johnson estimates at least 3,000,000 persons have received employment through the efforts of N.R.A. Manufacturing alone shows the following increase: The new index issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics stood at 80.8 in March of this year, compared with 66.9 in June of last year, just before the Recovery Act became effective. In terms of actual numbers, these indexes indicate 5,640,000 employed in June and 6,810,000 in March. Not only is this increase of 1,170,000 between the two dates quite significant but so also is the difference between employment last year and the probable employment in March of this year had N.R.A. not intervened.

When N.R.A. came into existence, the average work week in manufacturing was 42.5 hours. Through the codes it has been cut to 36 or less. If the 42.5-hour work week had obtained in March, 5,765,000 men would have sufficed to do what 6,810,000 did with a 36-hour average work week. The difference is 1,045,000 men who would not have been at work without the N.R.A. program.

Manufacturing accounts for only one-third of the employees working under N.R.A. codes. While our statistics on the other two-thirds of our field are very scanty, it is reasonable to assume that relatively reemployment is just as great as in the field of manufacturing.

As for manufacturing pay rolls, when N.R.A. was set up the index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics was 47.2 and average hourly earnings about 42 cents. In March 1934 it was 64.8 and average earnings 53 cents. In terms of dollars the June index represents an annual pay roll of about $5,030,000,000, while the March 1934 index represents $6,900,000,000, a gain of $1,870,000,000. If the March hourly earning had been at 42 cents, as in June—and there is good reason for believing it would have been lower—the annual rate of pay would have been $4,320,000,000. The difference is $2,580,000,000 and represents the combined effect of getting more men on the pay roll and raising their hourly pay. The nonmanufacturing industries show results of a similar order.

To date 430 codes have been approved, exclusive of supplements. In every industry where child labor or sweatshops were a pressing evil, they have been eliminated. Almost all codes have child-labor clauses. The minimum-wage provision plus vigorous enforcement make sweatshops impossible.

About 91.6 percent of the employees eventually to come under N.R.A. or combined N.R.A.-A.A.A. codes are now working under codes of fair competition.

The total expenditures of the National Recovery Administration from July 1, 1933, to May 1, 1934, amounted to $5,287,325.42.

FACTORY JOBS AND PAY ROLLS UP

Continued increase in employment and pay rolls and in the volume of manufacturing production during April and the first 3 weeks of May was reported recently by the Federal Reserve Board.

The general level of commodity prices remained substantially unchanged, but there was a considerable shift in the level of individual commodity prices.

The advance in manufacturing reflected increases in iron and steel, automobiles, and meat packing. Lumber production declined in April. Activity at wool and silk mills was considerably reduced, while cotton consumption by mills showed little change.

Production of crude petroleum continued to increase, but there was more than a seasonal decline at the beginning of April in the mining of coal.

During the first 2 weeks of May steel operations increased substantially, but there was a decline in the third week. The output of automobiles decreased.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The Civil Works Administration itself is no longer operating. The work program now being carried on is administered by the State emergency relief administrations, which have power to approve or disapprove projects subject to restrictions of the Administrator.

The first Civil Works pay roll for a complete week covered the week ending November 23, when a total of 863,506 persons were employed and earned a total of $7,861,736.

At the peak of the Civil Works program 4,093,369 men were employed during the week ending January 18, 1934. The total amount of wages paid from Federal funds during the entire program was approximately $735,000,000.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

Administrator Ickes has alloted all the $3,300,000,000 appropriated by Congress. It is estimated unofficially that 1,000,000 persons have been employed through projects financed by P.W.A.

Ickes says $1,382,000,000 of the Public Works fund actually will go into the people's pockets this year. He expects expenditures to reach their peak in June.

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION UNIT

The Office of the Chief of Finance has advised that the total cost of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps to January 31, 1934, based on the reports of accrued obligations as of that date was $281,454,470.34. The amount actually expended to January 31, 1934, was $207,782,328.68. Hearings have been held before the House Appropriations Committee with regard to Emergency Conservation Work, and when these proceedings are made public, figures will be available showing total expenditures for the year.

Altogether, around 600,000 men have been enrolled in the Emergency Conservation Work camps since the beginning. This figure includes approximately 58,000 war veterans and 50,000 experienced woodsmen. In addition, about 25,000 men have been employed in supervisory positions and 40,000 carpenters and skilled laborers given employment for short periods of time in the construction of the camps.

At the present time there are 1,468 C.C.C. camps and 75 Indian conservation camps in operation.

BANKS

Thirty-six national banks, with frozen deposits of $31,893,000, were licensed and opened, or reopened, during April, J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, stated.

This brought the number of national banks licensed during the first 4 months of 1934 to 223, involving frozen deposits of $198,551,000.

By the close of business April 30, 1934, unlicensed national banks in the United States had been reduced to 185, or only 13 percent of the 1,417 which remained unlicensed on March 16, 1933, the first day after termination of the general banking holiday.

The 185 unlicensed national banks at the termination of business April 30 last were segregated as follows: 156 banks, with $146,305,000 frozen deposits, had approved reorganization plans; 29 banks, with $16,281,000 frozen deposits, had disapproved reorganization plans.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN UNIT

This Corporation, refinancing mortgages for hard-pressed home owners, has made 218,505 loans, aggregating $636,301,962.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Indebted farmers have borrowed in excess of $1,100,876,274 from this organization. Loans average $358,354 for each of the 3,072 counties in the United States. The Administration has resources of $2,000,000,000.

FEDERAL SURPLUS RELIEF CORPORATION

Through this Corporation foodstuffs, bedding, and fuel have been distributed to feed and warm the needy unemployed from October 1933 to April 30, 1934, in total value, $69,000,000. Of this amount, surplus farm commodities valued at $27,000,000 were donated by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The balance, $42,000,000, has been expended from relief funds allocated to this Corporation by the individual States and Territories.

The Federal Surplus Relief Corporation has not received any money from the Public Works Administration.

Other commodities supplied to the needy unemployed have been financed entirely by the individual States and Territories through their respective emergency relief administrations. The funds so used represented combined Federal, State, and local moneys.

FEDERAL SUBSISTANCE HOMESTEAD CORPORATION

Public announcement has been made of the allocation of $10,600,000 for subsistence homestead projects. In addition, however, a tentative allocation of the remainder of the $25,000,000, appropriated for the work of this division, has been made, and a public announcement will be given out concerning the additional plans as the forthcoming projects are finally approved. Some of the future allocations have been made for areas rather than specific projects, and the projects themselves still remain to be developed.

Thirty-six projects have been approved to date in 20 States. Their costs will vary considerably, but the individual homesteads will as a rule be priced between $2,000 and $3,000.

A definite statement concerning the number of families to be affected cannot be made, but it is expected that approximately 10,000 families will be aided in the purchase of subsistence homesteads. Allowing an average of 5 persons to a family, this would mean that approximately 50,000 will be directly affected. In addition, of course, there will be a large number of persons indirectly aided by the subsistence homestead program through the expenditure of $25,000,000 on the purchase and improvement of land and other operations incidental to the development of homestead projects.

CREDIT

Loan authorizations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Feb. 2, 1932, to May 1, 1934

Banks and trust companies (including receivers, conservators, and liquidating agents, but excluding $67,500 of industry loans)	$1,994,994,438.17
Industry (N.R.A. loans)	10,122,750.00
Railroads (including receivers and a trustee of a railroad)	420,699,930.00
All other	3,147,828,165.82
Total	5,574,645,283.99

In addition, upon certification of grants by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, the Corporation disbursed $486,717,731 under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

Conditional agreements outstanding on April 30, amounting to $301,380,290.64 are not included in this total.

The average daily disbursement of the Corporation for the first 4 months of 1934 was $6,618,503.14, and the average daily repayment for such period was $2,833,962.05.

In general, loan demands have decreased recently.

To date two export-import banks have been organized, namely, the Export-Import Bank of Washington, organized to deal with Russia, and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, organized to deal with Cuba.

In addition a third Export-Import Bank of Washington is in the process of being organized to deal with all countries other than Russia and Cuba.

MONEY

The dollar is devalued to 59.06 in terms of the old gold dollar. Prior to the decrease in the weight of the gold dollar, silver constituted about 16 percent of our monetary stocks of silver and gold, but by the devaluation of the dollar this percentage was reduced to about 10 percent.

The President has recommended a proportion of 25 percent silver and 75 percent gold. With the proper proportion of silver in our monetary stocks, we may look toward a coordinated use of that silver to check changes in the purchasing power of the dollar.

The new deal has brought home to business a truth that the wisest and most sensitive people in business know already. That truth is that the control of big business, since it affects so many people, is a public charge. It is greater in spirit than mere money making. In this sense it is like all the professions. They have their codes of honor, and business must perfect its own. That, for the big business man, is the moral significance of the new deal.

It is well that Americans at present should achieve the poise and balance needed to insure these things, for, as the French Minister of Finance has said, "There is no future for civilization unless America remains great."

TOBACCO TAXES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means on the tobacco question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

TOBACCO TAXES

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.:

We beg to report to the Ways and Means Committee of the House the proceedings and conclusions of the subcommittee which you appointed to consider taxes on tobacco and tobacco products. We transmit herewith, the hearings before our subcommittee which were held on March 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and April 10. We heard 56 witnesses. There were 13 briefs filed and 22 petitions setting forth views. The hearings cover 440 pages.

These hearings were attended by veritably hundreds of growers of various types of tobacco from the States of Kentucky, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, South Carolina, West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Georgia. Representatives of all the principal manufacturers of cigarettes, manufacturers of chewing and smoking tobacco, and cigar manufacturers appeared and testified. In addition to the personal testimony presented to the committee, we offered the opportunity of those who attended and did not testify to present their views and the views of their delegations, in writing, for the purposes of the record. Much valuable information came to the committee from this source.

While there was some difference of opinion as to the method of the reduction at this time, there was complete unanimity among all those appearing that the tobacco taxes were unreasonable, unfair, and unjust. No voice in these hearings expressed contrary views. The witnesses who advocated a 10-percent reduction upon the cheaper cigarettes very quickly admitted that the present taxes were too high and strongly favored a material reduction, including therein the principle of a graduated tax. So, it can be truly said that from the evidence of all witnesses for the growers, the consumers, and the manufacturers there was complete accord that the taxes on tobacco were outrageously high. Some of the witnesses even termed the tax "unconscionable."

THE PRESENT TAX IS A PROHIBITION TAX

It is well to refresh our minds as to the history of the rate of tax on tobacco. The pre-war tax on cigarettes was $1.25 per thousand cigarettes, which, translated to a pack of 20, meant 2½ cents per pack. This was increased twice during the war. On October 4, 1917, it was increased to $1.65 per thousand cigarettes, or about 3⅓ cents per pack. Then, in less than a month thereafter, on November 2, 1917, it was increased to $2.05 per thousand cigarettes, which was a little more than 4 cents per pack. This was the maximum war rate, and was in effect until February 25, 1919, after the ratification of the eighteenth amendment, when it was raised to $3 per thousand or 6 cents per pack. The ratification of the eighteenth amendment was declared January 29, 1919. This rate has remained unchanged in season and out of season from that date to this. The pre-war tax on chewing and smoking tobacco was 8 cents per pound. On October 4, 1917, it was increased to 10½ cents per pound; on November 2, 1917, it was increased to 13 cents per pound. After the war and on February 25, 1919, it was increased to 18 cents per pound.

It is patent that the present tobacco taxes are not merely war taxes. The present rates were not conceived until the ratification of the eighteenth amendment. It is obviously patent that this 50-percent increase to taxes on cigarettes and the 40-percent increase on chewing and smoking tobacco reached the statute books to replace revenues theretofore received from beer and distilled spirits. Now that the taxes on beer and distilled spirits are adding revenues to the Treasury at the rate of more than $450,000,000 per year, the tobacco taxes should be materially reduced. This is the Treasury estimate for fiscal year 1935.

During the depression years, tobacco taxes have poured more than $2,000,000,000 in the Treasury. Total tobacco-tax receipts for those fiscal years are as follows:

1929	$434,444,543.21
1930	450,339,060.50
1931	444,276,502.62
1932	398,578,618.56
1933	402,739,059.26

The total tobacco-tax receipts for January and February 1934 for cigarettes alone exceeds the revenues from such sources in January and February 1933, by $12,600,000. Assuming that under the present tax, this increase would continue through the year, there would be an increase in tax of $75,000,000 for cigarettes alone in 1934 over 1933. This would mean practically $475,000,000 in tobacco taxes for calendar year 1934, as against the total tobacco tax received for fiscal year 1918 (which was just prior to the prohibition era) of $156,188,659.60.

TOBACCO TAXES AND THE GROWER

Your committee is of the opinion that the tobacco-tax burden is without reason and unconscionable. This subject to date has been viewed by your committee from the viewpoint of the tobacco grower and the consuming public. Many hasten to conclude that a reduction in the tobacco tax would primarily benefit the manufacturers of the product. Immediately there comes into their minds a picture of the enormous profits that the cigarette manufacturers have made during the depression years at a time when the farmer has not received cost of production for the raw material. A resentment that is perfectly natural to those interested in the welfare of the tobacco farmers develops when he learns that in 1932, the total profits of 52 leading tobacco manufacturers were $146,000,000, as compared to $134,000,000 in 1929 and $75,000,000 in 1923.

The net profits of this handful of manufacturers in 1932 were nearly 50 percent greater than the gross returns of all the tobacco growers in the United States in the same year. We do not have the complete figures for 1933, but the Big Four, the American Tobacco Co., R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., and P. Lorillard Co., had aggregate net earnings from manufacturing and sale of tobacco products of $42,678,366.04. These four concerns paid for tobacco purchased in 1933, including processing tax thereon, the sum of $105,635,250.34.

We frankly state that the reduction of the tax proposed is without any thought or purpose that the tobacco manufacturers will retain any part of the taxes reduced. The representatives of all the major manufacturers stated that in their sponsoring tax reduction they would not use any portion of the reduced tax as extra profits; that the whole of the tax reduction would be passed on. Some may conclude that this will not occur, but we are of the opinion that the popular price desired for particular commercial advantage will compel the manufacturers to do that which they agreed to do in this record.

As heretofore stated, this committee gave special attention to the viewpoint of the grower and the consumer. The evidence presented was overwhelming and practically unanimous that a material reduction in the tax would mean an increased consumption of the manufactured product. It must be conceded that the increased consumption would mean an increased demand for tobacco and higher prices for the grower. This condition will be materially improved in respect of price to the farmer through the curtailment of acreage program that is under way in the tobacco areas.

The tobacco tax is the only war tax and prohibition tax that remained unchanged during the prosperous years that followed their levy. It is the only excise tax levied upon agricultural products with the exception of the tax on oleomargarine which is placed thereon to benefit other farm products. In addition to the excise tax, tobacco bears the processing tax. Tobacco is the only commodity now paying a processing tax that likewise bears the burden of any excise tax. Actually, some so-called "economists" in former years had the idea that the amount of this tax, with the resultant increased price for the manufactured product, had no effect whatever upon the consumption of the product. Of course, this is the face of age-old economic laws. The years of depression, with the decreased consumption of tobacco demonstrated conclusively that this philosophy was fallacious. The law of the pocketbook in respect of consumption was and is as applicable to tobacco as any other article sold.

It is the thought of the tobacco grower expressed in this record that if the heavy hand of Federal taxation is lifted in part from his back, that the consumption of his product will increase materially, and the general economic law of supply and demand will give him a living price for his tobacco without the necessity of having any artificial stimuli.

THE CONSUMER

The tobacco user is rarely considered in any discussion of this problem. The burden on him is indirect and has been endured for such a period of time that many of them do not know the extent of the burden. Those who do know that there is a 6-cent tax upon a pack of 20 cigarettes either pay it, go into the roll-your-own class of smoker, or quit smoking entirely. The tobacco-consuming public, as other classes of consumers, are unorganized and generally speaking, inarticulate when taxes and tariffs are concerned. It has long been the philosophy of some that an indirect charge upon the public is painless and less troublesome to lawmakers. Without entering into discussion of such philosophy, the fact remains that the man who consumes one pack of cigarettes per day, pays into the Federal Treasury $21.90 per year. He pays a tax of 6 cents for an article that could sell for 4 cents with the same profits to all, if it were a 10-cent brand, or would sell for 6½ cents per pack if it were the so-called "standard brand."

We suggest that this tax of $21.90 per year is a sales tax of monstrous proportions. To illustrate the enormity of it, we suggest that a person who consumes one pack of cigarettes per day throughout the year, pays $21.90. This is the same amount of income tax that the same man, if married with four dependents, would pay upon net income of $5,108.61 (all earned income).

In the fiscal year of 1933, there were 109,400,000,000 (plus) cigarettes consumed. With a tax reduction that would permit the so-called "10-cent" cigarettes to sell two for 15 cents and the so-called "standard brands" to sell at 10 cents per pack there would have been saved to the cigarette smokers alone of this country, in 1933, $136,750,000. That is a considerable saving.

THE FISCAL SITUATION

It was our original purpose to hear the representatives of agriculture and the Treasury before the subcommittee. Conditions over which we had no control prevents such hearing by the subcommittee if our conclusions are to reach the full committee before the tax bill is finally considered. Then, we recognize the fact that the question of revenues would, in any event, be finally determined by the full committee, so we present our views upon the evidence which has been presented. In the event that no action can be taken in the present revenue bill, we will await your determination as to the manner in which you wish to procure the further evidence desired.

However, in the course of the hearings, certain indisputable facts and data have been presented which may be helpful to the committee with reference to the revenues involved.

There was little, if any, testimony that a material reduction in tax and thereby in price would not materially increase the units of tobacco products consumed. It was difficult to lay down any absolute figure as to this increase. One very experienced gentleman adhered to the statement that he had made to another congressional committee sometime ago, that a reduction of 50 percent in the tax would bring about an increase in the consumption of 100 percent, which would leave the revenue status unchanged. The witness was Hon. J. C. Stone, of Lexington, Ky., formerly general manager of the Burley Pool and formerly chairman of the Farm Board under the preceding administration. His statement was as follows:

"I believe that if the tax on cigarettes could be reduced from $3 per thousand to $1.50 per thousand, and on smoking and chewing tobacco from 18 cents to 9 cents a pound, the consumption would increase to such an extent that the Government would get as much revenue from it as it does today, and at the same time give the producer a much greater demand for his product."

It is difficult to state the increased use of tobacco products that would flow from the decreased prices. But that such increase would come is unquestioned in the mind of your committee.

Since the beginning of the war, there has been an increase in the consumption of cigarettes in every fiscal year up to 1931, save the fiscal year 1921, when business showed marked decline. In the fiscal year 1916, there were 21,000,000,000 cigarettes consumed. In the fiscal year 1930, there were almost 120,000,000,000 cigarettes consumed. This last year is the peak year in cigarette consumption. The consumption of cigarettes declined in 1931 and again in 1932, with an increase for 1933 to 109,400,000,000 plus. The war is responsible for a portion of the increased use of cigarettes. Without question, smoking among women has contributed a large part of this increase. A different viewpoint is had with reference to their use. There must be an additional 10,000,000,000 cigarette consumption before we return to the peak year, or before we return to the figures of the first full fiscal year in the depression. The record before us strongly indicates that the calendar year of 1934 will more than reach former peak consumption. The months of January and February 1934 show an increase in cigarettes tax paid of 4,200,000,000 above the cigarettes tax paid in January and February 1933.

That increase comes in large part from the increased buying power of the American public under the new deal. Assuming that this ratio will continue, there would be at least an increased consumption in the calendar year of 1934 of 25,000,000,000 cigarettes over the calendar year 1933. This increase comes without any reduction in the price to the consumer. Under the present tax, this increased consumption would mean another $75,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States above the revenues derived in the calendar year 1933. In the calendar year of 1933 total tobacco-tax receipts were $419,300,000 plus; in the calendar year of 1932 the total tobacco-tax receipts were $387,270,000 plus. In other words, the increase in revenues for the calendar year 1933 was $32,000,000 plus in excess of the revenues received for the calendar year 1932. If the continued gain in the consumption of cigarettes will continue through 1934 at the ratio above stated, under the present tax there would be recovered into the Treasury on cigarettes alone an additional $75,000,000 above the receipts for 1933 calendar year, or $107,000,000 plus in excess of the total receipts for the calendar year 1932. In other words, if the receipts for the calendar year 1932 be taken as a fair base for the fair amount to be received from tobacco taxes—to which view your subcommittee does not subscribe, as it thinks that such sum is excessive—it looks very probable that the receipts for the calendar year 1934 will be more than $100,000,000 in excess of such base. This is without any reduced price.

We believe that a 10-cent selling price to the consumer of the so-called "standard brand" of cigarettes and a selling price of two for 15 cents for the present 10-cent brand in itself will bring a material increase in cigarette consumption. Its increase will come for several reasons and from several sources. Many smokers in the roll-your-own class will prefer the manufactured cigarettes. It is well to remember that this conversion carries with it an increase of 1 pound of tobacco for each 1,000 cigarettes, which is an added benefit to the grower, in that there is an increase of 50 percent of tobacco in such conversion. More liberality will be seen in the disposition of cigarettes. There would naturally follow, in our opinion, a substantial increase due to added waste. The present tax on smoking tobacco, roll-your-own class, is 18 cents per pound, as compared with the present tax on tobacco in manufactured cigarettes of approximately $1.08 per pound. Under existing rates, every billion cigarettes that comes from roll-your-own smokers means an added revenue of $2,700,000.

To show conclusively the effect of the depression upon the manufactured-cigarette use, we submit that in 1929 there were approximately 8,000,000,000 non-tax-paid cigarette papers. In 1933 there were 48,000,000,000 non-tax-paid cigarette papers; in other words, six times as many non-tax-paid cigarette papers in 1933 as in 1929. It is a difficult matter to estimate the increased consumption of manufactured cigarettes from this source, but it unquestionably would be a substantial amount, and for every billion of manufactured cigarettes which replaced roll-your-own, under the present tax rate, there would be an addition of $2,700,000 to the Treasury.

So, the increased revenues under present prices, and the greatly increased revenues that would come from the reduced prices, will make up in large degree the apparent loss to the Treasury from a plain arithmetical calculation of decreased revenues.

For anyone to turn his conclusion of this problem upon the dollars and cents end of it, that is, to make his conclusion solely from the Treasury or revenue end of this, he must be utterly unmindful of the social problems involved. Such person to conclude that the tobacco tax as it presently exists is fair, just, and proper forgets, if he ever knew, the human side of the equation. If there is one thing demonstrated in these hearings, it is that the tobacco farmer for many years has sold his tobacco below cost of production. If there be one thing demonstrated in these hearings, it is that there is no work harder, more painstaking, and more time-consuming than the growing of tobacco. The tax on cigarettes is eight times the value of the tobacco content of 20 cigarettes based upon the 1932 burley average of 12.6 cents per pound, or the flue-cured average for same year of 11.9 cents.

CONCLUSIONS

The committee has reached the conclusion that there should be a real reduction of the taxes on all manufactured tobacco products. While most of the discussion and data submitted centered around cigarettes, your committee feels that all tobacco products should be relieved, to a large degree, of this enormous tax.

There was a proposal for a 10-percent reduction of the taxes on the so-called "10-cent cigarettes" alone. Representatives of the two manufacturers of the 10-cent cigarettes, and several witnesses appeared favoring graduation in the tobacco tax in principle. No suggestion was offered with reference to a graduated tax, except the 10-percent reduction affecting the 10-cent cigarettes. No other tobacco product would have been affected under such proposal.

Your committee feels that such reduction does not meet the needs of the present situation. The representatives of the manufacturers of the 10-cent cigarettes, in sponsoring this proposal, specifically stated in their testimony that their proposal was not presented as a real tax-reduction measure; that they felt that such reduction might be all that could be presently obtained. They testified that, in their opinion, a graduated tax was proper in principle to be applied upon tobacco products. Each of these witnesses frankly admitted that there should be a material substantial reduction in the taxes, insisting that the graduated principle should be applied. However, some of them frankly admitted they had not sought this particular reduction when they were manufacturing cigarettes which were to be sold at the same price as standard brands, and that if they had continued to manufacture such cigarettes alone, they would not now be requesting this innovation in cigarette taxes. It might be well to state that the so-called "10-cent cigarettes" constitute less than one-tenth of the cigarettes consumed.

Your committee does not feel that this 10-percent reduction for a particular manufactured product is sufficient to meet the needs of the occasion. Such reduction would not permit of any substantial benefit to the tobacco grower. Many tobacco growers were emphatic in their statements that they preferred no reduction in taxes to this proposed 10-percent cut.

The basis for such position as stated by them was that such reduction in taxes through this differential or preferential treatment for the so-called "10-cent cigarettes" would immediately attract 10-cent brands manufactured by those selling the so-called "standard brand." They stated that the companies manufacturing the standard brands gave them a market for higher grades of tobacco than that purchased by the so-called "10-cent cigarette" manufacturers; that they would lose this market for the higher grades of tobacco and that such higher grades would immediately enter into competition with lower grades, thereby forcing these lower grades into still cheaper grades. There was almost complete unanimity of opinion among the growers testifying that there would be a material reduction in the average for the tobacco crop if such plan were adopted.

The committee concludes that this 10-percent reduction would not bring about a reduced price to the consumer for cigarettes purchased. We see no benefits whatever to the consumer, nor any benefits to the Treasury by way of increased consumption, nor do we believe there would be any noticeable benefit to the grower.

It is the conclusion of your subcommittee that a reduction of 40 percent of all tobacco taxes should be made. It is this reduction that will permit the so-called "10-cent pack" to be sold for two for 15 cents and will permit the standard brand to be sold for a dime. As we see it, this will bring a genuine benefit to the grower and the consumer. The manufacturer will make no more profit per unit than at present, since the representatives of the manufacturers stated that all the tax reductions would be passed on and no part of it retained by the manufacturers.

A 40-percent horizontal reduction on all tobacco taxes would bring the tax on cigarettes to $1.80 per thousand, which is more than the pre-war tax and more than the first war tax, but not quite as much as the second war increase to $2.05 per thousand, which prevailed until the prohibition increase occurred. On smoking and chewing tobacco, this would decrease the present tax of 18 cents per pound to 10.8 cents per pound. This is more than the pre-war tax and the first war increase, but 2.2 cents per pound less than the second war-tax increase which prevailed until the prohibition tax went into effect. This reduction, in our opinion, would meet the problem presented by representatives of cheap cigars. We feel that this reduction on all tobacco products will have direct beneficient effect upon at least 3,000,000 American citizens, occupying 432,000 American farms, who are dependent upon the price which they receive for their tobacco for a living for themselves and families.

A substantial reason for our arriving at a 40-percent reduction is on account of the sale price that can be secured by the consumer if this reduction be effected. We finish as we started, that our purpose was to benefit the tobacco grower and the consuming public without any material hurt to the Treasury of the United States. The use of cold mathematical calculation shows us that a 40-percent reduction in taxes will permit the so-called "standard brand" of cigarettes to be sold for 10 cents, with the same percentage of profit made by the distributors as they make now, with a less price to the manufacturer per unit than he now receives. Representatives of the so-called "standard brands" state that such brands can and will be sold at retail with this reduction for 10 cents per pack, and that all tax reductions would be passed on and no part of it retained by the manufacturers. No reduction in taxes at this time could be considered if there was doubt that the full reduction would be immediately and fully reflected in the price of the manufactured product and its resultant benefits to the growers and consumers. This reduction, according to cold mathematical calculation, will permit the so-called "10-cent cigarettes" to be retailed at two for 15 cents. This price of two packs of cigarettes for 15 cents should be a popular price, and in our opinion will add greatly to the volume of the so-called "cheaper" cigarette. The 40-percent reduction will permit the sale of such cigarettes at this popular figure, two for 15 cents, with the same profit to the manufacturers and substantially the same percentage of profit to the distributors per pack.

Our mature conclusion is that with any less reduction, the cheaper cigarettes might not be sold two for 15 cents and the standard brands might not be sold for a dime; and that if such sale price did not reach these popular figures that are of such known value in the sale of commodities, there would be no material increase in consumption, which is the essential to the Treasury and the grower. Then, too, under a lesser reduction, there is the danger that the tobacco manufacturers might take advantage and retain part of such tax reduction for their own benefit, or that which is desired to be avoided in all events, make up any loss it sustains in reaching the peculiarly popular sale price aforesaid by giving the farmer a decreased price for his tobacco.

We feel that this proposed horizontal reduction of 40 percent of the taxes on tobacco products will protect best the interest of the farmer, will save untold millions of dollars annually to the wage earners and the tobacco consumers of this country, will provide a proper and just return of revenues to the Treasury, ultimately making up for temporary decrease, all without any added profit per unit to the manufacturers.

Wherefore, we submit for your consideration these our views and recommendations.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The first business is to vote on the pending bill. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

PRESS PUBLICATION OF REMARKS OF MEMBERS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat delayed last night in receiving a transcript of remarks I had made during the day and, on inquiry, was told that they had been submitted to the press, although I had not been consulted and had been given no opportunity to look them over. I desire to inquire if this is the custom and if it is sanctioned by the accepted procedure of the House. It has always been my impression that under the rules not even a Member of the House has a right to see the transcript of another Member's remarks unless they personally reflect on the Member making the request; and it hardly seems consistent that members of the press—as anxious as we are to accord them every legitimate privilege—should exercise a right denied to Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker Crisp, the father of our former beloved colleague, Mr. Charles Crisp, rendered a decision on this point during his Speakership in which he held that a transcript of the remarks of a Member could not be submitted even to another Member unless they reflected on the Member desiring to see them.

And, Mr. Speaker, there is an excellent reason for that ruling. I have often wondered at the remarkable accuracy of the reporters who report the debates of the House. The skill with which they take down the hurried debate on the floor is almost uncanny, but even the most expert find themselves at times unable to catch everything when a number of Members are participating in a rapid-fire colloquy. The result is that all Members of the House now and then receive copy which is not an accurate transcript of their remarks. I have seen copy, for example, in which the word "not" was omitted or in which it was inadvertently added, which completely changed the statement made by the Member on the floor, and which reported him as saying directly the contrary to what he actually had said. I am certain all will agree that a Member of the House ought at least to have the opportunity to look at the copy of his remarks, to know whether or not it is accurate, before submission to the press or anyone else by the Official Reporter of the House.

I am submitting a parliamentary inquiry to know what is the rule and whether it conforms to our practice as to the submission of transcripts of remarks of Members to the press, without their consent, either before or after Members have had an opportunity to examine them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that Mr. Speaker Longworth advised the reporters of debates that they could submit to the press copies of the remarks of Members of Congress before those remarks appeared in the RECORD and even without the consent of a Member making the remarks. The practice has been since that time to follow that method. The Chair thinks it is improper, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has just given an excellent reason why it is improper. The Chair now instructs the reporters hereafter not to submit to the press the remarks of Members of Congress in advance of their appearing in the RECORD unless the consent of the Member making the remarks is first obtained. [Applause.]

PUBLIC RECORD OF HON. ROSS A. COLLINS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address recently delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I am placing in the RECORD a speech recently delivered by Hon. ROSS A. COLLINS, of Mississippi.

For many years Mr. COLLINS and I have been members of the same political party and have served the cause of progressive Democracy. He is now about to leave this body of which he has been a Member for the past 14 years.

In placing the speech of Mr. COLLINS in the RECORD, I desire to pay tribute to his high character, his marked ability, and his record of devoted and useful service. He has earned the respect and esteem of his fellow Members. He has served his district, State, and country faithfully and ably. As a hard student, an energetic worker, a clear thinker, and a conscientious public servant he has made a place for himself of which he may be justly proud. We shall miss him greatly.

The speech is as follows:

I was first honored with public office in 1911, when I was elected attorney general of the State and reelected in 1915 for another 4 years. It is the duty of this official to advise State, district, and county officials, boards of supervisors, and municipal officials, and to give opinions to the legislature and members thereof; to represent the State in all of its litigations and act as counsel to the railroad commission, tax commission, and other State agencies. I did all of this and more. I brought suits to keep freight rates reasonable, to provide adequate train service, to keep telephone rates, both long distance and local, reasonable. I prevented gas and electric-light rates from being raised. I kept down the price of schoolbooks, thereby saving thousands of dollars annually to the parents of the school children. I fought for laws to prevent child labor and defended in the courts the laws after they were enacted. I fought to secure the enactment of a law to limit the hours of labor for adults and successfully defended the law in the courts after it was passed. I caused the officials and the directors in two closed banks to pay the depositors in these banks. I upheld, as attorney general, practically all acts affecting the welfare of the people when attacked in court, and the law was enforced with equal vigor against the rich and powerful.

I brought the antitrust suit to divorce the Southern Railway in its ownership of the M. & O. R.R., the Alabama & Vicksburg, the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific, and the Southern Railway in Mississippi. The suit resulted in the sale by the Southern of the Alabama & Vicksburg Railway, the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific, and the Southern in Mississippi. The Mobile & Ohio now operates as an independent line. The people of east Mississippi now enjoy competition in railroad rates and service as a result of this litigation.

I brought an antitrust suit against the Standard Oil Co. and forced this concern to pay a fine of $60,000 to the State because of violation of our antitrust statutes.

I brought a similar suit against the Bell Telephone Co. and forced it to dispose of its ownership of the Western Union Telegraph Co. and to pay a fine of $60,000.

I brought an antitrust suit against the Cottonseed Oil Trust because of monopolistic practice in the purchase of seed from farmers. A sum in excess of $125,000 in fines was collected out of this litigation, and this fine was trivial compared with the millions paid to farmers through increases in the price of seed. The very filing of this suit caused oil mills in the State immediately to increase the price of seed.

I strove to make the office of attorney general one of influence, dignity, and real service to every citizen of the State, and succeeded in my efforts. My friends have been generous enough to say that I was a faithful public servant and made the State one of its best public officials.

After 8 years in this office I voluntarily left it to make the race in 1919 for Governor. Had I had 2 weeks longer I would have been elected to this office. Upon leaving the office of attorney general I entered a contest for Congress from the Fifth District. I was elected and went into office in March 1921. I have been reelected as Representative in Congress continuously every 2 years to date.

As Congressman I have striven to give the people of my district, State, and county the very best service of which I am capable. I have worked diligently night and day and have given my time and talents to familiarizing myself with the manifold duties and responsibilities of a Member of the House and have sought to perform these duties worthily.

I believe I have done well, because my efforts have been measurably successful. I have received increasing proof of having earned the confidence and respect of not only my colleagues in the House and Senate but also of the faithful public servants in all of the executive and administrative offices where a large part of the Government work is transacted.

When one is successful in doing this he becomes an asset to each citizen that has proper business with the Government to transact through such a Member. I am certain that my success in doing much for the citizenry of my district and State is largely attributable to the confidence and esteem of my coworkers in public office. If elected to the United States Senate, I will carry into a larger and broader field the knowledge and good will gained here and devote them to the continued service of the people of my State and country. I am active, energetic, and have many years of service yet ahead of me. I do not have to learn national legislation. I do not have to become familiar with Government departments or learn to know the public officials to whom the interests of our citizens are entrusted. I know the workings of departments now. I know the public officers in them. I do not have to make a reputation in Washington for fair dealing and for constructive service. I have that reputation now.

I do not have to tell you that I believe in forward-looking social legislation. My record is known throughout the country today as a progressive-minded legislator and I am favorably recognized in that field now.

PROFITS IN WAR

When I entered Congress in March 1921 the country was still shocked and shamed by the profiteering that had gone on during the World War. Nearly 30,000 people had made and salted away millions of dollars. They became millionaires over night in selling munitions and supplies to the Government and our Allies, and in selling the necessities of life to our own population at prices which reached in many instances 500 and 600 percent above the normal pre-war prices. There were even companies that made in excess of 3,000 percent. Testimony showed that but for this unpatriotic and unjustified profiteering the war debt would not have been more than one-half of what it actually was. This war debt constitutes a very large proportion of the entire debt of the Federal Government. I therefore busied myself to prevent the recurrence of similar practices in the future. I was one of a small group in the House that understood how to eliminate profiteering during wars. When a bill was finally passed creating a commission to adopt ways and means to prevent such profiteering in any future war, I was made a member of it by the now Vice President of the United States who was then the Democratic leader in the House. I took an active part in its deliberations and filed a special report to Congress suggesting ways and means of preventing these practices in the future.

My report is as follows:

"In compliance with Public Resolution No. 98, I submit for adoption by the Commission the following:

"(1) The establishment of a national economic council.

"The Commission recommends (a) that an advisory economic council shall be established. Its functions shall be to study economic and social conditions of the United States and to formulate policies which will tend to promote cooperation among all the participants in agriculture, industry, and business, and a more just and equitable participation in, and sharing of the fruits of, the Nation's wealth, industry, and economic opportunities by all of the people of the United States; (b) this council shall also cooperate with existing agencies in working out economic policies which may serve to promote peaceful trade relations with other nations; (c) the national economic council shall advise with the economic councils of other nations for the purpose of studying ways and means of carrying on trade and otherwise maintaining international trade relations in the interest of continued peace between nations.

"(2) The recommendation to Congress of the passing of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which reads:

"'ARTICLE —

"'During a war in which the United States is engaged, Congress shall have the power to take private property without compensation therefor.'

"(3) The recommendation to Congress of the passing of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which reads:

"'ARTICLE —

"'The making or renewal of any loan to the government or national of any nation engaged in armed conflict is prohibited, unless the United States is engaged in such conflict as an ally of such nation.

"'Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.'"

GOVERNMENT GUARANTY OF BANK DEPOSITS

During my incumbency as attorney general of Mississippi I advocated and urged the enactment of a law to guarantee depositors in State banks against loss through bank failures. The law was passed; but it has been charged, and perhaps with some measure of right, that it could not be operated successfully because the limited resources of State banks were not sufficient to build up a strong reserve out of which depositors could be paid if a substantial number of banks failed. Upon coming to Congress I felt that if a national law could be passed guaranteeing depositors in National and State banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System that it would restore the confidence of depositors in our banking system. I accordingly set about, along with others interested in the subject, to bring into existence such a law. It took a terrible catastrophe such as the closing of all banks in March 1933 to acquaint the people with the serious need of such legislation. The present Congress enacted the legislation. Its passage is approved not only by the depositors of the banks but by the officers and stockholders as well.

FERTILIZER AND POWER AT MUSCLE SHOALS

As a Member and the chairman of the War Department Appropriation Subcommittee it was my duty to make certain appropriations for the Government-owned hydroelectric power plant at Muscle Shoals. Accordingly I gave freely of my time to a study of the good that could come to our State from the generation of power and the manufacture of fertilizer at this plant. Likewise I made an active fight to preserve that national source of power and other power sites in the Tennessee Valley and its tributaries, for the benefit of the people not only of my own State and neighboring States but of the whole country as well.

With Congressmen Percy Quin, John Rankin, and a small group on the House side, and Senator Norris and a small group on the Senate side, I joined enthusiastically in the fight to prevent these large sources of power from falling into hands of the Power Trust. It was not until President Roosevelt took office that we had any help in the White House. With his help we enacted legislation that marks an epoch in the development of the whole country, sets up a standard for the measurement of power and light rates everywhere, and gives us a practical example of what rural electrification will mean to the people on the farms and in small towns and villages. This will not only save enormous drudgery to the housewife in her ordinary household duties but it will create hundreds of added uses to which electricity will be put at a cost not exceeding that now necessary merely to light an ordinary house. I believe that all of this can be worked out cooperatively by the Tennessee Valley Authority and existing privately owned power companies so as to preserve the public interest and at the same time protect innocent stockholders in existing private companies. Of equal importance to us are the new methods that will be set up for the manufacture of fertilizer. The cost of fertilizer will be reduced by half, and this, too, can be done without destroying the investments of stockholders in existing companies.

LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS

Along with others, I sought to amend the law creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that any person, firm, or corporation conducting private business could get legitimate loans so as to enlarge its business and continue to employ its workers, or perhaps to save itself from collapse. The Wagner-Garner bill undertook to do this, and I supported it. It was vetoed by President Hoover. During this administration similar legislation has been introduced, is now in process of passage, and before this Congress adjourns will become law. Large and small businesses will then be able to finance themselves through a Government agency. This means the creation of another source of credit and the broadening of the class entitled to credit so as to give to business generally the same advantages that are now enjoyed by railroads, insurance companies, public-service corporations, and most other large corporations. Certainly small and medium-sized business deserves the same consideration at the hands of the Government as do the large and powerful concerns.

SPECULATION ON THE COMMODITY EXCHANGES

Everyone knows that one of the chief causes of the financial crash of 1929 was the wild orgy of speculation on the Wall Street exchanges. A large part of the American public was deceived into investing their life savings in stocks. The stocks were forced higher and higher by inside manipulators, and the innocent investors were caught in the financial collapse that followed in 1929. The tragic losses and business paralysis that followed showed that the time had come for the Government to protect its people from similar catastrophes in the future.

A bill to regulate stock exchanges was proposed. It met with opposition by the powerful financial interests who brought pressure to bear on every Member of the Congress. I gave my support to this stock exchange bill. It passed both Houses of Congress at this session. Some of us believe that this bill is not yet perfect and that it will require able and vigorous work on the part of Members of the coming Congress to strengthen it. It is, however, a long step in the right direction.

MONEY

The President of the United States in my opinion acted wisely in exercising the authority vested in him by Congress by taking this country off the gold standard. I have never been particularly concerned about the types of money to be used. It matters not whether gold, silver, or some other metal is used as the standard, for, after all, it is confidence in the Government that counts. I have believed, however, that we do not have sufficient money to supply the needs of Government and business.

Accordingly, I have supported measures seeking to increase the volume of money. In 1926, counting bank deposits which undoubtedly should be classed as money, we had about $22,000,000,000 more money than we have now. We did not have too much then; and if we did not have too much then, we certainly have too little now. Money itself is not a commodity but is a medium of exchange and a measure of value between different articles. We should certainly have enough of it to enable individuals to exchange articles produced by them for articles produced by others. We should not countenance any system that would curb or lessen exchange between individuals.

The money question is far from being solved. It is of vast consequence to every citizen of the United States, and will require the careful thought and study of serious-minded public officials, if it is settled correctly.

LOANS ON RURAL AND URBAN HOMES

One of the greatest tragedies of the depression has been the loss of homes in cities and of homes and farms in the country. High taxes have been responsible for the loss of thousands of them. I have urged the passage of legislation making provisions for loans at very low rates of interest. The Government should likewise provide loans for private business property, so that owners can pay back taxes and insurance and make needed repairs, improvements, and replacements. The repayment of these loans should be made over a long period of years and on the easiest possible terms. While some help has been given to home owners and credit will be given to private businesses, sufficient relief has not yet been provided. For instance, I believe that the interest rate charged to home owners should not exceed 2 percent per annum, so that every impetus will be furnished citizens of this country to become home owners and home builders.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR SCHOOLS

In 1920, when I was first a candidate for Congress, I favored "additional Government aid for public schools, such aid to be expended by and at all times to be under the control of State authorities." I accordingly introduced bills to do this. This year I introduced several bills designed to appropriate $100,000,000 for the purpose of keeping schools open in communities where the States and subdivisions of States were unable to do this for themselves. I proposed an amendment to the Civil Works Administration appropriation that would earmark $50,000,000 of this appropriation for the purpose of keeping the schools open through the session just now closing. As a result Hon. Harry Hopkins, the Civil Works Administrator (and I may say, by way of praise, one of the ablest and most patriotic officials I have ever known), seeing the justness of my proposal, himself allotted out of the Civil Works Administration appropriation, sufficient money to pay the teachers and other school employees in communities of 5,000 population and under throughout the present school year in those States unable to keep schools open in such communities out of the State, county, or municipal funds. Schools in my own State were in a serious plight and about $1,500,000 was supplied for this need.

I have favored legislation to grant financial assistance to schools, colleges, and hospitals so that they may operate and not be closed.

I have introduced other measures in the Congress of benefit to culture, scholarship, and the cause of education, and I have been gratified by the favor with which such proposals have been received in the Congress.

FEDERAL LOANS TO STATES AND SUBDIVISIONS OF STATES

I favored and helped to secure the passage of legislation creating agencies to loan money to States and subdivisions thereof, to construct public buildings, to repair them, and to make needed improvements in the States, counties, and communities. I favored a larger grant by the Federal Government than the 30 percent which is now the maximum grant carried in the Public Works Act. I felt that the Federal Government was financially better able than the States to help its citizens and therefore it should provide at least 50 percent of the cost. I believe that if my idea had been incorporated into law the Public Works Administration would have been more successful than it has been and would have increased employment to a much larger extent than has been done.

EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION

I have felt that the unemployed should be given an opportunity of providing themselves with something on which to live during these terrible times. Accordingly, I have, as a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee, assisted in making adequate appropriations for relief activities. While there is no doubt that much of this money has been wasted, there is also no doubt that it has done great good and has relieved much suffering and distress. I have particularly favored Civil Works employment as opposed to relief because I believe that every man who wants to work should be given an opportunity to work in some useful way. With over 4,000,000 families in the United States now on relief rolls, there can be no turning back. We must either see that these citizens are employed or we must see that they are given some measure of relief. Not that I do not believe in economy, but as long as I am a public official I shall continue to vote public funds for the relief of human suffering and distress.

NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL PLANNING

As one of the two Democratic members of the War Policies Commission, a commission set up to study war-time profiteering and ways and means of eliminating it from war, I submitted to the Congress a report that provided for national and international economic and political planning for the future. My idea was to have two separate and distinct boards of experts created. Such boards to serve without pay, except actual traveling expenses, to be selected from all sections of the country and to represent the professions, the trades, the callings, the industries, and all other important groups' interests. One of these boards would study political and economic questions such as unemployment, agricultural relief, old-age pensions, and other important issues and to report its findings to the Congress for study and consideration. Another board, similarly selected and representing all the same interests throughout the country, would study questions of an international nature, legislation that would assure better trade relations between us and our foreign neighbors, ways and means of avoiding suspicion and bad feelings and generally to cooperate with other similar bodies in other countries and to report findings to the Congress. Neither of these commissions or boards should have any power except to make recommendations to the Congress.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR ROADS

I have urged and voted for all legislation to better our public roads and have voted adequate appropriations of Federal funds for them. I believe that the policy of the Federal Government to pay 50 percent of the cost of the Nation's highways is wrong. Most of the States are now unable to match these funds. The Federal Government should recognize the necessity of building main thoroughfares, and should pay for their construction. I have introduced at this Congress a bill advocating 6 roads east and west across the continent and 3 roads in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction and 3 roads in a northwesterly and southeasterly direction. I hope as a result of the introduction of this bill that something will be worked out in the very near future to carry out this progressive policy of road-building. I will at this session undertake to earmark $400,000,000 of Public Works money to continue road construction throughout the country.

MEASURES AFFECTING AGRICULTURE

I have been particularly concerned about the economic status of the farmer. I have long realized that this class of our citizens do not have the same measure of protection that is accorded to many other classes. I have favored all measures that had the backing of my party and are calculated to improve farm life and to give farmers a better price for their products. I secured for our State ample funds for the setting up of a fruit and vegetable experiment station.

Experimentation is now in process at this station for improving the types and varieties of pecans in their economical and profitable cultivation in Mississippi and other Southern States. Similar experiments are being conducted with summer apples, blue berries, asparagus, strawberries, peaches, figs, tung oil, sugarcane, and the crossing of sugarcane with sorghum so as to produce a better variety of cane in the northern section of the State and country. Many other experiments in the growing of fruits and vegetables are being made. I secured for the State a soil-erosion project and hope to secure at least one more for another section of the State. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have voted adequate funds for the cotton experiment station in the Delta and the State agricultural experiment station at McNeill.

I have supported all measures seeking to reduce the taxes of farmers. I should like to see farms to the extent of $2,000 made tax exempt from ad valorem and other property taxes. I voted for and supported measures calculated to give the farmer better fertilizer at a smaller price, to provide him with electricity to drive his machinery, to pump water to light buildings, and to generally make farm life more attractive.

MILITARY DEFENSE

All sensible people loathe war, just as we loathe disease. More than 75 percent of the expenses of the National Government goes to pay obligations for past wars and to prepare for future ones. The World War, which we were told would be the last, seems to have engendered in the minds of the nations of the world a desire for larger armaments; and now a tremendous race, in preparation for future wars, is in progress. I had hoped that something could be done to stop this mad rush toward another conflagration.

As chairman of the Military Appropriations Subcommittee it is my duty to provide the country with an effective military establishment, and I have done this by providing it with modern and effective instruments of war. The policies that I advocated in this regard, and for which I have been unjustly criticized in the past, are now the accepted policies of the War Department; and our Military Establishment today is infinitely more effective than it has ever been, while appropriations for it have been kept reasonable through the elimination of wasteful practices and obsolete methods and equipment. As chairman of this important committee I have provided the National Guard and other civil components with sufficient funds to meet their needs. I have furnished sufficient funds for the Regular Army. I have been liberal with the Air Corps, because I have always regarded it as one of the most effective branches of the Military Establishment. Eight National Guard units will be established at an early date, and one of these will be located in Mississippi. These units will enable many young men to learn to fly and otherwise qualify themselves as aviators.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

George Washington, our first President, urged the Congress to remember its obligations to our ex-service men and to provide them with some measure of compensation for the sacrifices they made and the injuries they sustained because of their service in the Army and Navy of our country. From that day down to this our Government has recognized this obligation to its service men and while it has not been generous with this class it has recognized its responsibilities and partially met them. Not only our own country but every other country recognizes this obligation. Since I have been a Member of the Congress I have remembered the service that the men have given, and I have voted to repay them with adequate pensions and compensations for disabilities incurred because of war or incidental to it. Moreover, I have favored disability allowance to these men, and my voice and vote have always been heard sponsoring their causes, because I have believed them just.

I favor the payment to them of the adjusted-service compensation, commonly called the "bonus." I feel that it should have been paid in cash, but since it has not, I now favor not only the payment of the balance due in cash but likewise the remittance of the interest on money borrowed by them. I have accordingly introduced a bill to remit the interest on these certificates which has accumulated.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

I have recognized the tremendous burdens of taxpayers. I personally know something of them because, in a modest way, I pay taxes. As attorney general of Mississippi and as a Member of Congress I have always stood for wise economy. When the welfare and prosperity of our citizens are involved and they can be relieved by appropriations, I am for adequate appropriations; but the average citizen does not realize how much money is proposed to be squandered on useless activity, for wasteful purposes, and for needless expense. As a member of the Appropriations Committee and as the chosen representative of the Democratic Party having charge of the Private Calendar, on which is placed all private claims, and also as such representative on the Consent Calendar, on which is placed at one time or another practically all of the legislation that passes the House, I have had an unusual opportunity to prevent worthless legislation and appropriations for wasteful, needless, and extravagant purposes. Mr. RAINEY, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, wrote Miss Hattie Harrison, of Raleigh, Miss., 2 years ago that I had been responsible for saving more money to the Government than any man in the American Congress.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS AND GOVERNMENT UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

For several years I have studied and favored legislation that would give to every person desiring work a job. I believe that such a plan is feasible and workable and could be carried into effect with no great amount of effort and a minimum of expense. I have also favored legislation to provide for unemployment insurance while a way is being formulated. I am likewise for an old-age pension system.

FLOOD CONTROL, RIVERS AND HARBORS

As chairman of the War Department subcommittee I have provided adequate funds for rivers and harbors. Likewise I have appropriated all needed funds for the building of levees along the banks of the Mississippi River and other flood protection for the people living in those sections. Appropriations for these objects are carried in the War Department appropriations bill.

LETTER POSTAGE AND POSTAL AND OTHER GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

I introduced a bill to restore the 2-cent postage for letters. I believe that if such a bill was passed, the receipts of the Post Office Department would be larger than they are now.

I have always favored all measures to give proper mail service to the cities, towns, and rural communities of my State. Likewise, I have been fair and just during my entire congressional service to postal employees and Government employees.

FOREIGN DEBTS

A renewed agitation in favor of the cancelation or the further remittance of the debts of the foreign governments is now being proposed by certain interests in this country. I voted against a partial remittance of these debts when this legislation was before the Congress originally. I am equally opposed now to the further cancelation or scaling down of them.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND SANITATION

Rural sanitation and public-health appropriations were very small when I came to Congress. I believe that adequate appropriations should be made for these objects. I have helped to increase appropriations for the entire Public Health Service. In 1920 when I was first a candidate for Congress I favored "a national system of health and sanitation for the prevention and cure of disease and especially those of a contagious and infectious nature." While I have not been able to carry this entirely into effect, considerable headway has been made in that direction.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

I have been the consistent friend of the Library of Congress, which has become the national library of the people. I was perhaps as much responsible as any person for the acquisition by it of the last Russian Czar's private collection of rare books. Congress passed a bill introduced by me, without a dissenting vote being recorded against it, for the acquisition of the most priceless collection of books of all time, to wit, the Vollbehr collection of 3,000 fifteenth century books, including one of the three perfect copies of the Gutenberg Bible on vellum in existence. This Bible, as is well known, was the first book ever printed, and it is the outstanding book of all times. It constitutes only one of the 3,000 fifteenth century books that was acquired in this purchase which was made by Dr. Putnam, Librarian of the Library of Congress. These great books are a benefit not only to the cause of culture and scholarship but they constitute valuable source material covering that period in our own history when America was discovered, when the Reformation began, and the printing of books was in its infancy.

I have made every effort possible to make our National Law Library one of the best and most workable law libraries in the country. Because of my service in this connection, I have been named vice chairman of the Friends of the Law Library of Congress.

There are other services too numerous to enumerate that I have given not only to the Library of Congress but to the public libraries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. I am such a firm believer in the institution we know as the library that I have proposed legislation that would put a library in every county seat in the United States.

PAY DEPOSITORS IN CLOSED BANKS

The Government owes a debt to the depositors in failed banks that it should discharge. During the Hoover administration, President Hoover and Mr. Mellon, his Secretary of the Treasury, were constantly urging the people, as a patriotic duty, to keep their money in banks. They were assured that banks were safe and were even threatened if funds were withdrawn. Having complied with the demands of these high public officials, an obligation has been incurred by the Government that should be fulfilled. Furthermore, the funds of depositors in open banks were made secure by Government aid and Government guaranty of deposits. Certainly this same protection, even though it may be proportionately larger per dollar of deposits, should be accorded to those unfortunate enough to be depositors in banks that have been closed.

PROTECTING THE WORKERS

Claiming to be a friend of labor is a favorite way of appealing for the votes of the workers. It is often made by political candidates who have never studied industrial and labor problems and have taken no part in the solution of these problems. They act on the belief that the workingman is too ignorant to know who his real friends are. They try to curry favor with the workers by bestowing personal favors, trivial benefits, and empty honors on some of them. They have no knowledge or understanding of the human needs and rights of the great mass of workers.

My knowledge of industrial and labor problems and my efforts to solve them are too well known to need defense. My record speaks for itself. By my studies, my votes, and my active efforts, I have helped to protect the working people of this country. I have done this not only because it is right but because the welfare of every community depends on the conditions of its working class. If they have no money to spend the community is that much poorer. If they are exploited and discontented, industrial peace and prosperity give way to lockouts, strikes, injunctions, and industrial warfare. The prosperity of every community depends largely on the amount of purchasing power in the hands of the workers. Their money circulates in trade. They spend it freely.

The workers have as great a right as any other group to organize and to bargain collectively. They have as much right as any of us to be protected from poverty and injustice and exploitation. They share with all of us the right to enjoy life and to be treated as free and self-respecting citizens.

I have fought to secure and maintain these rights. I have opposed the abuses of injunctions and helped to pass the Norris anti-injunction bill. I have supported legislation that will set up a system of retirement pensions for their workers on the part of the railroads. I have favored the abolition of sweatshops and of industrial child labor. I have upheld the workers' right to a living wage and decent working conditions.

I have stood, and shall continue to stand, for what is just and right for the workers of our country. In doing this I consider that I am rendering a service, not only to them and their families but to society as a whole.

CONCLUSION

I have been rewarded with a remarkable degree of confidence, cooperation, and personal friendship on the part of my fellow Members and other Government officials. I am profoundly grateful for this. I trust that I have also made some mark on the legislative history and progress of my country.

I am now voluntarily leaving the House. I have felt that it was only proper that I should render some account of my 14 years of service there. A man's public usefulness cannot be judged by his political promises. He must stand or fall on the principles for which he has stood, on the things which he has accomplished, and on his record of fair dealing and clean living. His past performance in all these directions is the only guaranty of his future conduct.

I hope to continue in public life in a larger field. I am confident that my experience of 8 years as attorney general and the past 14 years in the House will furnish the largest single contribution to my future usefulness.

I have deep personal appreciation of the confidence reposed in me by the people of my district and State. I assure them of my purpose to continue a life of service, wherever I may be, in whole-hearted devotion to public good.

SUPPLY OF TIN

Mr. O'CONNOR, by direction of the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H.Res. 404, Rept. No. 1849) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 404

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to conduct an investigation of (1) the extent to which the United States is dependent upon foreign nations for its supply of tin; (2) the ownership and control of the tin resources of the world; (3) the possibility of manufacturing the munitions, motors, and other items essential to the national defense and economic welfare of the country without tin, or by the use of any known substitute; (4) the extent to which the nation or nations owning or controlling the tin resources of the world are indebted to the United States for sums due and unpaid; (5) whether acquisition by the United States of foreign tin resources, in fair and mutually agreeable exchange for the debts owing the United States by the nations owning or controlling such resources or otherwise, would improve the present costly and dangerously dependent position of the United States with respect to this matter; and (6) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary legislation.

That said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or any member designated by him and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully defaults, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

PRISON INDUSTRIES BOARD

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill, H.R. 9404.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the engrossed copy be dispensed with.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk read the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 277, nays 57, not voting 96, as follows:

I think this statement should be made to explain their not voting on this roll call.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. TARVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report (Rept. No. 1856) from the Committee on Rules (H.Res. 410) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 410

Resolved, That during the remainder of the second session of the Seventy-third Congress it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; it shall also be in order at any time during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress for the majority leader to move that the House take a recess, and said motion is hereby made of the highest privilege; and it shall also be in order at any time during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress to consider reports from the Committee on Rules, as provided in clause 45, rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider said reports is hereby suspended during the remainder of this session of Congress.

During the reading of the resolution the following occurred:

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman over there ought to hear all this resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Under the rules, no report from the Committee on Rules can be brought up without a two-thirds vote of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the reading of the resolution should be concluded before any point of order can be made against it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is sustained. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House now consider the resolution?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the roll call cannot be interrupted.

Mr. McLEOD. The roll call has not yet started.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will state the point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. I make the point of order that this roll call is not in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a roll call cannot be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will state his point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. I make the point of order that this roll call is not in order, because there has not been a chance to even explain the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the question of consideration is not debatable. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 243, nays 92, not voting 96, as follows:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to object to the pairs. As announced, the pairs have been read as one against one, and they should have been paired and read two against one.

The SPEAKER. These are general pairs.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the——

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. The gentleman should state his point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am proceeding to state the point of order, if I may proceed.

I realize, as I started to say, that the report of the committee was read, but it was read before the House voted to consider it. No one has a right to send a paper to the desk and have it read out of order, and the question of the consideration of this report of the committee had not at that time been carried by a two-thirds vote. Since the vote of the House there have been no intervening proceedings except that the gentleman from Alabama started to make a speech. There has been no division of time; there has been no report of the committee to the House, and up to this moment I do not think the gentleman properly has the floor. I think that orderly procedure requires that the report of the committee should be presented after the House has voted to consider it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have been recognized by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported by the gentleman from Alabama from the Committee on Rules was read before the motion to consider it was agreed to. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as I started to say, it has developed that it is manifestly necessary, in view of what has taken place upon the floor of the House today and what undoubtedly is contemplated to be the action of the minority in the future as far as this session is concerned, that the Democratic Party, which is clothed with the power and authority to conduct legislation upon the floor of this House, should exercise its privilege and its power to carry through the program of this administration and to enact laws for the benefit of the American people. [Applause.]

If it had not been for the developments upon the floor to which I have referred, the evident intention of the minority with reference to the future, it would not have been necessary for the majority party to have invoked the instrumentality of this rule. [Applause.] It developed, of course, that there was a prolonged—I do not know whether it was quite justified—filibuster from the standpoint of the gentlemen on the other side. It has become apparent that the time has come when the Democratic Party should take charge of this House and of its legislation, and to stop filibusters of this character. [Applause.]

The main purpose of the rule that has been presented is to stop this form of procedure. I want to give the assurance to all the Members that the rule does not take away from the majority of this House in any respect the right to control the activities of the House; and in view of the necessities which compelled us to present this resolution, I appeal to all Democrats to vote for the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. I ask for a division of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution cannot be divided under the rule. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MAPES. Will the Speaker listen to a statement on that for a moment? My point of order is that there are three distinct substantive propositions in this resolution, and I ask for a division of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule. The rule states:

> Any motion or resolution to elect the members or any portion of the members of the standing committees of the House and the joint standing committees shall not be divisible, nor shall any resolution or order reported by the Committee on Rules providing a special order of business be divisible.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard briefly on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Speaker overlooks entirely the last clause of the sentence which he read.

The rule says:

> On the demand of any Member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away, a substantive proposition shall remain.

This resolution contains three distinct, substantive propositions. It authorizes the Speaker to recognize anyone at any time during the rest of this session to make a motion to suspend the rules. It also authorizes the Rules Committee to call up a report at any time without waiting a day after the report is submitted. It further authorizes the majority leader to offer a motion to recess at any time. Therefore, there are three distinct, substantive propositions in this resolution.

The proviso in the rule reads:

> Provided, That any motion to elect the members or any portion of the members of the standing committees of the House and the joint standing committees shall not be divisible—

Certainly that is not included in this resolution—

> nor shall any resolution or order reported by the Committee on Rules providing a special order of business be divisible.

This is not a rule from the Committee on Rules providing for a special order of business. This is a report from the Committee on Rules to change the rules in a very substantive manner.

I have before me a decision of Speaker Gillett which he made on January 30, 1923, in a case where the Committee on Rules made a report bringing up two different matters which came over from the Senate in the same resolution. A point of order was made, asking for a division, and the point of order was raised that it being a report from the Committee on Rules the matter was not divisible. The Speaker in rendering his decision said:

> The Chair finds that there is a precedent for dividing the rule, although at first blush the Chair would have thought that the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders] was correct; therefore, the Chair thinks that this is divisible, and the vote will first come upon the portion of the rule which applies to Joint Resolution No. 12. The question is on that portion of the resolution applying to Senate Joint Resolution No. 12.

It seems to me that the rule and the precedents clearly entitle the House to a division of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The matter is perfectly clear. This rule was first adopted in 1789 and was amended in 1837. The gentleman may find a number of precedents along the line he is discussing, which were made prior to the Seventy-third Congress. This rule, however, was amended last on May 3, 1933, by including this language:

> Nor shall any resolution or order reported by the Committee on Rules providing a special order of business be divisible.

This amendment to the rule was made for the express purpose of reaching the question which the gentleman now propounds, as will be clearly shown by the debates which occurred when the amendment to the rule was discussed. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary inquiry is, after the adoption of this rule will 148 Members present continue to be a quorum in the place of 218?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have demanded the yeas and nays on the previous question on two or three occasions.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if a Member does not have a right to demand the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, the gentleman has the right to demand the yeas and nays. Does the gentleman now demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLEOD. A vote in the affirmative on the question is against the petition to discharge that was signed yesterday?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 90, not voting 103, as follows:

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I qualify and vote "no."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the right of the gentleman from Kansas to vote. The gentleman was not in the room when his name was called, because I took particular pains to look.

Mr. McGUGIN. I was not in the room when my name was called?

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] in the Chamber, listening, when his name should have been called?

Mr. McGUGIN. I thought I was here when my name was called, otherwise I would not have voted.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Chamber listening during the roll call?

Mr. McGUGIN. I was not in the room during the entire roll call. I was called out to answer the telephone.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman was not in the room at the time his name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must have been in the room when his name should have been called in order to qualify.

Mr. McGUGIN. All right; I will withdraw the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I qualify and vote "yea."

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I request the Speaker to call upon the Member to state publicly he was in the room when his name was called; otherwise the gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. SIROVICH. I qualify, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the Speaker has not yet propounded the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked the gentleman if he qualified and he answered in the affirmative, and the Chair has the utmost confidence in the veracity of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McGUGIN. I do not question his veracity, but I insist on the rule being applied.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has qualified.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. RANKIN. I am sorry. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called Mr. RAINEY's name, and he voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 241, nays 92, answered "present" 1, not voting 97, as follows:

THE COMMUNICATIONS BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H.Res. 411, Rept. No. 1861) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 411

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3285, an act to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute amendment and any other amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and such substitute, for the purpose of amendment, shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN REAL-ESTATE PRACTICES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H.Res. 412, Rept. No. 1861) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 412

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint a committee of seven Members of the House to investigate the methods of organization, the activities, and practices of real estate "reorganization" or "bondholders" committees, or similar or other groups, by use of the mails or otherwise, to determine whether misrepresentation or unfairness have been practiced in acquiring or representing such securities, in assessing expenses against the bondholders, and disposing of or managing the properties by such committees, trustees, receivers, or other persons against which the securities were issued as liens, and in the employment of attorneys or other persons, or in failing to adequately report to said security owners, and in what manner the rights and equities of bondholders and owners can be protected against undue and unjustified loss upon their investment. The committee shall report to the Congress as soon as practicable the results of its study together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of this resolution, the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places in the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books and documents, to administer such oaths, and take such testimony as it deems necessary and advisable.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF VETERANS

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H.Res. 409) (Report No. 1859) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 409

Resolved, That the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the House of Representatives, or a subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the method and manner of handling of funds and the financial affairs of the veterans receiving money as compensation or pensions from the United States Government while under guardianship and subject to the supervision of the United States Veterans' Administration; the losses to the estates of such veterans from negligence, neglect, or misappropriation of funds by guardians and/or conservators; and the manner and method of appointing said guardians, conservators, or other persons; the losses sustained by such veterans while under guardians by reason of the sale of worthless securities by the guardians to such wards; the responsibility for the mishandling of the estates of veterans under guardians; the adequacy of guardians' bonds, as provided under the regulations of the Veterans' Administration; and all other questions in relation to the estates of such veterans as are under guardians and receiving compensation, pensions, or other money or things of value from the Government of the United States by reason of veterans' legislation that would aid the Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

The committee shall report to the House not later than January 10, 1935, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

That said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act at such time and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise to take such testimony. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or any member designated by him, and shall be served on any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader what will be the program for the rest of the afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] will call up the conference report on the stock exchange bill. As the gentleman knows, we have an evening session.

Mr. SNELL. And that will be the last thing before the recess?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

INTERNATIONAL DEBTS (H.DOC. NO. 392)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my address to the Congress January 3 I stated that I expected to report later in regard to debts owed the Government and people of this country by the governments and people of other countries. There has been no formal communication on the subject from the Executive since President Hoover's message of December 19, 1932.

The developments are well known, having been announced to the press as they occurred. Correspondence with debtor governments has been made public promptly and is available in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is, however, timely to review the situation.

Payments on the indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States which fell due in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, were postponed on the proposal of President Hoover announced June 20, 1931, and authorized by the joint resolution of Congress approved December 23, 1931. Yugoslavia alone suspended payment while rejecting President Hoover's offer of postponement.

In the 6 months of July to December 1932, which followed the end of the Hoover moratorium year, payments of $125,000,000 from 12 governments fell due. Requests to postpone the payments due December 15, 1932, were received from Great Britain, France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Poland. The replies made on behalf of President Hoover through the Department of State declined these requests, generally stating that it was not in the power of the Executive to grant them, and expressing a willingness to cooperate with the debtor government in surveying the entire situation. After such correspondence, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Great Britain, Italy, Latvia, and Lithuania met their contractual obligations, while Belgium, Estonia, France, and Poland made no payment.

In a note of December 11, 1932, after the United States had declined to sanction postponement of the payment due December 15, the British Government, in announcing its decision to make payment of the amount due on December 15, made the following important statement:

For reasons which have already been placed on record His Majesty's Government are convinced that the system of intergovernmental payments in respect of the war debts as it existed prior to Mr. Hoover's initiative on June 20, 1931, cannot be revived without disaster. Since it is agreed that the whole subject should be reexamined between the United States and the United Kingdom, this fundamental point need not be further stressed here.

In the view of His Majesty's Government therefore, the payment to be made on December 15 is not to be regarded as a resumption of the annual payments contemplated by the existing agreement. It is made because there has not been time for discussion with regard to that agreement to take place and because the United States Government have stated that in their opinion such a payment would greatly increase the prospects of a satisfactory approach to the whole question.

His Majesty's Government propose accordingly to treat the payment on December 15 as a capital payment of which account should be taken in any final settlement and they are making arrangements to effect this payment in gold as being in the circumstances least prejudicial of the methods open to them.

This procedure must obviously be exceptional and abnormal, and His Majesty's Government desire to urge upon the United States Government the importance of an early exchange of views with the object of concluding the proposed discussion before June 15 next in order to obviate a general break-down of the existing intergovernmental agreements.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, replied to this note on the same day that acceptance by the Secretary of the Treasury of funds tendered in payment of the December 15 installment cannot constitute approval of or agreement to any condition or declaration of policy inconsistent with the terms of the agreement inasmuch as the Executive has no power to amend or to alter those terms either directly or by implied commitment.

No payment was made by France December 15, 1932, as the French Chamber of Deputies, by a vote on the morning of December 14, refused authorization to make the payment. The resolution voted by the French Chamber at that time invited the French Government to convoke as soon as possible, in agreement with Great Britain and other debtors, a general conference for the purpose of adjusting all international obligations and putting an end to all international transfers for which there is no compensating transaction. The resolution stated that the chamber, despite legal and economic considerations, would have authorized settlement had the United States been willing to agree in advance to the convening of the conference for these purposes.

This resolution of the French Chamber is to be read in relation with the public statements of policy made by President Hoover and by myself on November 23, 1932. President Hoover said:

The United States Government from the beginning has taken the position that it would deal with each of the debtor governments separately, as separate and distinct circumstances surrounded each case. Both in the making of the loans and in the subsequent settlements with the different debtors, this policy has been rigidly made clear to every foreign government concerned.

I said:

I find myself in complete accord with the four principles discussed in the conference between the President and myself yesterday and set forth in a statement which the President has issued today.

These debts were actual loans made under distinct understanding and with the intention that they would be repaid.

In dealing with the debts each government has been and is to be considered individually, and all dealings with each government are independent of dealings with any other debtor government. In no case should we deal with the debtor governments collectively.

Debt settlements made in each case take into consideration the capacity to pay of the individual debtor nations.

The indebtedness of the various European nations to our Government has no relations whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them.

Of the $125,000,000 due and payable December 15, 1932, the Treasury received $98,750,000, of which $95,550,000 was the British payment made subsequent to the above correspondence, and the other $3,000,000 represented payments by five other debtor nations. The amounts due from Belgium, Estonia, France, Hungary, and Poland which were not received amounted to $25,000,000, of which $19,260,000 was due and payable by France.

In my statement issued November 23, 1932, I had said:

I firmly believe in the principle that an individual debtor should at all times have access to the creditor; that he should have opportunity to lay facts and representations before the creditor; and that the creditor always should give courteous, sympathetic, and thoughtful consideration to such facts and representations.

This is a rule essential to the preservation of the ordinary relationships of life. It is a basic obligation of civilization. It applies to nations as well as to individuals.

The principle calls for a free access by the debtor to the creditor. Each case should be considered in the light of the conditions and necessities peculiar to the case of each nation concerned.

On January 20, 1933, President Hoover and I agreed upon the following statement:

The British Government has asked for a discussion of the debts. The incoming administration will be glad to receive their representative early in March for this purpose. It is, of course, necessary to discuss at the same time the world economic problems in which the United States and Great Britain are mutually interested, and therefore that representatives should also be sent to discuss ways and means for improving the world situation.

On March 4, 1933, the situation with regard to the indebtedness of other governments to the United States was, in brief, as follows:

France: The French Parliament had refused to permit payment of $19,261,432.50 interest due on the $3,863,650,000 bonds of France owned by the United States.

Great Britain: With respect to the British bonded debt held by the Treasury in the principal amount of $4,368,000,000, Great Britain in meeting a due payment of $30,000,000 principal and $65,550,000 interest had stated that the payment was not to be regarded as a resumption of the annual payments contemplated under the funding agreement of June 19, 1923, but was to be treated, so far as the British Government was concerned, as a capital payment of which account should be taken in any final settlement.

Italy: With respect to the $2,004,900,000 principal amount of bonds of the Italian Government held by the United States Treasury, the Italian Government had paid the sum of $1,245,437 interest due December 15, 1932; but in doing so it referred to a resolution of the Grand Council of Fascism, adopted December 5, 1932, in which "a radical solution of the 'sponging of the slate' type was declared to be necessary for the world's economic recovery."

Czechoslovakia, in making a payment of $1,500,000 principal due December 15, 1932, on its debt of $165,000,000, had stated that "this payment constitutes in the utmost self-denial of the Czechoslovak people their final effort to meet the obligation under such extremely unfavorable circumstances."

Belgium had declined to pay $2,125,000 interest due December 15, 1932, on its bonds of $400,680,000, held by the Treasury of the United States, and in doing so had cited circumstances which it stated, "prevent it from resuming, on December 15, the payments which were suspended by virtue of the agreements made in July 1931", adding, "Belgium is still disposed to collaborate fully in seeking a general settlement of intergovernmental debts and of the other problems arising from the depression."

Poland had not paid the $232,000 principal and $3,070,980 interest due December 15, 1932, on its bond in the principal amount of $206,057,000 held by the Treasury of the United States.

Of the nine other governments whose bonds are held by the Treasury of the United States, Estonia and Hungary had not met payments due December 15, 1932.

Austria is availing itself of a contractual right to postpone payments.

Greece was making only partial payments on its foreign bonded indebtedness, including that held by the United States.

Yugoslavia had declined to sign any Hoover moratorium agreement and had stopped paying.

No payment by Rumania had fallen due since the close of the Hoover moratorium.

Finland, Latvia, and Lithuania were current in their payments.

Although I had informal discussions concerning the British debt with the British Ambassador even before March 4, 1933, and in April there was further discussion of the subject with the Prime Minister of Great Britain and between experts of the two Governments, it was not possible to reach definitive conclusions. On June 13 the British Government gave notice that in the then existing circumstances it was not prepared to make the payment due June 15, 1933, but would make an immediate payment of $10,000,000 as an acknowledgment of the debt pending a final settlement. To this notice reply was made by the Acting Secretary of State, pointing out that it is not within the discretion of the President to reduce or cancel the existing debt owed to the United States nor to alter the schedule of debt payments contained in the existing settlement. At the same time I took occasion to announce that in view of the representations of the British Government, the accompanying acknowledgment of the debt itself, and the payment made, I had no personal hesitation in saying that I would not characterize the resultant situation as a default. In view of the suggestion of the expressed desire of the British Government to make representations concerning the debt, I suggested that such representations be made in Washington as soon as convenient.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, had authorized the President for a period of 6 months from that date to accept silver in payment of installments due from any foreign government, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed a price of 50 cents an ounce. In the payments due June 15, 1933, the Governments of Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Italy, Lithuania, and Rumania took advantage of this offer.

On June 15, 1933, payments of about $144,000,000 were due from foreign governments, the larger amounts being about $76,000,000 from Great Britain, almost $41,000,000 from France, and $13,500,000 from Italy. The amounts actually paid into the Treasury were $11,374,000, of which $10,000,000 was paid by Great Britain and $1,000,000 by Italy. Communications were received from most of the debtor governments asking a discussion of the debt question with the United States Government.

In October 1933 representatives of the British Government arrived in Washington and conferred for some weeks with representatives of this Government. These discussions made clear the existing difficulties and the discussions were adjourned.

The British Government then stated that it continued to acknowledge the debt without prejudicing its right again to present the matter of readjustment, and that it would express this acknowledgment tangibly by a payment of $7,500,000 on December 15. In announcing this I stated that in view of the representations, of the payment, and of the impossibility of accepting at that time any of the proposals for a readjustment of the debt, I had no personal hesitation in saying that I should not regard the British Government as in default.

On December 15, 1933, there was due and payable by foreign governments on their debt-funding agreements and Hoover moratorium agreements a total of about $153,000,000. The payments actually received were slightly less than $9,000,000, including $7,500,000 paid by Great Britain, $1,000,000 by Italy, and about $230,000 by Finland.

At the present time Finland remains the only foreign government which has met all payments on its indebtedness to the United States punctually and in full.

It is a simple fact that this matter of the repayment of debts contracted to the United States during and after the World War has gravely complicated our trade and financial relationships with the borrowing nations for many years.

These obligations furnished vital means for the successful conclusion of a war which involved the national existence of the borrowers, and later for a quicker restoration of their normal life after the war ended.

The money loaned by the United States Government was in turn borrowed by the United States Government from the people of the United States, and our Government in the absence of payment from foreign governments is compelled to raise the shortage by general taxation of its own people in order to pay off the original Liberty bonds and the later refunding bonds.

It is for these reasons that the American people have felt that their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations. The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors but are nevertheless in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts.

We shall continue to expect the debtors on their part to show full understanding of the American attitude on this debt question. The people of the debtor nations will also bear in mind the fact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources—whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt owed to the citizens of the United States or for purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditure or like purposes.

In presenting this report to you, I suggest that in view of all existing circumstances no legislation at this session of the Congress is either necessary or advisable.

I can only repeat that I have made it clear to the debtor nations again and again that "the indebtedness to our Government has no relation whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them", and that each individual nation has full and free opportunity individually to discuss its problem with the United States.

We are using every means to persuade each debtor nation as to the sacredness of the obligation and also to assure them of our willingness, if they should so request, to discuss frankly and fully the special circumstances relating to means and method of payment.

Recognizing that the final power lies with the Congress, I shall keep the Congress informed from time to time and make such new recommendations as may later seem advisable.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1934.

[Applause.]

MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a Memorial Day address by my colleague [Mr. HEALEY].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following Memorial Day address of my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. HEALEY:

Comrade Commander, comrades of the Grand Army, comrades of the Spanish-American War, my comrades of the World War, ladies, and gentlemen, I am deeply appreciative of the kind invitation of my friend, the venerable commander, one of the most distinguished survivors of the Civil War, to speak here today.

Today, throughout the land, in all our splendid cities, in every town, village, and hamlet, Americans pause to observe another Memorial Day. And it is reassuring for the future of our country to know that in the busy strife for existence, and the terrible stress of the times, we can lay aside the material things of life to pause in reverent remembrance to honor those veterans of our armed forces who have answered the last call of their great Commander in Chief.

In instituting the great custom of Memorial Day in 1868 General Logan said, "It is our purpose to inaugurate this observance with the hope that it will be kept from year to year while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of the departed." How faithfully the veterans of the Civil War have honored this request and kept this trust will be freely attested by those of the generations of Americans who have lived during the lifetime of the veterans of that great struggle. And as the last of the old comrades muster out and fall in with the ranks of that silent army, when the roll of the drum beats its last tattoo and shall fall upon no familiar ears—yet we shall still remember and observe and commemorate this day—for we commemorate not alone the memory of those who have died but it is also a day upon which we consecrate ourselves anew to the living spirit of those who have died.

Later generations of Americans, rightfully impressed with the full significance of this day, will keep the campfires burning and hold high the torch of liberty, for which the veterans of all our wars have fought and bled and died and have passed on to us that we may keep it ever flaming bright.

Although this day was originally set aside in memory of the departed comrades of the Civil War, it has now so developed itself as to embrace a Nation-wide tribute to all those heroes who have laid down their lives or fought for our common country and have now passed on to their just reward.

So today while in accordance with hallowed custom, we decorate the graves of the hero dead with garlands of flowers, and pay tribute with swinging march and martial music to their valor, let us not forget that in the words of the immortal Lincoln, speaking seventy-odd years ago upon the battlefield of Gettysburg, "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here but it can never forget what they did here"—let us never, I repeat, forget the fact that by any sonorous phrase, or mighty pageantry, we can neither add nor detract from the greatness of their achievement or its undying glory.

When the last member of the Grand Army has passed away, and when the last veteran of our last war has joined his comrades of all wars in another land—when the granite shaft at Bunker Hill, and all our great monuments and memorials commemorative of our battles and our war heroes have succumbed to the ravages of time—the history and lessons of our great wars will still live on; for in them is contained the source and wellspring of patriotic inspiration, the foundation and strength for the many generations of Americans yet unborn.

This day is not, therefore, entirely reserved to honor and commemorate the dead but, in the theme of the undying address of Lincoln at Gettysburg, should mark the rededication of Americans to the principles and ideals for which their brave men fought and died. Today as we pause from our busy activities the whole drama of our American life and progress as a nation passes before us in review. Our development as a nation has been so inseparably bound with our great wars as to mark the various epochs or cycles in our economic and social progress.

The Revolutionary War won us our existence as a nation; the Civil War ratified it and confirmed it in blood; the Spanish-American War proved that we were willing to fight for the extension of the principles of freedom to the oppressed peoples of the American Hemisphere; the World War emphasized the purity of these motives, and evidenced to the world that Americans were willing to die that our ideals and principles in Government might be disseminated throughout the world. Economically, these great contests had a profound effect upon the Nation and its people, uprooting old ideas and changing time-worn customs.

The period of uncertainty that followed the Revolutionary War under the Articles of Confederation was indeed a time of trial and difficulty; the reconstruction period after the Civil War, which gave rise to sectional hatreds and jealousies, required, for the sake of a strong and united Nation, the elimination of those corrosive and destructive passions and the reestablishment and reaffirmation of the great American principles of liberty, equality, and justice. After the Spanish-American War we embarked in a great effort to extend those principles. And now, in the period following the World War, we are engaged in a great program of reconstruction, social and economic, to overcome the disastrous effects of that appalling struggle. All these periods have to a marked degree tremendously influenced the customs and habits of the American people.

So, today, in reviewing the progress and achievements of the past, the glories and sacrifices of those who have gone before, the faith, courage, and determination, and the will to endure of our forefathers—all these wars and periods weld into one continuous stream borne by the insuperable spirit of the American people to preserve and safeguard, even to the death, the great principles of the Republic. Permanently inscribed in the Declaration of Independence this spirit and these principles have survived for over 200 years and are still vital and undiminished in our people today.

Indeed, how appropriate today, how pertinently applicable are the words of Lincoln, spoken over 70 years ago: "It is for us the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be dedicated to the task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion, that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this Nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth." And how prophetic were his words, for the American people today are having a new birth of freedom.

The strength of a government is no greater than the strength of its people, so spoke Grover Cleveland; its power and force are no greater than that which is imbued in it by the devotion, patriotism, self-sacrifice, and loyalty of its citizens. A government is constituted for the common good of the people. It is created to enhance and increase the benefits which are derived from individual action and personal effort. The Government can harmonize the interests of all its individuals and attain ends through concerted and harmonious action which individual effort could not attain. It can preserve the peace that we may work more effectively, unhampered by fear of violence to our persons and property. It can promote the general welfare and morals of the people that the people in general may be enlightened. It can build roads and establish libraries that we may derive the benefits from a common undertaking that we could never have from individual enterprise. It can maintain armies and navies that our internal security may be insured and that we may be free from apprehension of invasion from a foreign foe. All these things a government can and should do.

But a government fundamentally rests upon the aggregate of persons who form its citizenry. A government cannot have an assured existence without having within its realms a rugged and patriotic body of individuals. The government must depend upon the individuals for its support, maintenance, and perpetuation. But the individuals cannot depend forever upon the government for their sustenance, although in times of great national emergency such as the present, when the individuals are denied, because of chaotic economic conditions, an opportunity to pursue gainful employment, the duty of a government to draw upon its reserve power to render assistance to these individuals, to the end that there shall not be suffering, starvation and privation, is perfectly clear.

We have just been through a period, following the World War, of prosperity that was abnormal, inflated, and unnatural. The resulting depression, which came from the bursting of the bubble, was so severe and terrible that our Government was on the verge of destruction. In the mad scramble for excessive profits and material wealth, the ideal of our fathers of gain through merit and accomplishment, and the dignity of reward commensurate only with work, gave place to an unnatural desire for profits without desert and wealth without achievement. Wild speculation was rife and unscrupulous; money changers exploited the hysterical psychology of the times for their own gain. They fostered and encouraged this destructive ideal, to the end that they might reap profits thereby. Money and material wealth became the sole end of endeavor. The realization of social values completely disappeared. The world forgot the joy of achievement and the thrill of creative effort. It is only natural that, with so inhuman an end as the goal of all activity, the means to the end should adhere to even more ignoble practices. It was the inevitable result that there should be a great class of persons exploited and that eventually wealth should be concentrated into the hands of a few while the great mass of people were deprived of what was their due. Along with that, corruption became rife in political office. In the mad hysteria the citizenry of our Nation, who should be eternally vigilant that the integrity of their Government should be maintained, not only permitted but fostered such corruption through their negligence, and freedom itself, while boasting of liberty, was clanking in chains—the chains of special privilege and political corruption. Finally, when the frail fundaments cracked, the whole structure came tumbling down, plunging us into misery and privation. Man had forgotten his irrevocable duties to himself, to his fellow man, and to his God. When the resultant chaos came, he searched again, in the desolation and ruins for the fundamental principles of human equity. Chastened, he looked for leadership and found none, for privilege and donned the habiliments of authority.

But Divine Providence, that Providence to which the forefathers looked and in which they placed their trust did not betray him. On March the 4th of last year, when we were sunk in the depths of despair, a great leader, Franklin D. Roosevelt, arose and succeeded to the Presidency of the United States. In his inaugural address he said, "This is preeminently the time to speak the truth, the whole truth, frankly and boldly. Nor need we shrink from honestly facing conditions of our country today. This great Nation will endure, as it has endured, will revive, and will prosper. In every dark hour of our life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory. I am convinced that you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days."

Comrades and friends, more than half a century elapsed between the addresses of both of these great leaders of America, Lincoln and Roosevelt. Both of them spoke at a time when the Nation faced a most severe crisis and danger lay within our borders. How ably did they express the eternal spirit of Americans—a spirit that has endured and will continue to endure.

We are still faced with the great foe of depression but the firm grip of the enemy has somewhat relaxed, the dark clouds of despair are giving away and the sunlight of hope and confidence is shining through.

Realizing now, that our form of government was dangerously tottering, that the free institutions for which our forefathers struggled and the brave heroes whose memories we honor today fought and bled, was perilously near falling, that our Government, in the words of Lincoln, was severely tested, as to whether a nation so conceived and so dedicated to principles of individual liberty could really endure much longer. Our Nation has met that test again.

Our task is now to rebuild and strengthen those institutions, to reawaken the responsibilities of our citizens, to renew the faith and courage that our forefathers possessed, to muster the combined aid of every agency of the Government, all its powers—to summon its entire resources and combine and coordinate all these forces in a continued war on the depression. In this fight we have had and we must continue to have the best brains of our Nation, the most courageous fighters, the stoutest hearts, and the confidence and utmost cooperation of all our citizens. We must build anew; we must eliminate the evils of the past, not merely to effectuate a temporary relief but to pass on to generations to come this great and generous heritage willed to us by the founders of this Nation. To this summons to arms I know that all those who have served the armed forces of our country and their sons and daughters will readily respond. America's great social problems must be solved and solved permanently; we must not have suffering and starvation in the midst of plenty. Selfishness and greed must give way in this great struggle; and all of us now, more clearly than at any stage of our national existence, recognizing our interdependence one upon the other, must rededicate ourselves today to the great task of the moment.

The heroic dead demand no less. For that was the America they fought and died for—an America where men would find a haven from oppression, where the many would not be exploited for the selfish few; an America that would not tolerate starvation and privation; an America that safeguarded the rights of property, but is not forgetful that she enshrined forever in her Declaration of Independence that every individual is entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, free from the exactions of greed and the shackles of economic tyranny.

So when the time comes for us to pass on to those who shall succeed us that which they whose memory we honor today fought and conserved for us we can truly say in the words of Kathryn Lee Bates, in the mighty lines of America the Beautiful:

O beautiful for patriots dream,
That see beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam,
Undimmed by human tears.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 8479) to promote resumption of industrial activity, increase employment, and restore confidence by fulfillment of the implied guaranty by the United States Government of deposit safety in national banks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. What is the order of business?

Mr. RAYBURN. I supposed the order of business was to take up the conference report on the stock exchange bill.

Mr. FIESINGER. Very well. I will defer my request.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I. REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the 'Securities Exchange Act of 1934.'

"NECESSITY FOR REGULATION AS PROVIDED IN THIS TITLE

"SEC. 2. For the reasons hereinafter enumerated, transactions in securities as commonly conducted upon securities exchanges and over-the-counter markets are affected with a national public interest which makes it necessary to provide for regulation and control of such transactions and of practices and matters related thereto, including transactions by officers, directors, and principal security holders, to require appropriate reports, and to impose requirements necessary to make such regulation and control reasonably complete and effective, in order to protect interstate commerce, the national credit, the Federal taxing power, to protect and make more effective the national banking system and the Federal Reserve System, and to insure the maintenance of fair and honest markets in such transactions:

"(1) Such transactions (a) are carried on in large volume by the public generally and in large part originate outside the States in which the exchanges and over-the-counter markets are located and/or are effected by means of the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce; (b) constitute an important part of the current of interstate commerce; (c) involve in large part the securities of issuers engaged in interstate commerce; (d) involve the use of credit, directly affect the financing of trade, industry, and transportation in interstate commerce, and directly affect and influence the volume of interstate commerce; and affect the national credit.

"(2) The prices established and offered in such transactions are generally disseminated and quoted throughout the United States and foreign countries and constitute a basis for determining and establishing the prices at which securities are bought and sold, the amount of certain taxes owing to the United States and to the several States by owners, buyers, and sellers of securities, and the value of collateral for bank loans.

"(3) Frequently the prices of securities on such exchanges and markets are susceptible to manipulation and control, and the dissemination of such prices gives rise to excessive speculation, resulting in sudden and unreasonable fluctuations in the prices of securities which (a) cause alternately unreasonable expansion and unreasonable contraction of the volume of credit available for trade, transportation, and industry in interstate commerce, (b) hinder the proper appraisal of the value of securities and thus prevent a fair calculation of taxes owing to the United States and to the several States by owners, buyers, and sellers of securities, and (c) prevent the fair valuation of collateral for bank loans and/or obstruct the effective operation of the national banking system and Federal Reserve System.

"(4) National emergencies, which produce wide-spread unemployment and the dislocation of trade, transportation, and industry, and which burden interstate commerce and adversely affect the general welfare, are precipitated, intensified, and prolonged by manipulation and sudden and unreasonable fluctuations of security prices and by excessive speculation on such exchanges and markets, and to meet such emergencies the Federal Government is put to such great expense as to burden the national credit.

"DEFINITIONS AND APPLICATION OF TITLE

"SEC. 3. (a) When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(1) The term 'exchange' means any organization, association, or group of persons, whether incorporated or unincorporated, which constitutes, maintains, or provides a market place or facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities or for otherwise performing with respect to securities the functions commonly performed by a stock exchange as that term is generally understood, and includes the market place and the market facilities maintained by such exchange.

"(2) The term 'facility' when used with respect to an exchange includes its premises, tangible or intangible property whether on the premises or not, any right to the use of such premises or property or any service thereof for the purpose of effecting or reporting a transaction on an exchange (including, among other things, any system of communication to or from the exchange, by ticker or otherwise, maintained by or with the consent of the exchange), and any right of the exchange to the use of any property or service.

"(3) The term 'member', when used with respect to an exchange, means any person who is permitted either to effect transactions on the exchange without the services of another person acting as broker, or to make use of the facilities of an exchange for transactions thereon without payment of a commission or fee or with the payment of a commission or fee which is less than that charged the general public, and includes any firm transacting a business as broker or dealer of which a member is a partner, and any partner of any such firm.

"(4) The term 'broker' means any person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others, but does not include a bank.

"(5) The term 'dealer' means any person engaged in the business of buying and selling securities for his own account, through a broker or otherwise, but does not include a bank, or any person insofar as he buys or sells securities for his own account, either individually or in some fiduciary capacity, but not as a part of a regular business.

"(6) The term 'bank' means (A) a banking institution organized under the laws of the United States (B) a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, (C) any other banking institution, whether incorporated or not, doing business under the laws of any State or of the United States, a substantial portion of the business of which consists of receiving deposits or exercising fiduciary powers similar to those permitted to national banks under section 11 (k) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, and which is supervised and examined by State or Federal authority having supervision over banks, and which is not operated for the purpose of evading the provisions of this title, and (D) a receiver, conservator, or other liquidating agent of any institution or firm included in clauses (A), (B), or (C) of this paragraph.

"(7) The term 'director' means any director of a corporation or any person performing similar functions with respect to any organization, whether incorporated or unincorporated.

"(8) The term 'issuer' means any person who issues or proposes to issue any security; except that with respect to certificates of deposit for securities, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term 'issuer' means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term 'issuer' means the person by whom the equipment or property is, or is to be, used.

"(9) The term 'person' means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a business trust, or an unincorporated organization.

"(10) The term 'security' means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement or in any oil, gas, or other mineral royalty or lease, any collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit, for a security, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a 'security'; or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing; but shall not include currency or any note, draft, bill of exchange, or banker's acceptance which has a maturity at the time of issuance of not exceeding 9 months, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal thereof the maturity of which is likewise limited.

"(11) The term 'equity security' means any stock or similar security; or any security convertible, with or without consideration, into such a security, or carrying any warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase such a security; or any such warrant or right; or any other security which the Commission shall deem to be of similar nature and consider necessary or appropriate, by such rules and regulations as it may prescribe in the public interest or for the protection of investors, to treat as an equity security.

"(12) The term 'exempted security' or 'exempted securities' shall include securities which are direct obligations of or obligations guaranteed as to principal or interest by the United States; such securities issued or guaranteed by corporations in which the United States has a direct or indirect interest as shall be designated for exemption by the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors; securities which are direct obligaticns of or obligations guaranteed as to principal or interest by a State or any political subdivision thereof or any agency or instrumentality of a State or any political subdivision thereof or any municipal corporate instrumentality of one or more States; and such other securities (which may include, among others, unregistered securities, the market in which is predominantly intrastate) as the Commission may, by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, either unconditionally or upon specified terms and conditions or for stated periods, exempt from the operation of any one or more provisions of this title which by their terms do not apply to an 'exempted security' or to 'exempted securities.'

"(13) The terms 'buy' and 'purchase' each include any contract to buy, purchase, or otherwise acquire.

"(14) The terms 'sale' and 'sell' each include any contract to sell or otherwise dispose of.

"(15) The term 'Commission' means the Securities and Exchange Commission established by section 4 of this title.

"(16) The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, or any other possession of the United States.

"(17) The term 'interstate commerce' means trade, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between any foreign country and any State, or between any State and any place or ship outside thereof.

"(b) The Commission and the Federal Reserve Board, as to matters within their respective jurisdictions, shall have power by rules and regulations to define technical, trade, and accounting terms used in this title insofar as such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

"(c) No provision of this title shall apply to, or be deemed to include, any executive department or independent establishment of the United States, or any lending agency which is wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by the United States, or any officer, agent, or employee of any such department, establishment, or agency, acting in the course of his official duty as such, unless such provision makes specific reference to such department, establishment, or agency.

"SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

"SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established a Securities and Exchange Commission (hereinafter referred to as the 'Commission') to be composed of five commissioners to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than three of such commissioners shall be members of the same political party, and in making appointments members of different political parties shall be appointed alternately as nearly as may be practicable. No commissioner shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as commissioner, nor shall any commissioner participate, directly or indirectly, in any stock-market operations or transactions of a character subject to regulation by the Commission pursuant to this title. Each commissioner shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year and shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that (1) any commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the commissioners first taking office after the date of enactment of this title shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of 1 year, one at the end of 2 years, one at the end of 3 years, one at the end of 4 years, and one at the end of 5 years, after the date of enactment of this title.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, and the Commission may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary in the execution of its functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

"TRANSACTIONS ON UNREGISTERED EXCHANGES

"SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any broker, dealer, or exchange, directly or indirectly, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce for the purpose of using any facility of an exchange within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to effect any transaction in a security, or to report any such transaction, unless such exchange (1) is registered as a national securities exchange under section 6 of this title, or (2) is exempted from such registration upon application by the exchange because, in the opinion of the Commission, by reason of the limited volume of transactions effected on such exchange, it is not practicable and not necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to require such registration.

"REGISTRATION OF NATIONAL SECURITIES EXCHANGES

"SEC. 6. (a) Any exchange may be registered with the Commission as a national securities exchange under the terms and conditions hereinafter provided in this section, by filing a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe, containing the agreements, setting forth the information, and accompanied by the documents, below specified:

"(1) An agreement (which shall not be construed as a waiver of any constitutional right or any right to contest the validity of any rule or regulation) to comply, and to enforce so far as is within its powers compliance by its members, with the provisions of this title, and any amendment thereto and any rule or regulation made or to be made thereunder;

"(2) Such data as to its organization, rules of procedure, and membership, and such other information as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors;

"(3) Copies of its constitution, articles of incorporation with all amendments thereto, and of its existing bylaws or rules or instruments corresponding thereto, whatever the name, which are hereinafter collectively referred to as the 'rules of the exchange'; and

"(4) An ageement to furnish to the Commission copies of any amendments to the rules of the exchange forthwith upon their adoption.

"(b) No registration shall be granted or remain in force unless the rules of the exchange include provision for the expulsion, suspension, or disciplining of a member for conduct or proceeding inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade, and declare that the willful violation of any provisions of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder shall be considered conduct or proceeding inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade.

"(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent any exchange from adopting and enforcing any rule not inconsistent with this title and the rules and regulations thereunder and the applicable laws of the State in which it is located.

"(d) If it appears to the Commission that the exchange applying for registration is so organized as to be able to comply with the provisions of this title and the rules and regulations thereunder and that the rules of the exchange are just and adequate to insure fair dealing and to protect investors, the Commission shall cause such exchange to be registered as a national securities exchange.

"(e) Within 30 days after the filing of the application, the Commission shall enter an order either granting or, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, denying registration as a national securities exchange, unless the exchange applying for registration shall withdraw its application or consent to the Commission's deferring action on its application for a stated longer period after the date of filing. The filing with the Commission of an application for registration by an exchange shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof. Amendments to an application may be made upon such terms as the Commission may prescribe.

"(f) An exchange may, upon appropriate application in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Commission, and upon such terms as the Commission may deem necessary for the protection of investors, withdraw its registration.

"MARGIN REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 7. (a) For the purpose of preventing the excessive use of credit for the purchase or carrying of securities, the Federal Reserve Board shall, prior to the effective date of this section and from time to time thereafter, prescribe rules and regulations with respect to the amount of credit that may be initially extended and subsequently maintained on any security (other than an exempted security) registered on a national securities exchange. For the initial extension of credit, such rules and regulations shall be based upon the following standard: An amount not greater than whichever is the higher of—

"(1) 55 percent of the current market price of the security, or

"(2) 100 percent of the lowest market price of the security during the preceding 36 calendar months, but not more than 75 percent of the current market price.

"Such rules and regulations may make appropriate provision with respect to the carrying of undermargined accounts for limited periods and under specified conditions; the withdrawal of funds or securities; the substitution or additional purchases of securities; the transfer of accounts from one lender to another; special or different margin requirements for delayed deliveries, short sales, arbitrage transactions, and securities to which paragraph (2) of this subsection does not apply; the bases and the methods to be used in calculating loans, and margins, and market prices; and similar administrative adjustments and details. For the purposes of paragraph (2) of this subsection, until July 1, 1936, the lowest price at which a security has sold on or after July 1, 1933, shall be considered as the lowest price at which such security has sold during the preceding 36 calendar months.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, the Federal Reserve Board, may, from time to time, with respect to all or specified securities or transactions, or classes of securities, or classes of transactions, by such rules and regulations (1) prescribe such lower margin requirements for the initial extension or maintenance of credit as it deems necessary or appropriate for the accommodation of commerce and industry, having due regard to the general credit situation of the country, and (2) prescribe such higher margin requirements for the initial extension or maintenance of credit as it may deem necessary or appropriate to prevent the excessive use of credit to finance transactions in securities.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, directly or indirectly to extend or maintain credit or arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for any customer—

"(1) On any security (other than an exempted security) registered on a national securities exchange, in contravention of the rules and regulations which the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe under subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

"(2) Without collateral or on any collateral other than exempted securities and/or securities registered upon a national securities exchange, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe (A) to permit under specified conditions and for a limited period any such member, broker, or dealer to maintain a credit initially extended in conformity with the rules and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, and (B) to permit the extension or maintenance of credit in cases where the extension or maintenance of credit is not for the purpose of purchasing or carrying securities or of evading or circumventing the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any person not subject to subsection (c) to extend or maintain credit or to arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any security registered on a national securities exchange, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe to prevent the excessive use of credit for the purchasing or carrying of or trading in securities in circumvention of the other provisions of this section. Such rules and regulations may impose upon all loans made for the purpose of purchasing or carrying securities registered on national securities exchanges limitations similar to those imposed upon members, brokers, or dealers by subsection (c) of this section and the rules and regulations thereunder. This subsection and the rules and regulations thereunder shall not apply (A) to a loan made by a person not in the ordinary course of his business, (B) to a loan on an exempted security, (C) to a loan to a dealer to aid in the financing of the distribution of securities to customers not through the medium of a national securities exchange, (D) to a loan by a bank on a security other than an equity security, or (E) to such other loans as the Federal Reserve Board shall, by such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, exempt, either unconditionally or upon specified terms and conditions or for stated periods, from the operation of this subsection and the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(e) The provisions of this section or the rules and regulations thereunder shall not apply on or before July 1, 1937, to any loan or extension of credit made prior to the enactment of this title or to the maintenance, renewal, or extension of any such loan or credit, except to the extent that the Federal Reserve Board may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this section or the rules and regulations thereunder by means of withdrawals of funds or securities, substitutions of securities, or additional purchases or by any other device.

"RESTRICTIONS ON BORROWING BY MEMBERS, BROKERS, AND DEALERS

"SEC. 8. It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange, or any broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, directly or indirectly—

"(a) To borrow in the ordinary course of business as a broker or dealer on any security (other than an exempted security) registered on a national securities exchange except (1) from or through a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, (2) from any nonmember bank which shall have filed with the Federal Reserve Board an agreement, which is still in force and which is in the form prescribed by the Board, undertaking to comply with all provisions of this act, the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, and the Banking Act of 1933, which are applicable to member banks and which relate to the use of credit to finance transactions in securities, and with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed pursuant to such provisions of law or for the purpose of preventing evasions thereof, or (3) in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe to permit loans between such members and/or brokers and/or dealers, or to permit loans to meet emergency needs. Any such agreement filed with the Federal Reserve Board shall be subject to termination at any time by order of the Board, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, because of any failure by such bank to comply with the provisions thereof or with such provisions of law or rules or regulations; and, for any willful violation of such agreement, such bank shall be subject to the penalties provided for violations of rules and regulations prescribed under this title. The provisions of sections 21 and 25 of this title shall apply in the case of any such proceeding or order of the Federal Reserve Board in the same manner as such provisions apply in the case of proceedings and orders of the Commission.

"(b) To permit in the ordinary course of business as a broker his aggregate indebtedness to all other persons, including customers' credit balances (but excluding indebtedness secured by exempted securities), to exceed such percentage of the net capital (exclusive of fixed assets and value of exchange membership) employed in the business, but not exceeding in any case 2,000 percent, as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(c) In contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe for the protection of investors to hypothecate or arrange for the hypothecation of any securities carried for the account of any customer under circumstances (1) that will permit the commingling of his securities without his written consent with the securities of any other customer, (2) that will permit such securities to be commingled with the securities of any person other than a bona fide customer, or (3) that will permit such securities to be hypothecated, or subjected to any lien or claim of the pledgee, for a sum in excess of the aggregate indebtedness of such customers in respect of such securities.

"(d) To lend or arrange for the lending of any securities carried for the account of any customer without the written consent of such customer.

"PROHIBITION AGAINST MANIPULATION OF SECURITY PRICES

"SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by the use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or of any facility of any national securities exchange, or for any member of a national securities exchange—

"(1) For the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in any security registered on a national securities exchange, or a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market for any such security, (A) to effect any transaction in such security which involves no change in the beneficial ownership thereof, or (B) to enter an order or orders for the purchase of such security with the knowledge that an order or orders of substantially the same size, at substantially the same time, and at substantially the same price, for the sale of any such security, has been or will be entered by or for the same or different parties, or (C) to enter any order or orders for the sale of any such security with the knowledge that an order or orders of substantially the same size, at substantially the same time, and at substantially the same price, for the purchase of such security, has been or will be entered by or for the same or different parties.

"(2) To effect, alone or with one or more other persons, a series of transactions in any security registered on a national securities exchange creating actual or apparent active trading in such security, or raising or depressing the price of such security, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security by others.

"(3) If a dealer or broker, or other person selling or offering for sale or purchasing or offering to purchase the security, to induce the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange by the circulation or dissemination in the ordinary course of business of information to the effect that the price of any such security will or is likely to rise or fall because of market operations of any one or more persons conducted for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of such security.

"(4) If a dealer or broker, or other person selling or offering for sale or purchasing or offering to purchase the security, to make, regarding any security registered on a national securities exchange, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security, any statement which was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to any material fact, and which he knew or had reasonable ground to believe was so false or misleading.

"(5) For a consideration, received directly or indirectly from a dealer or broker, or other person selling or offering for sale or purchasing or offering to purchase the security, to induce the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange by the circulation or dissemination of information to the effect that the price of any such security will or is likely to rise or fall because of the market operations of any one or more persons conducted for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of such security.

(6) To effect either alone or with one or more other persons any series of transactions for the purchase and/or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange for the purpose of pegging, fixing, or stabilizing the price of such security in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to effect, by use of any facility of a national securities exchange, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors—

"(1) any transaction in connection with any security whereby any party to such transaction acquires any put, call, straddle, or other option or privilege of buying the security from or selling the security to another without being bound to do so; or

"(2) any transaction in connection with any security with relation to which he has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any such put, call, straddle, option, or privilege; or

"(3) any transaction in any security for the account of any person who he has reason to believe has, and who actually has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any such put, call, straddle, option, or privilege with relation to such security.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange directly or indirectly to endorse or guarantee the performance of any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege in relation to any security registered on a national securities exchange, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(d) The terms 'put', 'call', 'straddle', 'option', or 'privilege' as used in this section shall not include any registered warrant, right, or convertible security.

"(e) Any person who willfully participates in any act or trancation in violation of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section, shall be liable to any person who shall purchase or sell any security at a price which was affected by such act or transaction, and the person so injured may sue in law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages sustained as a result of any such act or transaction. In any such suit the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant. Every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this subsection may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if joined in the original suit, would have been liable to make the same payment. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section, unless brought within 1 year after the discovery of the facts constituting the violation and within 3 years after such violation.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall not apply to an exempted security.

"REGULATION OF THE USE OF MANIPULATIVE AND DECEPTIVE DEVICES

"SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by the use of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce or of the mails, or of any facility of any national securities exchange—

"(a) To effect a short sale, or to use or employ any stop-loss order in connection with the purchase or sale, of any security registered on a national securities exchange, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(b) To use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange or any security not so registered, any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"SEGREGATION AND LIMITATION OF FUNCTIONS OF MEMBERS, BROKERS, AND DEALERS

"SEC. 11. (a) The Commission shall prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, (1) to regulate or prevent floor trading by members of national securities exchanges, directly or indirectly for their own account or for discretionary accounts, and (2) to prevent such excessive trading on the exchange but off the floor by members, directly or indirectly for their own account, as the Commission may deem detrimental to the maintenance of a fair and orderly market. It shall be unlawful for a member to effect any transaction in a security in contravention of such rules and regulations, but such rules and regulations may make such exemptions for arbitrage transactions, for transactions in exempted securities, and, within the limitations of subsection (b) of this section, for transactions by odd-lot dealers and specialists, as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(b) When not in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, the rules of a national securities exchange may permit (1) a member to be registered as an odd-lot dealer and as such to buy and sell for his own account so far as may be reasonably necessary to carry on such odd-lot transactions, and/or (2) a member to be registered as a specialist. If under the rules and regulations of the Commission a specialist is permitted to act as a dealer, or is limited to acting as a dealer, such rules and regulations shall restrict his dealings so far as practicable to those reasonably necessary to permit him to maintain a fair and orderly market, and/or to those necessary to permit him to act as an odd-lot dealer if the rules of the exchange permit him to act as an odd-lot dealer. It shall be unlawful for a specialist or an official of the exchange to disclose information in regard to orders placed with such specialist which is not available to all members of the exchange, to any person other than an official of the exchange, a representative of the Commission, or a specialist who may be acting for such specialist; but the Commission shall have power to require disclosure to all members of the exchange of all orders placed with specialists, under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. It shall also be unlawful for a specialist acting as a broker to effect on the exchange any transaction except upon a market or limited price order.

"(c) If because of the limited volume of transactions effected on an exchange, it is in the opinion of the Commission impracticable and not necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to apply any of the foregoing provisions of this section or the rules and regulations thereunder, the Commission shall have power, upon application of the exchange and on a showing that the rules of such exchange are otherwise adequate for the protection of investors, to exempt such exchange and its members from any such provision or rules and regulations.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for a member of a national securities exchange who is both a dealer and a broker, or for any person who both as a broker and a dealer transacts a business in securities through the medium of a member or otherwise, to effect through the use of any facility of a national securities exchange or of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise in the case of a member, (1) any transaction in connection with which, directly or indirectly, he extends or maintains or arranges for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for a customer on any security (other than an exempted security) which was a part of a new issue in the distribution of which he participated as a member of a selling syndicate or group within 6 months prior to such transaction: Provided, That credit shall not be deemed extended by reason of a bona fide delayed delivery of any such security against full payment of the entire purchase price thereof upon such delivery within 35 days after such purchase, or (2) any transaction with respect to any security (other than an exempted security) unless, if the transaction is with a customer, he discloses to such customer in writing at or before the completion of the transaction whether he is acting as a dealer for his own account, as a broker for such customer, or as a broker for some other person.

"(e) The Commission is directed to make a study of the feasibility and advisability of the complete segregation of the functions of dealer and broker, and to report the results of its study and its recommendations to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936.

"REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS FOR SECURITIES

"SEC. 12. (a) It shall be unlawful for any member, broker, or dealer to effect any transaction in any security (other than an exempted security) on a national securities exchange unless a registration is effective as to such security for such exchange in accordance with the provisions of this title and the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(b) A security may be registered on a national securities exchange by the issuer filing an application with the exchange (and filing with the Commission such duplicate originals thereof as the Commission may require), which application shall contain—

"(1) Such information, in such detail, as to the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer, and any guarantor of the security as to principal or interest or both, as the Commission may by rules and regulations require, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, in respect of the following:

"(A) The organization, financial structure, and nature of the business;

"(B) The terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of securities outstanding;

"(C) The terms on which their securities are to be, and during the preceding 3 years have been, offered to the public or otherwise;

"(D) The directors, officers, and underwriters, and each security holder of record holding more than 10 percent of any class of any equity security of the issuer (other than an exempted security), their remuneration and their interests in the securities of, and their material contracts with, the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer;

"(E) Remuneration to others than directors and officers exceeding $20,000 per annum;

"(F) Bonus and profit-sharing arrangements;

"(G) Management and service contracts;

"(H) Options existing or to be created in respect of their securities;

"(I) Balance sheets for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants;

"(J) Profit-and-loss statements for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants; and

"(K) Any further financial statements which the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

"(2) Such copies of articles of incorporation, bylaws, trust indentures, or corresponding documents by whatever name known, underwriting arrangements, and other similar documents of, and voting trust agreements with respect to, the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer as the Commission may require as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors and to insure fair dealing in the security.

"(c) If in the judgment of the Commission any information required under subsection (b) is inapplicable to any specified class or classes of issuers, the Commission shall require in lieu thereof the submission of such other information of comparable character as it may deem applicable to such class of issuers.

"(d) If the exchange authorities certify to the Commission that the security has been approved by the exchange for listing and registration, the registration shall become effective 30 days after the receipt of such certification by the Commission or within such shorter period of time as the Commission may determine. A security registered with a national securities exchange may be withdrawn or stricken from listing and registration in accordance with the rules of the exchange and, upon such terms as the Commission may deem necessary to impose for the protection of investors, upon application by the issuer or the exchange to the Commission; whereupon the issuer shall be relieved from further compliance with the provisions of this section and section 13 of this title and any rules or regulations under such sections as to the securities so withdrawn or stricken. An unissued security may be registered only in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Such rules and regulations shall limit the registration of an unissued security to cases where such security is a right or the subject of a right to subscribe or otherwise acquire such security granted to holders of a previously registered security and where the primary purpose of such registration is to distribute such unissued security to such holders.

"(e) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Commission may by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors permit securities listed on any exchange at the time the registration of such exchange as a national securities exchange becomes effective, to be registered for a period ending not later than July 1, 1935, without complying with the provisions of this section.

"(f) The Commission is directed to make a study of trading in unlisted securities upon exchanges and to report the results of its study and its recommendations to Congress on or before January 3, 1936. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Commission may, by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors, prescribe terms and conditions under which, upon the application of any national securities exchange, such exchange (1) may continue until June 1, 1936, unlisted trading privileges to which a security had been admitted on such exchange prior to March 1, 1934, and for such purpose exempt such security and the issuer thereof from the provisions of this section and sections 13 and 16, or (2) may extend until July 1, 1935, unlisted trading privilege to any security registered on any other national securities exchange which security was listed on such other exchange on March 1, 1934. A security for which unlisted trading privileges are so continued shall be considered a 'security registered on a national securities exchange' within the meaning of this title. The rules and regulations of the Commission relating to such unlisted trading privileges for securities shall require that quotations of transactions upon any national securities exchange shall clearly indicate the difference between fully listed securities and securities admitted to unlisted trading privileges only.

"PERIODICAL AND OTHER REPORTS

"SEC. 13. (a) Every issuer of a security registered on a national securities exchange shall file the information, documents, and reports below specified with the exchange (and shall file with the Commission such duplicate originals thereof as the Commission may require), in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors and to insure fair dealing in the security—

"(1) Such information and documents as the Commission may require to keep reasonably current the information and documents filed pursuant to section 12.

"(2) Such annual reports, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants, and such quarterly reports, as the Commission may prescribe.

"(b) The Commission may prescribe, in regard to reports made pursuant to this title, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer; but in the case of the reports of any person whose methods of accounting are prescribed under the provisions of any law of the United States, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to reports shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation in respect of the same subject matter, and, in the case of carriers subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, or carriers required pursuant to any other act of Congress to make reports of the same general character as those required under such section 20, shall permit such carriers to file with the Commission and the exchange duplicate copies of the reports and other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, or with the governmental authority administering such other act of Congress, in lieu of the reports, information and documents required under this section and section 12 in respect of the same subject matter.

"(c) If in the judgment of the Commission any report required under subsection (a) is inapplicable to any specified class or classes of issuers, the Commission shall require in lieu thereof the submission of such reports of comparable character as it may deem applicable to such class or classes of issuers.

"PROXIES

"SEC. 14. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, by the use of the mails or by any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce or of any facility of any national securities exchange or otherwise to solicit or to permit the use of his name to solicit any proxy or consent or authorization in respect of any security (other than an exempted security) registered on any national securities exchange in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member to give a proxy, consent, or authorization in respect of any security registered on a national securities exchange and carried for the account of a customer in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"OVER-THE-COUNTER MARKETS

"SEC. 15. It shall be unlawful, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest and to insure to investors protection comparable to that provided by and under authority of this title in the case of national securities exchanges, (1) for any broker or dealer, singly or with any other person or persons, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce for the purpose of making or creating, or enabling another to make or create, a market, otherwise than on a national securities exchange, for both the purchase and sale of any security (other than an exempted security or commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills, or unregistered securities the market in which is predominantly intrastate and which have not previously been registered or listed), or (2) for any broker or dealer to use any facility of any such market. Such rules and regulations may provide for the regulation of all transactions by brokers and dealers on any such market, for the registration with the Commission of dealers and/or brokers making or creating such a market, and for the registration of the securitites for which they make or create a market and may make special provision with respect to securities or specified classes thereof listed, or entitled to unlisted trading privileges, upon any exchange on the date of the enactment of this title, which securities are not registered under the provisions of section 12 of this title.

"DIRECTORS, OFFICERS, AND PRINCIPAL STOCKHOLDERS

"SEC. 16. (a) Every person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 10 percent of any class of any equity security (other than an exempted security) which is registered on a national securities exchange, or who is a director or an officer of the issuer of such security, shall file, at the time of the registration of such security or within 10 days after he becomes such beneficial owner, director, or officer, a statement with the exchange (and a duplicate original thereof with the Commission) of the amount of all equity securities of such issuer of which he is the beneficial owner, and within 10 days after the close of each calendar month thereafter, if there has been any change in such ownership during such month, shall file with the exchange a statement (and a duplicate original thereof with the Commission) indicating his ownership at the close of the calendar month and such changes in his ownership as have occurred during such calendar month.

"(b) For the purpose of preventing the unfair use of information which may have been obtained by such beneficial owner, director, or officer by reason of his relationship to the issuer, any profit realized by him from any purchase and sale, or any sale and purchase, of any equity security of such issuer (other than an exempted security) within any period of less than 6 months, unless such security was acquired in good faith in connection with a debt previously contracted, shall inure to and be recoverable by the issuer, irrespective of any intention on the part of such beneficial owner, director, or officer in entering into such transaction of holding the security purchased or of not repurchasing the security sold for a period exceeding 6 months. Suit to recover such profit may be instituted at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the issuer, or by the owner of any security of the issuer in the name and in behalf of the issuer if the issuer shall fail or refuse to bring such suit within 60 days after request or shall fail diligently to prosecute the same thereafter; but no such suit shall be brought more than 2 years after the date such profit was realized. This subsection shall not be construed to cover any transaction where such beneficial owner was not such both at the time of the purchase and sale, or the sale and purchase, of the security involved, or any transaction or transacting which the Commission by rules and regulations may exempt as not comprehended within the purpose of this subsection.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any such beneficial owner, director, or officer, directly or indirectly, to sell any equity security of such issuer (other than an exempted security), if the person selling the security or his principal (1) does not own the security sold, or (2) if owning the security, does not deliver it against such sale within 20 days thereafter, or does not within 5 days after such sale deposit it in the mails or other usual channels of transportation; but no person shall be deemed to have violated this subsection if he proves that notwithstanding the exercise of good faith he was unable to make such delivery or deposit within such time, or that to do so would cause undue inconvenience or expense.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall not apply to foreign or domestic arbitrage transactions unless made in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may adopt in order to carry out the purposes of this section.

"ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS, REPORTS, EXAMINATIONS OF EXCHANGES, MEMBERS, AND OTHERS

"SEC. 17. (a) Every national securities exchange, every member thereof, every broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, and every broker or dealer making or creating a market for both the purchase and sale of securities through the use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, as the Commission by its rules and regulations may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the Commission as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(b) Any broker, dealer, or other person extending credit who is subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board pursuant to this title shall make such reports to the Board as it may require as necessary or appropriate to enable it to perform the functions conferred upon it by this title. If any such broker, dealer, or other person shall fail to make any such report or fail to furnish full information therein, or, if in the judgment of the Board it is otherwise necessary, such broker, dealer, or other person shall permit such inspections to be made by the Board with respect to the business operations of such broker, dealer, or other person as the Board may deem necessary to enable it to obtain the required information.

"LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

"SEC. 18. (a) Any person who shall make or cause to be made any statement in any application, report, or document filed pursuant to this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact, shall be liable to any person (not knowing that such statement was false or misleading) who, in reliance upon such statement, shall have purchased or sold a security at a price which was affected by such statement, for damages caused by such reliance, unless the person sued shall prove that he acted in good faith and had no knowledge that such statement was false or misleading. A person seeking to enforce such liability may sue at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction. In any such suit the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant.

"(b) Every person who becomes liable to make payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if joined in the original suit, would have been liable to make the same payment.

"(c) No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section unless brought within 1 year after the discovery of the facts constituting the cause of action and within 3 years after such cause of action accrued.

"POWERS WITH RESPECT TO EXCHANGES AND SECURITIES

"SEC. 19. (a) The Commission is authorized, if in its opinion such action is necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors—

"(1) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months or to withdraw the registration of a national securities exchange if the Commission finds that such exchange has violated any provision of this title or of the rules and regulations thereunder or has failed to enforce, so far as is within its power, compliance therewith by a member or by an issuer of a security registered thereon.

"(2) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to deny, to suspend the effective date of, to suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months, or to withdraw, the registration of a security if the Commission finds that the issuer of such security has failed to comply with any provision of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(3) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months or to expel from a national securities exchange any member or officer thereof whom the Commission finds has violated any provision of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder, or has effected any transaction for any other person who, he has reason to believe, is violating in respect of such transaction any provision of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(4) And if in its opinion the public interest so requires, summarily to suspend trading in any registered security on any national securities exchange for a period not exceeding 10 days, or with the approval of the President, summarily to suspend all trading on any national securities exchange for a period not exceeding 90 days.

"(b) The Commission is further authorized, if after making appropriate request in writing to a national securities exchange that such exchange effect on its own behalf specified changes in its rules and practices, and after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, the Commission determines that such exchange has not made the changes so requested, and that such changes are necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors or to insure fair dealing in securities traded in upon such exchange or to insure fair administration of such exchange, by rules or regulations or by order to alter or supplement the rules of such exchange (insofar as necessary or appropriate to effect such changes) in respect of such matters as (1) safeguards in respect of the financial responsibility of members and adequate provision against the evasion of financial responsibility through the use of corporate forms or special partnerships; (2) the limitation or prohibition of the registration or trading in any security within a specified period after the issuance or primary distribution thereof; (3) the listing or striking from listing of any security; (4) hours of trading; (5) the manner, method, and place of soliciting business; (6) fictitious or numbered accounts; (7) the time and method of making settlements, payments, and deliveries and of closing accounts; (8) the reporting of transactions on the exchange and upon tickers maintained by or with the consent of the exchange, including the method of reporting short sales, stopped sales, sales of securities of issuers in default, bankruptcy or receivership, and sales involving other special circumstances; (9) the fixing of reasonable rates of commission, interest, listing, and other charges; (10) minimum units of trading; (11) odd-lot purchases and sales; (12) minimum deposits on margin accounts; and (13) similar matters.

"(c) The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the rules of national securities exchanges with respect to the classification of members, the methods of election of officers and committees to insure a fair representation of the membership, and the suspension, expulsion, and disciplining of members of such exchanges. The Commission shall report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1935, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

"LIABILITIES OF CONTROLLING PERSONS

"SEC. 20. (a) Every person who, directly or indirectly, controls any person liable under any provision of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable, unless the controlling person acted in good faith and did not directly or indirectly induce the act or acts constituting the violation or cause of action.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to do any act or thing which it would be unlawful for such person to do under the provisions of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder through or by means of any other person.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any director or officer of, or any owner of any of the securities issued by, any issuer of any security registered on a national securities exchange, without just cause to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making or filing of any document, report, or information, required to be filed under this title or any rule or regulation thereunder.

"INVESTIGATIONS; INJUNCTIONS AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

"SEC. 21. (a) The Commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the Commission shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated. The Commission is authorized, in its discretion, to publish information concerning any such violations, and to investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or proper to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this title, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this title relates.

"(b) For the purpose of any such investigation, or any other proceeding under this title, any member of the Commission or any officer designated by it is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

"(d) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(e) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title.

"(f) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 22. Hearings may be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS; ANNUAL REPORTS

"SEC. 23. (a) The Commission and the Federal Reserve Board shall each have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in them by this title, and may for such purpose classify issuers, securities, exchanges, and other persons or matters within their respective jurisdictions.

"(b) The Commission and the Federal Reserve Board, respectively, shall include in their annual reports to Congress such information, data, and recommendation for further legislation as they may deem advisable with regard to matters within their respective jurisdictions under this title.

"INFORMATION FILED WITH THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 24. (a) Nothing in this title shall be construed to require, or to authorize the Commission to require, the revealing of trade secrets or processes in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission under this title.

"(b) Any person filing any such application, report, or document may make written objection to the public disclosure of information contained therein, stating the grounds for such objection, and the Commission is authorized to hear objections in any such case where it deems it advisable. The Commission may, in such cases, make available to the public the information contained in any such application, report, or document only when in its judgment a disclosure of such information is in the public interest; and copies of information so made available may be furnished to any person at such reasonable charge and under such reasonable limitations as the Commission may prescribe.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any member, officer, or employee of the Commission to disclose to any person other than a member, officer, or employee of the Commission, or to use for personal benefit, any information contained in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission which is not made available to the public pursuant to subsection (b) of this section: Provided, That the Commission may make available to the Federal Reserve Board any information requested by the Board for the purpose of enabling it to perform its duties under this title.

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"SEC. 25. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this title to which such person is a party may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(b) The commencement of proceeding under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

"UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

"SEC. 26. No action or failure to act by the Commission or the Federal Reserve Board, in the administration of this title shall be construed to mean that the particular authority has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, any security or any transaction or transactions therein, nor shall such action or failure to act with regard to any statement or report filed with or examined by such authority pursuant to this title or rules and regulations thereunder, be deemed a finding by such authority that such statement or report is true and accurate on its face or that it is not false or misleading. It shall be unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any prospective purchaser or seller of a security any representation that any such action or failure to act by any such authority is to be so construed or has such effect.

"JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 27. The district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this title or the rules and regulations thereunder. Any criminal proceeding may be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by this title or rules and regulations thereunder, or to enjoin any violation of such title or rules and regulations, may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

"EFFECT ON EXISTING LAW

"SEC. 28. (a) The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity; but no person permitted to maintain a suit for damages under the provisions of this title shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of. Nothing in this title shall affect the jurisdiction of the securities commission (or any agency or officer performing like functions) of any State over any security or any person insofar as it does not conflict with the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(b) Nothing in this title shall be construed to modify existing law (1) with regard to the binding effect on any member of any exchange of any action taken by the authorities of such exchange to settle disputes between its members, or (2) with regard to the binding effect of such action on any person who has agreed to be bound thereby, or (3) with regard to the binding effect on any such member of any disciplinary action taken by the authorities of the exchange as a result of violation of any rule of the exchange, insofar as the action taken is not inconsistent with the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS

"SEC. 29. (a) Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder, or of any rule of an exchange required thereby shall be void.

"(b) Every contract made in violation of any provision of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder, and every contract (including any contract for listing a security on an exchange) heretofore or hereafter made the performance of which involves the violation of, or the continuance of any relationship or practice in violation of, any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, shall be void (1) as regards the rights of any person who, in violation of any such provision, rule, or regulation, shall have made or engaged in the performance of any such contract, and (2) as regards the rights of any person who, not being a party to such contract, shall have acquired any right thereunder with actual knowledge of the facts by reason of which the making or performance of such contract was in violation of any such provision, rule, or regulation.

"(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) to affect the validity of any loan or extension of credit (or any extension or renewal thereof) made or of any lien created prior or subsequent to the enactment of this title, unless at the time of the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the creating of such lien, the person making such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or acquiring such lien shall have actual knowledge of facts by reason of which the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the acquisition of such lien is a violation of the provisions of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, or (2) to afford a defense to the collection of any debt or obligation or the enforcement of any lien by any person who shall have acquired such debt, obligation, or lien in good faith for value and without actual knowledge of the violation of any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder affecting the legality of such debt, obligation, or lien.

"FOREIGN SECURITIES EXCHANGES

"SEC. 30. (a) It shall be unlawful for any broker or dealer, directly or indirectly, to make use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce for the purpose of effecting on an exchange not within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, any transaction in any security the issuer of which is a resident of, or is organized under the laws of, or has its principal place of business in, a place within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or to prevent the evasion of this title.

"(b) The provisions of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder shall not apply to any person insofar as he transacts a business in securities without the jurisdiction of the United States, unless he transacts such business in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate to prevent the evasion of this title.

"REGISTRATION FEES

"SEC. 31. Every national securities exchange shall pay to the Commission on or before March 15 of each calendar year a registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be in an amount equal to one five-hundredths of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of the sales of securities transacted on such national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year and subsequent to its registration as a national securities exchange.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 32. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title, or any rule or regulation thereunder the violation of which is made unlawful or the observance of which is required under the terms of this title, or any person who willfully and knowingly makes, or causes to be made, any statement in any application, report, or document required to be filed under this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, which statement was false or misleading with respect to any material fact, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both, except that when such person is an exchange, a fine not exceeding $500,000 may be imposed; but no person shall be subject to imprisonment under this section for the violation of any rule or regulation if he proves that he had no knowledge of such rule or regulation.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 33. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"EFFECTIVE DATE

"SEC. 34. This act shall become effective on July 1, 1934, except that sections 6 and 12 (b), (c), (d), and (e) shall become effective on September 1, 1934; and sections 5, 7, 8, 9 (a) (6), 10, 11, 12 (a), 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 30 shall become effective on October 1, 1934.

"TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

"SECTION 201. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) The term "security" means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or, in general, any interest or instrument commonly known as a "security", or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guaranty of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.'

"(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"'(4) The term "issuer" means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions), or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; except that in the case of an unincorporated association which provides by its articles for limited liability of any or all of its members, or in the case of a trust, committee, or other legal entity, the trustees or members thereof shall not be individually liable as issuers of any security issued by the association, trust, committee, or other legal entity; except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term "issuer" means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used; and except that with respect to fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, the term "issuer" means the owner of any such right or of any interest in such right (whether whole or fractional) who creates fractional interests therein for the purpose of public offering.'

"(c) Paragraph (10) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"'(10) The term "prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if it is proved that prior to or at the same time with such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was sent or given to the person to whom the communication was made, by the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed.'

"SEC. 202. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 3 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories, or by any person controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing, or any security issued or guaranteed by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, the business of which is substantially confined to banking and is supervised by the State or Territorial banking commission or similar official; or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank;'

"(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 3 (a) is amended by striking out 'corporation' and inserting in lieu thereof 'person.'

"(c) Such section 3 (a) is further amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by inserting immediately after such paragraph (8) the following new paragraphs:

"'(9) Any security exchanged by the issuer with its existing security holders exclusively where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting such exchange;

"'(10) Any security which is issued in exchange for one or more bona fide outstanding securities, claims or property interests, or partly in such exchange and partly for cash, where the terms and conditions of such issuance and exchange are approved, after a hearing upon the fairness of such terms and conditions at which all persons to whom it is proposed to issue securities in such exchange shall have the right to appear, by any court, or by any official or agency of the United States, or by any State or Territorial banking or insurance commission or other governmental authority expressly authorized by law to grant such approval;

"'(11) Any security which is a part of an issue sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such security is a person resident and doing business within, or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business within, such State or Territory.'

"SEC. 203. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 4 of such act is amended (1) by striking out 'not with or through an underwriter and'; and (2) by striking out 'last' and inserting in lieu thereof 'first.'

"(b) Paragraph (3) of such section 4 is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 204. Subsection (c) of section 5 of such act is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 205. Paragraph (1) of section 10 (b) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) When a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use, so far as such information is known to the user of such prospectus or can be furnished by such user without unreasonable effort or expense.'

"SEC. 206. (a) Section 11 (a) of such act is amended by adding after the last line thereof the following new sentence: 'If such person acquired the security after the issuer has made generally available to its security holders an earning statement covering a period of at least 12 months beginning after the effective date of the registration statement, then the right of recovery under this subsection shall be conditioned on proof that such person acquired the security relying upon such untrue statement in the registration statement or relying upon the registration statement and not knowing of such omission, but such reliance may be established without proof of the reading of the registration statement by such person.'

"(b) Clauses (C) and (D) of paragraph (3) of section 11 (b) of such act are amended to read as follows: '(C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself), he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were untrue or that there was an omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement of the expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and (D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were untrue, or that there was an omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement made by the official person or was not a fair copy of or extract from the public official document.'

"(c) Subsection (c) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property.'

"(d) Subsection (e) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"'(e) The suit authorized under subsection (a) may be to recover such damages as shall represent the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and (1) the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought, or (2) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of in the market before suit, or (3) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of after suit but before judgment if such damages shall be less than the damages representing the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought: Provided, That if the defendant proves that any portion or all of such damages represents other than the depreciation in value of such security resulting from such part of the registration statement, with respect to which his liability is asserted, not being true or omitting to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, such portion of or all such damages shall not be recoverable. In no event shall any underwriter (unless such underwriter shall have knowingly received from the issuer for acting as an underwriter some benefit, directly or indirectly, in which all other underwriters similarly situated did not share in proportion to their respective interests in the underwriting) be liable in any suit or as a consequence of suits authorized under subsection (a) for damages in excess of the total price at which the securities underwritten by him and distributed to the public were offered to the public. In any suit under this or any other section of this title the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, including reasonable attorney's fees, and if judgment shall be rendered against a party litigant, upon the motion of the other party litigant, such costs may be assessed in favor of such party litigant (whether or not such undertaking has been required) if the court believes the suit or the defense to have been without merit, in an amount sufficient to reimburse him for the reasonable expenses incurred by him, in connection with such suit, such costs to be taxed in the manner usually provided for taxing of costs in the court in which the suit was heard.'

"SEC. 207. Section 13 of such act is amended (a) by striking out '2 years' wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof '1 year'; (b) by striking out '10 years' and inserting in lieu thereof '3 years'; and (c) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'or under section 12 (2) more than 3 years after the sale'.

"SEC. 208. Section 15 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'unless the controlling person had no knowledge of or reasonable ground to believe in the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability of the controlled person is alleged to exist.'

"SEC. 209. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 19 of such act is amended by inserting after the word 'accounting' a comma and the word 'technical.'

"(b) Subsection (a) of such section 19 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'No provision of this title imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule or regulation of the Commission, notwithstanding that such rule or regulation may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.'

"SEC. 210. Upon the expiration of 60 days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the Securities and Exchange Commission appointed under section 4 of title I of this act have qualified and taken office, all powers, duties, and functions of the Federal Trade Commission under the Securities Act of 1933 shall be transferred to such Commission, together with all property, books, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations used by or available to the Federal Trade Commission for carrying out its functions under the Securities Act of 1933. All proceedings, hearings, or investigations commenced or pending before the Federal Trade Commission arising under the Securities Act of 1933 shall be continued by the Securities and Exchange Commission. All orders, rules, and regulations which have been issued by the Federal Trade Commission under the Securities Act of 1933 and which are in effect shall continue in effect until modified, superseded, revoked, or repealed. All rights and interests accruing or to accrue under the Securities Act of 1933, or any provision of any regulation relating to, or out of action taken by, the Federal Trade Commission under such act, shall be followed in all respects and may be exercised and enforced.

"SEC. 211. The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the work, activities, personnel, and functions of protective and reorganization committees in connection with the reorganization, readjustment, rehabilitation, liquidation, or consolidation of persons and properties and to report the result of its studies and investigations and its recommendations to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment strikes out all of the House bill after the enacting clause. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed upon by the conferees are noted in the following outline, except for incidental changes made necessary by reason of the agreements reached by the conferees and minor and clarifying changes.

The House bill provides that the administration of the act, other than those provisions to be administered by the Federal Reserve Board, shall be under the Federal Trade Commission, and in section 3 (a) (15) the term "Commission" is defined to mean the "Federal Trade Commission." The Senate amendment defines the term to mean the "Federal Securities Exchange Commission." In view of the action taken by the conferees in placing the administration of the act under a separate commission the term "Commission" is defined in the substitute to mean the "Securities and Exchange Commission."

The House bill (sec. 3 (b)) authorizes the Commission and the Federal Reserve Board to define accounting, technical, and trade terms, and provides that such definitions, insofar as not inconsistent with the provisions of the act, shall have the force of law. The Senate amendment contains a similar provision except that the authority is confined to the Commission, and it is not provided that such definitions shall have the force of law. The substitute retains the House provision except that it is not provided that the definitions "shall have the force of law." This phrase was omitted as unnecessary, since courts commonly give the force of law to administrative interpretations of statutory terms, unless clearly inconsistent with the legislative intent.

The House bill (sec. 4) and the Senate amendment each contain a provision prohibiting the use of the mails or instrumentalities of interstate commerce in using any facility of an exchange unless the exchange is registered under the act or is exempted from registration by the Commission by reason of the limited volume of transactions effected thereon. The House bill contains the further provision that such exemption may be withdrawn by the Commission under specified circumstances. This provision is omitted from the substitute as being unnecessary, since it is thought that the power of the Commission to make the exemption necessarily includes the power to limit the exemption or to withdraw it.

The House bill (sec. 6) and the Senate amendment, in their provisions relating to margin requirements, differ principally in that (1) under the House bill a standard is included for the guidance of the Federal Reserve Board in prescribing its rules and regulations with respect to the amount of credit that may be initially extended on any registered security, subject to the power of the Board to prescribe higher or lower margin requirements in the case of the initial extension of credit if it finds that certain specified conditions prevail to warrant such action, and (2) the House bill places under the Federal Reserve Board the administration of all the margin provisions, whereas the Senate bill places the administration of all such provisions under the Commission except insofar as they relate to member banks of the Federal Reserve System, and to this extent the Senate amendment provides that the margin provisions shall be under the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board. The substitute follows rather closely the provisions of the House bill except that the provision granting authority to the Federal Reserve Board to lower or raise margin requirements in case of the initial extension of credit is applied as well to the maintenance of credit. The House bill gives authority to the Federal Reserve Board to lower or raise margin requirements with respect to "all or specified securities or classes of securities, or classes of transactions." The substitute modifies this provision so that such authority is also given with respect to "specified transactions." The House bill provides that the rules and regulations under the section relating to margin requirements shall not apply on or before January 31, 1939. The Senate amendment fixes the date in the corresponding provision in the Senate amendment at June 30, 1936. The substitute fixes the date at July 1, 1937.

The House bill (sec. 7 (c) and (d)) and the Senate amendment contain similar prohibitions against the hypothecation by members, brokers, and dealers of securities carried for customers' accounts, with the difference, however, that in the Senate bill the prohibitions apply only if the action is in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe for the protection of investors. The substitute adopts the Senate provision.

The House bill (sec. 8 (a) (2)) contains a provision prohibiting any series of transactions in a registered security for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of such security. The corresponding provision in the Senate amendment prohibits the manipulation of the price of a registered security by means of any series of transactions effected with the specific intent of raising or depressing such price. Both provisions were intended to prohibit pool activities, the rigging, jiggling, or marking up or down of prices by manipulative operations. The substitute, combining the ideas underlying the Senate and the House provisions, prohibits any series of transactions in a registered security creating actual or apparent active trading in such security, or raising or depressing the price of such security, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security by others.

The House bill (sec. 8 (a) (4)) makes it unlawful for a dealer or broker or other person selling or offering for sale, or purchasing or offering to purchase, a registered security, to induce the purchase or sale of such security by making a statement of any material fact regarding such security which he knows or has reasonable ground to believe is false or misleading. It further provides that any such statement, insofar as it is limited to facts set forth in an application, report, or document filed pursuant to the act, shall not be deemed false or misleading unless the person making such statement knew or had reasonable ground to believe that it was false or misleading. The Senate amendment covers substantially the same ground but requires only that the statement be made for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of a registered security, and expressly provides that a statement shall be construed to include any omission to state a material fact. The latter provision is omitted from the substitute as surplusage in view of the fact that a statement obviously may be misleading because of a material omission. The Senate amendment also puts the burden of proving good faith in the making of the statement upon the defendant in a civil suit. The substitute provides that it shall be unlawful for a dealer or broker or other person selling or offering for sale, or purchasing or offering to purchase the security, to make regarding any security registered on a national securities exchange, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security, any statement which was, at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in regard to any material fact, and which he knew or had reasonable ground to believe was so false or misleading.

The House bill provision (sec. 8 (a) (6)) which subjects to the regulation of the Commission any series of transactions for the purchase and sale of any registered security for the purpose of pegging, fixing, or stabilizing the price of such security, was accepted with an amendment making it clear that the regulation of such operation extended to a series of transactions for the purchase and/or sale of the security. The substitute provision clarifying the House bill conforms in substance to the Senate amendment.

The House bill (sec. 8 (e)) provides that civil suits based upon the violation of the provisions of the act relating to manipulative practices must be brought within a period within 3 years after the violation upon which the action was based. The Senate amendment limits the time within which such suits may be brought to 1 year after the discovery of the facts constituting the violation, and in any case to 5 years after such violation. The substitute requires such suits to be brought within 1 year after discovery of the facts constituting the violation and in any event within 3 years after such violation. The substitute also provides that in the case of any such suit the court may in its discretion require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant.

The House bill (sec. 9) and the Senate amendment contain similar provisions regulating the use of manipulative devices, except that the Senate amendment contains a provision prohibiting the use or employment in connection with the purchase or sale of any security of any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance—

Which the Commission may declare to be detrimental to the interests of investors.

The substitute includes this provision of the Senate amendment with the modification that it is made unlawful to use or employ any such device or contrivance—

In contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

The House bill (sec. 10) contains a prohibition against a specialist disclosing to any person other than a representative of the Commission or a specialist who may be acting for him information in regard to orders placed with him which is not available to all members of the exchange, and authorizes the Commission to require disclosure to all members of all orders placed with specialists. The Senate amendment contains a provision similar to that in the House bill except that it permits specialists to disclose information to an official of the exchange and, instead of authorizing the Commission to provide disclosure, provides that nothing in the section shall be construed to prevent the rules of an exchange requiring disclosure to all members of all orders placed with a specialist. The substitute adopts the House provision, except that it declares that—

It shall be unlawful for a specialist or an official of the exchange to disclose information in regard to orders placed with such specialist which is not available to all members of the exchange, to any person other than an official of the exchange, a representative of the Commission, or a specialist who may be acting for such specialist.

The House bill (sec. 10 (c)) and the Senate amendment each contains a provision authorizing the exemption of any exchange from the provisions of the section because of the limited volume of transactions on the exchange. The House provision gives authority to the Commission to withdraw such exemption in specified circumstances. This provision is omitted from the substitute as unnecessary, since it is thought that the authority to make the exemption necessarily includes the authority to limit the exemption or to withdraw it.

The House bill (sec. 11 (a)) and the Senate amendment both prohibit transactions in any security on a national securities exchange unless a registration is effective as to the security in accordance with the provisions of the act, but in the House bill such prohibition applies to "any person", whereas in the Senate amendment it applies only to a "member, broker, or dealer." The substitute contains the Senate provision.

The House bill (sec. 11 (b)) and the Senate amendment impose similar requirements as to information to be filed with an application for the registration of a security on a national securities exchange. The substitute takes some of the provisions from the House bill and some from the Senate amendment. The information which may be required under the substitute which was not required under the House bill is specified in paragraphs (D), (E), (F), (G), and (H), inclusive, of section 12 (b) (1), and includes the following: The underwriters of the security; each security holder of record holding more than 10 percent of any class of any equity security of the issuer (other than any exempted security); the remuneration of underwriters, and the interests of underwriters and such security holders in the securities of, and their material contracts with, the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer; the remuneration to others than directors and officers exceeding $20,000 (the House bill having specified $10,000); bonus and profit-sharing arrangements; and management and service contracts (the House bill having required information as to management and service contracts "of material importance to investors"). The substitute also contains the provision from the Senate amendment authorizing the Commission to require "any further financial statements which the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors."

The House bill (sec. 11 (f)) and the Senate amendment both authorize the Commission to make a study of trading in unlisted securities upon exchanges and to report to Congress with respect thereto. The date for the making of the report is fixed at January 3, 1935, in the House bill and January 3, 1936, in the Senate amendment. The substitute adopts the Senate amendment.

The House bill (sec. 12 (b)) authorizes the Commission to prescribe, in regard to reports made under the act, in accordance with accepted principles of accounting, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, and the items or details to be shown in the balance sheets and profit-and-loss statements. The Senate amendment contains a similar provision, except that it specifies that the Commission may prescribe the items and details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement, the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or any person under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer. The substitute retains the provision of the Senate amendment. In this same subsection the House bill provides that in the case of the reports of any person "whose accounting is subject to the provisions of" any law of the United States or any State, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to reports shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation. The Senate amendment contains a similar provision, except that it does not apply in the case of a person whose accounting is subject only to the provisions of State law or regulations, and only applies where the rules and regulations of the Commission and the requirements under other laws are in respect of the same subject matter. The substitute contains the Senate provision, with the modification that the persons covered are described as those "whose methods of accounting are prescribed under" the provisions of any law of the United States, or any rule or regulation thereunder. The provision of the House bill last referred to above is subject to the exception that it shall not prevent the Commission from imposing such "additional requirements with respect to such reports, within the scope of this section and section 11", as it may deem necessary for the protection of investors. This provision is omitted from the substitute as unnecessary, in view of the limitation imposed by the words "in respect of the same subject matter" contained in the provision above referred to. Another provision in the same subsection of the House bill provides that no additional requirements shall be imposed upon carriers subject to the provisions of section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended. The Senate amendment contains a provision that carriers subject to section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act shall not be subject to the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the Senate bill, except that the Commission may require such carriers to file duplicate copies of reports or other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it further provides that carriers subject to section 20 (but not to sec. 20 (a)) of the Interstate Commerce Act shall be exempt from the provisions of section 13 of the Senate bill, except that the Commission may require the filing of duplicate copies of reports and documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The substitute provides that in the case of carriers subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act (which will include as well those carriers subject to sec. 20 (a) of such act) the Commission shall permit such carriers to file duplicate copies of the reports and other documents filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission in lieu of the reports, information, and documents required under sections 12 and 13 in respect of the same subject matter. This provision in the substitute also applies to carriers required, pursuant to any other act of Congress, to make reports of the same general character as those required under such section 20. This provision is included because of the anticipated transfer to the proposed Federal Communications Commission of jurisdiction of carriers which are at the present time subject to the provisions of such section 20.

The House bill does not contain a provision corresponding to that contained in subsection (d) of section 13 of the Senate amendment providing that "nothing in this title shall be construed as authorizing the Commission to interfere with the management of the affairs of an issuer." This provision is omitted from the substitute as unnecessary, since it is not believed that the bill is open to misconstruction in this respect.

The House bill (sec. 14) and the Senate amendment contain similar provisions regarding the regulation of over-the-counter markets except that the provision in the House bill applies to any security other than an exempted security, and the Senate amendment specifically includes certain other securities within the exemption. The substitute contains the specific Senate exemptions except that they are modified so as to cover "commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills, or unregistered securities the market in which is predominantly intrastate and which have not been previously registered or listed."

The House bill (sec. 15) requires every person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 5 percent of any class of any equity security (other than an exempted security) which is registered on a national securities exchange, to file information regarding his ownership of securities of such issuer. The Senate provision is almost identical except that it specifies 10 percent. The substitute adopts the Senate provision. The Senate amendment also contains a provision requiring any such beneficial owner, and any director, or officer of the issuer to yield to the issuer any profit realized by him from any purchase and sale, or any sale and purchase, of any equity security of the issuer (other than an exempted security) within a period of less than 6 months, unless the security was acquired in good faith in connection with a debt previously contracted, and authorizes the issuer to recover such profit by suit. The substitute includes the Senate provision but provides that no such suit by the issuer shall be brought more than 2 years after the date the profit was realized. Another provision of the Senate amendment is included in the substitute, providing that the section does not apply to foreign or domestic arbitrage transaction unless they are in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may adopt. This section of the House bill contains a subsection to the effect that the provisions of the section shall not apply if the registration of the equity security has been secured without the consent of the issuer thereof. The provision is omitted from the substitute as being unnecessary in view of the authority of the Commission to make exemptions and in view of the fact that if in any case registration is permitted otherwise than by issuers it will be subject to the control of the Commission.

The House bill (section 17) and the Senate amendment each contains a provision relating to civil liability of any person making a false or misleading statement in any application, report, or document filed pursuant to the act. In the House bill this section is made to apply to "any person (including any director or officer, or any accountant or other expert)." The words in parenthesis are omitted in the substitute as being superfluous. A further difference is that the House bill permits escape from liability by the defendant upon proof that he acted in good faith and did not believe that the statement was false or misleading, while the Senate amendment provides for such escape from liability if the person sued shall prove that he acted in good faith and had no knowledge that such statement was false or misleading. The substitute adopts the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment also expressly provides that a statement shall be construed to include any omission to state a material fact, and this provision is omitted from the substitute as surplusage in view of the fact that a statement obviously may be misleading because of a material omission. The substitute contains a further provision from the Senate amendment which is not contained in the House bill, authorizing the court to require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of the suit, and to assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant. In this same section the House bill provides that no such action shall be maintained unless brought within 3 years after the violation upon which it is based, while the Senate amendment provides that no such action shall be maintained "unless brought within 1 year after discovery of the facts constituting the cause of action, nor unless brought within 5 years after such cause of action accrued." The substitute requires the action to be brought within 1 year after discovery and in any event within 3 years after the cause of action accrued.

The House bill (sec. 18 (a)) authorizes the Commission to suspend registration of a national securities exchange for failure to enforce compliance by its members with the act and rules and regulations thereunder. The Senate amendment also gives such authority to the Commission in any case where the exchange fails to enforce compliance, so far as is within its power, by an issuer of a security registered on such exchange. The substitute includes this Senate provision.

The House bill (sec. 18 (b)) authorizes the Commission, under certain specified circumstances, by rules or regulations to alter or supplement the rules of the exchange in certain respects. The Senate amendment provides that such action of the Commission shall be by order. The substitute provides that such action shall be by rules or regulations or by order. With regard to the matters as to which the Commission may make changes in the rules of the exchange, the substitute includes hours of trading, which is not contained in the House bill, but is contained in the Senate amendment. The substitute omits authority with respect to three matters which are contained in the House bill, but not in the Senate amendment, as follows: Classification of members and methods of election of officers and committees; the suspension, expulsion, or disciplining of members; and the making available of the names and addresses of holders of listed securities. The Senate amendment contains a provision not contained in the House bill authorizing and directing the Commission to make a study and investigation of the rules of national securities exchanges with respect to the classification of members, the methods of election of officers and committees, and the suspension, expulsion, and disciplining of members, and directing the Commission to report to Congress on or before January 3, 1935. This provision is included in the substitute.

The House bill (sec. 19) makes every person who, directly or indirectly, alone or pursuant to or in connection with any agreement or understanding with one or more persons, controls a person who becomes liable under the act, liable jointly with the controlled person. The Senate amendment does not contain the words "alone or pursuant to or in connection with any agreement or understanding with one or more other persons", and these words are omitted from the substitute as being surplusage. The House bill (sec. 23) limits the general power of the Commission to give out information by providing that any person filing an application, report, or document may make written objection to the disclosure of information contained therein, and the Commission is authorized to hear objections if it deems it advisable, but in any case the Commission may make the information public despite objection if in its judgment the disclosure is in the public interest; but it is made unlawful for any member, officer, or employee of the Commission to make public any information which, after such objection, is not disclosed. The Senate amendment makes a similar provision but provides that in all cases of objections notice and opportunity for private hearing shall be given the objector. The Senate amendment also makes it unlawful for a member, officer, or employee of the Commission to use for his personal benefit any information not made available to the public. The substitute adopts the provisions of the House bill with the addition of the Senate prohibition on use of information for personal benefit.

The House bill (sec. 28 (b)) provides that every contract made in violation of any provision of the act or of any rule or regulation thereunder, and every contract, including any contract for listing a security on an exchange, heretofore made, the performance of which involves the continuance of any relationship or practice prohibited by the act or any rule or regulation thereunder, shall be void as regards any cause of action arising after the effective date of such provision, rule, or regulation. The Senate amendment limits this provision to contracts made in violation of the act or of any rule or regulation thereunder, and to contracts hereafter made, the performance of which involves the violation of, or the continuance of any relationship or practice in violation of, any provision of the act or of any rule or regulation thereunder. The Senate amendment further restricts the provision by making any such contract void not in toto but only as regards (1) the rights of a person who in violation of the act or regulations thereunder shall have made or engaged in the performance of such contract, and (2) the rights of any person who not being a party to such contract shall have acquired any right thereunder with actual knowledge of the facts by reason of which the making or performance of such contract was in violation of the act or regulation. The substitute follows the language of the Senate amendment except that it treats on the same footing contracts made before or after the act where their performance involves a violation of the act or any regulation thereunder.

The House bill (sec. 32) provides that any person who willfully violates any provision of the act, or any rule or regulation the violation of which is made unlawful under the terms of the act, or any person who willfully and knowingly makes or causes to be made any false or misleading statement in an application, report, or document filed under this act shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 2 years or both. The Senate amendment contains substantially the same penalty provision, except with respect to violations of rules and regulations and statements required under rules or regulations, and except that it provides for a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years. With respect to violations of rules and regulations, or any false or misleading statement in an application, report, or document required to be filed under a rule or regulation, no imprisonment is provided for and a fine of not more than $10,000 is imposed. The substitute contains substantially the House provision except that it is made clear that it is to apply to violations of rules or regulations the observance of which is required under the terms of title I, and it also provides that "no person shall be subject to imprisonment under this section for the violation of any rule or regulation if he proves that he had no knowledge of such rule or regulation."

The House bill (sec. 34) provides that the act shall become effective upon its enactment, except as to certain sections. The substitute provides that sections 6 and 12 (b), (c), (d), and (e) shall become effective on September 1, 1934, as is provided in the Senate amendment, the House bill having fixed this date as July 1, 1934, and that sections 5, 7, 8, 9 (a) (6), 10, 11, 12 (a), 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 30 shall become effective on October 1, 1934, as is provided in the Senate amendment, the House bill having fixed this date as August 1, 1934. The substitute provides that the remainder of the act shall become effective on July 1, 1934.

Title II of the Senate amendment provides for amendments to the Securities Act of 1933. The managers on the part of the House agreed to substantially all of such amendments. The purposes of the amendments agreed upon and of the changes made therein as a result of the conference are noted in the following discussion, except for minor clarifying alterations and such amendments and changes as are of an incidental character made necessary to harmonize various provisions affected by the alterations.

The amendment to section 2 (1) of the act is to make clear what is already a matter of interpretation, that certificates of deposit, fractional oil royalty, or leasehold interests, and interests of a similar character are included within the definition of a security and thus subject to the Securities Act. It is also intended to apply the act to interests commonly known as "securities", whether or not such interests are represented by any document or not. Thus the statute will apply to inscribed shares, and its provisions cannot be evaded by simply refraining from issuing to the subscriber any documentary evidence of his interest. The phrase "certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible", is stricken out as possibly involving too broad and uncertain application. In conference it was agreed to include guaranties specifically. Their inclusion in section 2 (1) and the omission of specific mention of guarantors in section 2 (4), as proposed by these amendments, will make it clear that guarantors are to be treated as issuers of securities only if the guaranties are incorporated in securities distributed to investors. They will also indicate that the securities of which such guarantors are to be treated as issuers are the guaranties and do not include the securities guaranteed. The result is properly to limit their responsibility under section 11 to the registration statement filed as to the guaranty.

The amendments to section 2 (4) include a definition of the issuer of fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, and other mineral rights. They also provide that the liability of an issuer shall not attach individually to the trustees or members of a trust or committee. The basis for the application of absolute liability under section 11 to the issuer of securities is the principle that one should not retain the fruits of an unfair bargain. In the case of a trust or committee, it is the trust or committee, rather than the trustees or members, which profits from the bargain. Consequently the latter should not have the issuer's liability. The amendment reaches the result attained by the Commission's interpretation that the trusts and committees, recognized as entities by section 2 (2), are themselves the issuers of their securities. In conference the words "or persons" were restored, on the ground that their proposed elimination would not affect the interpretation of the section and the result desired would be accomplished by the amendment last discussed.

The purpose of the amendments to section 2 (10) are (1) to make clear beyond any doubt the interpretation of the commission that literature accompanying a prospectus, as well as literature sent subsequently to the sending of a prospectus, shall not be required to conform to the prospectus requirements of section 10 of the act, and (2) to remove from a person required to furnish a prospectus the absolute duty to see that the prospectus is received by the person to whom it is sent. It seems sufficient to require proof of the actual sending of a prospectus without making the sender take all risk of nondelivery.

The amendments to section 3 (a) (2) have three purposes: (1) To put the District of Columbia upon a parity with the States with reference to the exemption of bank stocks issued by banks organized under the laws of the District of Columbia (2) to exempt municipal bondholders' protective committees; and (3) to extend the scope of the public instrumentality exemption to expanding activities in which governments are engaging.

Section 4 (a) (4) is proposed to be amended to correct an obvious error in the original act which limited this exemption to corporate organizations when its extension to unincorporated associations is equally defensible in practice and theory.

The amendments adding new sections 3 (a) (9), 3 (a) (10), and 3 (a) (11) are based upon sections 4 (3) and 5 (c) of the original act, which are proposed to be repealed. By placing these exemptions under section 3 it is made clear that securities entitled to exemption on original issuance retain their exemption; if the issuer is not obliged to register in order to make the original distribution, dealers within a year are subject to no restriction against dealing in the securities. The result is in line with the Commission's interpretation of the act as it stood before, but the amendment removes all doubt as to its correctness.

Section 3 (a) (9), which is based upon the first clause of old section 4 (3), contains slight verbal changes of a clarifying character, affirming the Commission's interpretation that the type of commission or other remuneration the payment of which will remove the exemption is that paid for soliciting an exchange. The changes to this amendment made in conference are intended only to clarify its meaning.

The new section 3 (a) (10) substantially incorporates the exemption provided by the second clause of the existing section 4 (3), but extends its provisions to cover readjustments of rights of holders of securities, claims, and property interests under court or similar supervision, even though the original issuer of the securities, debtor on the claims, or owner of the property in which interests are held, is not itself in the process of a reorganization. This makes the exemption available in many cases of real-estate reorganizations to which, under the wording of the existing section 4 (3), its application is now denied. The exemption also is made to apply where the supervision is exercised by officials and agencies of the United States, such as the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Farm Credit Administration. The supervision of similar State authorities, such as banking and insurance commissioners, will make the exemption available in corresponding cases, such as the reorganization of State banks or insurance companies. A limitation on the exemption has been added by the conferees in the requirement that the approval of the court or official, in order to be effective, must follow a hearing on the fairness of the terms and conditions of the issuance and exchange of the securities at which persons who are to receive such securities shall have a right to appear. Security holders' committees are to be denied the opportunity of obtaining exemptions under this section if they secure and exercise an exclusive right to appear for their depositors at hearings on plans of reorganization.

The new section 3 (a) (11) incorporates the existing section 5 (c) of the act and further makes clear that the exemption is not limited to the use of the mails if sales in the course of the distribution of the issue are limited to residents within a single State or Territory. Thus a person who comes within the purpose of the exemption, but happens to use a newspaper for the circulation of his advertising literature, which newspaper is transmitted in interstate commerce, does not thereby lose the benefits of the exemption.

The purposes of the amendments to section 4 (1) are (1) to remove the phrase "not with or through an underwriter" in the second clause of the section, and (2) to correct an error in the third clause of the section, making it clear that the original date of the public offering is the date from which the year is to be calculated during which a dealer is bound to supply his customers with a prospectus. The Commission has recognized by its interpretations that a "public offering" is necessary for "distribution." Therefore there can be no underwriter within the meaning of the act in the absence of a public offer and the phrase eliminated in the second clause is really superfluous. The conferees eliminated the third proposed amendment to this subsection on the ground that the participants in employees' stock-investment plans may be in as great need of the protection afforded by availability of information concerning the issuer for which they work as are most other members of the public.

The repeal of sections 4 (3) and 5 (c) is in conformity with the purpose of the amendments adding new sections 3 (a) (9), 3 (a) (10), and 3 (a) (11).

The purpose of the amendment to section 10 (b) (1) is to place only a reasonable instead of an absolute duty upon the user of a prospectus 13 months after its issuance of keeping the information therein up to date. It was originally conceived that users of prospectuses could protect themselves by contract with the issuer, but it appears only too likely that users of the prospectus will not exercise this forethought, and therefore will be left in a situation where they cannot of their own accord conform with the requirements of the act.

Section 11 (a) is amended so as to require proof that the purchaser of a security, at the time he acquired the security, relied upon the untrue statement in the registration statement or upon the registration statement and did not know of the omission. But this requirement is imposed only in the case of purchase after a period of 12 months subsequent to the effective registration date, and then only when the issuer shall have published an earning statement to its security holders covering a period of at least 12 months after the registration date. The basis of this provision is that in all likelihood the purchase and price of the security purchased after publication of such an earning statement will be predicated on that statement rather than upon the information disclosed upon registration.

The amendments to section 11 (b) (3) restate the substance of the existing provisions in language calculated more clearly to express the standard of care applicable in these cases. A clause in the amendments proposed by the Senate, continuing a requirement to the defense additional to those in the existing section, was eliminated by agreement in conference.

The amendment to section 11 (c) removes possible uncertainties as to the standard of reasonableness by substituting for the present language the accepted common-law definition of the duty of a fiduciary.

The amendments to section 11 (e) have three purposes: (1) To permit the defendant in an action under section 11 to reduce the damages so that he will not be liable for damages which he proves had no relation to his misconduct; (2) To permit an underwriter who does not knowingly receive preferential treatment to limit his total liability as regards all suits brought under section 11 to the aggregate offering price of that part of the issue underwritten by him and actually distributed; and (3) to provide, as a defense against blackmail suits as well as a defense against purely contentious litigation on the part of the defendant, that a court can require a bond for costs and can assess costs either against the plaintiff if his suit had no merit or against the defendant if his defense had none. The suggested amendments seem equitable. The changes in wording from the Senate amendments, agreed upon in conference, make it clear (1) that the limitation of underwriter's liability is not denied unless the preferential treatment was knowingly received and (2) that the extent of his liability is to be based upon the amount underwritten and distributed.

The amendments to section 13 reduce the periods of limitations on actions from those at present provided by the section. They also correct an apparently inadvertent omission by making the limitation expressly applicable to actions under section 12 (2).

Section 15 is proposed to be amended so as more accurately to carry out its real purpose. The mere existence of control is not made a basis for liability if it is shown that the controlling person had no knowledge of or reasonable ground to believe in the existence of the facts upon which the liability of the controlled person is alleged to be based.

The purpose of the amendments to section 19 (a) is to permit the regulations of the Commission, under the powers conferred upon it, adequately to protect persons who rely upon them in good faith. The powers of the Commission are also extended to include the defining of technical as well as trade and accounting terms.

Section 210 of title II of the substitute transfers the administration of the Securities Act from the Federal Trade Commission to the proposed Securities and Exchange Commission.

Sections 211 to 214 of this title, inclusive, as passed by the Senate, contained several amendments designed to place under requirements comparable to the registration requirement many protective committees which are now enjoying exemption therefrom under section 3 (a) (1), also to require periodical reports from them, and to notify all persons solicited if the composition of the soliciting committee or the terms of its deposit agreement failed to meet the recommendations of the Commission, as established by it by general rules. All these amendments were rejected in conference, on the ground that such changes in the treatment of committees should not be undertaken without more information indicating their advisability. To secure this information, the substitute section 211 agreed upon in conference authorizes and directs the Commission to make a study and investigation of such committees and to submit a report and recommendations on or before January 3, 1936.

SAM RAYBURN,
GEORGE HUDDLESTON,
CLARENCE F. LEA,
CARL E. MAPES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I shall take just a moment in explanation of the conference report and then I shall yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], or anyone else.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I have no statement to make. I think the chairman of the committee should make a statement to the House in respect to the conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I shall make a short statement. I think it might be said that this report of the committee on conference follows very closely the House bill, and also the Senate bill for the reason that in many of the paragraphs of the bill the provisions of the Senate and the House were practically identical.

There were two or three material differences between the bill that the House passed and the bill that the Senate passed. In the first place, the Senate added an amendment which provided for the creation of an independent commission to administer this act, and had a loose margin requirement in their bill. Their bill also provided for a splitting of any margin requirements which might be fixed; that is, that the margin requirement for the Federal Reserve banks should be in the Federal Reserve Board, and that the fixing of any margins for brokers and nonmember banks should be in the Commission. The House Membership thought that that would be a very serious mistake, and we so stated on the floor of the House.

In other words, if you had one body controlling margins, and the Senate bill provided loose margins, that body could fix the margin at anything it pleased. The Federal Reserve Board could fix a margin for a member bank which was on one corner of a street, and the commission, having control of margins for nonmember banks, could fix a different margin for a nonmember bank on another corner of the street, and you might run credit back and forth from one bank to the other, according as to which appeared to be the most favorable market to the prospective borrower. Also, some Members of the Senate shied very much over allowing the Federal Reserve Board, as we had provided in our bill, to fix margins for brokers, thinking they would mix up the Federal Reserve System with the stock exchange. We prevailed in that. We concentrated the margin requirements in the Federal Reserve Board, where we think all credit ought to lie. We also prevailed in the initial margins for borrowings being 45 percent, or a loan value of 55 percent unless the Federal Reserve Board, in its wisdom, made an affirmative finding that in the interest of trade and commerce it should be made higher or lower.

The House conferees prevailed on those two points, which we thought very vital; the House conferees yielded on the independent commission. As far as I am individually concerned, I still think it would have been better all the way around if the administration of the Securities Act had remained in the Federal Trade Commission and if the administration of this act had gone to the Federal Trade Commission, and for this reason: I think it is of great importance that the people who are going to be controlled and regulated by and under this law should know what the rules and regulations are to be at the earliest possible date, and I think, as other members of the House conference think, that it would bring about the rules and regulations at an earlier date if left to the Federal Trade Commission, but we finally yielded, and the law will be administered by a commission of five members, and the Federal Securities Act of 1933 by this conference-report agreement is transferred to this new commission, where I thought all the time it ought to be.

The Senate added a new section to the bill with reference to these protective committees, and we were not opposed to that in principle, but there are at least 13,000 of these protective committees in the United States, and to thrust this matter upon this new commission when it was organizing we thought would be too much, and that it might not result in any good. So in lieu of that we provided that this commission should study this matter of protective committees and report back to Congress by the 1st of January 1936.

Our bill provided the act should go into effect upon its passage. It was thought when setting out this new commission it might be better to change the date to July 1, 1934, and that was done.

Mr. Speaker, those are the material matters that I think are in the bill. That was the one point upon which we yielded, and the others run along practically with what the House bill had in it. I think that is all I desire to state.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield 5 minutes to me?

Mr. RAYBURN. In a moment. I first yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Has any change been made in the bill relative to short selling?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it is practically the same as the House provision.

Mr. SABATH. That leaves it up to the board or commission to pass upon?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. COLE. In the consideration of the bill in the House there were no changes made in the Securities Act of 1933?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. I forgot about that.

Mr. COLE. There were some amendments added to the stock-exchange bill in the Senate?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. COLE. Does the conference report change the Senate amendments of the Securities Act of 1933 in any respect?

Mr. RAYBURN. It does not change them in any respect except to revise them and take them over, not make any additions to.

Before I yield the floor I may say there were some amendments to the Securities Act of 1933 put on in the Senate. As I said in my statement on the floor, some people have gone out and unnecessarily frightened prospective issuers of securities with reference to the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. I am frank to say that I had seen those amendments before they were offered in the Senate. It was thought that there were at least some psychological amendments that might go in, some clarifying amendments, and perhaps one or two material amendments. There has been a question ever since the adoption of the Securities Act of 1933 with reference to the underwriter. We make it clear in these amendments that hereafter under no circumstances shall an underwriter be held responsible for any more of the issue than he himself personally underwrites.

In other words, if there is an issue of securities of $500,000 and an underwriter assumes the responsibility of putting upon the market $100,000, in no way can that be mixed with the other $400,000, and he can in no way be held responsible for any statement that anyone else makes.

Another rather material amendment goes to the responsibilities of directors and officers of corporations making these issues. It has been argued by many, and was argued during the consideration of the act of 1933, that before a purchaser of a security could recover from an issuer for a false or misleading statement, he should prove that he absolutely relied upon this false or misleading statement that was made. There is one thing certain, if that kind of section were put into the bill it would defeat action in 99 cases out of 100. But we did agree to an amendment put on by the Senate which provides that after the first financial statement of the issuer is made, then the man who buys a security in commerce after that must prove that he relied upon the statement and that he was deceived by the false and misleading statement. Up until the year or 23 months before some corporation makes a financial statement, the law remains the same as to the liability of officers and directors for false and misleading statements.

Those were the main amendments in the Securities Act. There are some clarifying amendments, but they are more psychological, I think, than material.

Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] desire some time?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to discuss the conference report, and I do not care to do so now. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has called attention to the high points in the report. I joined in signing the report of the conferees. The bill is not materially different as reported by the conference committee from what it was when it was passed by the House of Representatives. In my judgment, the chief difference is the establishment of a new commission to administer the act and the Securities Act, instead of the Federal Trade Commission, as provided in the House bill. It is my judgment, too, that those who are responsible for and who were the proponents of this change will live to rue the day that the change was made. It seems to me it would be preferable to leave the administration of this act with the Federal Trade Commission and to have the broad general policies of the act determined by that Commission as a body, some members of which will not be absorbed entirely in the administration of the act and would, therefore, bring to bear upon the questions of policy perhaps a broader viewpoint for that reason.

As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has explained, the Senate conferees insisted upon this new commission, and the House conferees yielded on that point, on the theory that, after all, it was not a major provision of the bill.

Personally I think this is very desirable and wholesome legislation. No one knows just how a law of this kind will work out in practice, but I have confidence that it will prove to be very much in the interest of the general public and the country.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House, I voiced my objections to certain provisions of the bill. I was in hope that when we went into conference they could be modified or eliminated altogether. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, especially the conferees, have worked hard to put this measure together. There is no one, except the members of the committee, who knows what a great problem this has been for us during the last 10 or 12 weeks. I want to commend the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for his fairness, for the manner in which he has conducted the hearings as chairman of the committee, and also the proceedings of the conference; also all the other members of the committee, and especially those who were members of the conference committee.

The provisions of the bill to which I objected when it was before the House are still in the measure, and I think it is only fair for me to say at this time that it would be rather inconsistent for me to change my attitude now and vote for the measure. Therefore, I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I voted against this bill, somewhat reluctantly, when it came before the House, because I believed that some regulation of the stock exchange was necessary. I believed at the time there were a number of rather drastic provisions in the bill. Therefore, when it came to a final vote, I voted against it, with the hope that when the conferees met they would bring back a workable, better, and more acceptable bill by eliminating some of the drastic provisions.

I am glad today not only to go on record as favoring the conference report but I also hope to vote for it. I commend the chairman of the committee and the conferees for the ability they displayed and their fairness in yielding on the Bulwinkle amendment for a separate commission and for including modifications of the Securities Act which I believe will be beneficial to business and help the flow of capital into industry. They partially accepted the amendment I proposed, to put in the word "order" alongside "regulations" so as to protect private-property rights. I hope the chairman of the committee will ask for a roll call. I believe that there are a score or more of Republicans who did not vote for the bill originally who, if given an opportunity, today will vote for it because they believe the conference report is much fairer and that the measure is greatly improved and in the public interest.

There is only one provision which, in my judgment, is in dispute, and that is the question of margins. I, frankly, do not know enough about it to know whether the provision in regard to margin in the conference report is workable. Time alone will tell. Members of the stock exchange tell us that it will ruin their business. The members of the committee who heard the witnesses at the hearings state that it is the proper thing to do in order to protect the American public. We do not know ourselves as Members of Congress which is correct; only actual trial will tell, and if we are wrong, we will have to formulate new legislation. But in the meanwhile it is evident that most of the rest of the provisions of the bill are workable. We started to pass a bill to regulate the exchange, and the committee taking the radical and socialistic concoctions of the junior "brain trust", amounting almost to economic and financial atrocities, has written perhaps what is as fair a bill as could be passed at this session to regulate the exchanges in order to prevent a recurrence of excessive speculation and to safeguard, as far as possible, marginal gambling which has caused financial panics and enormous financial losses and ruin to millions of industrious Americans.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, when in 1929 it became generally known that the deposits, as well as other available cash, were being withdrawn from legitimate channels for speculative and gambling purposes, I realized the danger that confronted the country and endeavored in my humble way to arrest the vicious and dangerous wave of speculation then engulfing the Nation by appealing to President Hoover, the Federal Reserve, and to the controlling stock-exchange officials, but they paid no heed to my warning.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in December of that fateful year I introduced my first resolution to investigate the stock exchanges and also several other bills, one to tax short selling and one to prevent short selling, believing that short selling is a crime, because in the end it brings about the complete destruction of the value of all stocks as well as bonds.

I shall not detain you today with a recital of all the activities and work of the committee during 4½ years, but permit me to say that I am immensely pleased that the committee have been able to agree on a bill. They did not go perhaps as far as I wish they had gone, but I am immensely pleased with the results that have been accomplished and shall support the conference report. I am firmly convinced that this bill will bring about control of the greatest gambling institution in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, it is my opinion that of all the legislation enacted during my 28 years' service—yes, from the inception of the Government—none was of greater importance or will be more beneficial to the American people than this stock-exchange regulation bill of 1934, provided, of course, it is sanely and efficiently enforced.

I very much deplore that the Federal Reserve Board, which is more or less controlled by the banking institutions, not only of this country but also of England, has been given in this act the power to determine marginal requirements. I had hoped that the responsibility and enforcement would not be divided.

As many of you know, since December 9, 1929, I have made many speeches on this subject, and 2 months before that I started what I believed to be a righteous crusade against the palpable, vicious practices that were tolerated and practiced on all the stock exchanges; therefore I hesitate to address the House at this late date on this subject, important though it be; but I feel that I owe it to the country and to myself to set forth in permanent form the motives that have ever actuated me, with modest ability, in trying to eliminate the obnoxious and nefarious abuses that caused the catastrophic, economic, and financial hurricane which, by the way, was not a providential act, but the act of a few greedy, avaricious, modern Herods, malefactors, most of whom had by most questionable methods acquired great wealth and assumed high social and business positions. I refer, of course, to that unenviable class that has never honestly produced or created any portion of its wealth.

Mr. Speaker, when, in the fall of 1928 and early in 1929, bank deposits were being withdrawn, especially from small banks, I persistently and insistently and continuously urged officers of these institutions to ascertain for what purpose those withdrawals were being made. Shortly thereafter I was, unfortunately, confirmed in my suspicion that these withdrawals were being made for the purpose of investing in stocks and bonds; but no amount of suasion or argument by officials of these banks could deter the depositors from so doing.

Vividly remembering the conditions that brought about the panic of 1893 and the panic of 1907, I felt it to be my duty to urge strenuously that people desist from such dubious investments and adventurous speculations, but, unfortunately, the press of the country, encouraged and prodded by President Coolidge, President Hoover, Secretary Mellon, Assistant Secretary Mills, the House of Morgan, and other large financiers, together with many of the officials of the largest corporations, made the people believe that we were on the verge of still greater prosperity, which would continue forever.

But, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, reading the financial reports and other news of our economic status as of that date, I could easily discern that we could not possibly maintain that unprecedented activity, and that sooner or later we would be engulfed in the maelstrom of our own folly. In that belief I was also, unfortunately, confirmed. In June and July, when the directors of most of the large corporations started in an astute and clever manner to unload gradually their holdings and securities, when call money started to rise and reached 15, 18, and 20 percent, and the small bankers all over the Nation were being urged to send their available cash to Wall Street, I urged the directors of several small banks not to yield to the temptation of gambling, and thereby deprive legitimate business of necessary and proper credit.

But, as was shown later, the temptation was too great to resist the clarion calls of the Wall Street musicians and the balances of cash in assets used by individuals for this were withdrawn from every section of our land, so that not only the employees and people in private life but also the small manufacturers and small business men all over the United States were inveigled into parting with their hard-earned and accumulated savings, and in that way the country was milked dry of nearly all available cash, which found its eternal resting place in the coffers of the Wall Street manipulators.

Realizing that the value of stocks had been driven to such an unreasonable height, in many instances 10 or 20 times their value, and that the banks, as well as many of the insurance companies, in their greed and lust for great profits had loaned at a high rate of interest millions and millions of the people's money in connection with these fictitious prices of stock, I feared the awful crash that later came.

It was not until then that we heard a word of warning from the Federal Reserve Board; and that is the reason I am unwilling to give that recreant institution that so inexcusably and untenably failed in its plain, unmistakable duty to safeguard the credit of the Nation the power that is being given it in this bill.

Sensing the approaching danger and the catastrophic hurricane that ensued, long before the storm broke with such great fury, I urged minimizing or an actual suspension of the activities of the stock exchanges, and I especially urged the immediate cessation of all short selling of stocks.

Feeling that the professional manipulators who were responsible for this criminal inflation would at the first chance take the other side and start a forced selling campaign by those who had purchased on their advice on margins, and thereby effect a demoralization if not a complete destruction of prices, I appealed by letters and telegrams to President Hoover, to the Federal Reserve Board, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to the blessed House of Morgan, and to the responsible officers of the stock exchanges.

I am reminded by copies of many telegrams and letters in my files that I pleaded earnestly with these rascals of the stock exchanges that they should, if not for the country's sake, then for their own ultimate sake, immediately stop these malignant practices that were even then so unerringly pointing to destruction. I called timely attention to the effect these practices would have if these unscrupulous, soulless Herods were permitted to continue that ruthless program of annihilation.

On December 9, 1929, the first day of the Seventy-second Congress, I took the floor of this House and though the storm had then almost completely engulfed us, made a plea that there was still time within which to save the Nation and the millions of honest investors from complete ruin, but my appeals and warnings received about as much thoughtful attention as does the wave that hits yonder shore, because the answer was, "Let the liquidation take its course." No effort was made to minimize the effect of that soul-stirring catastrophe.

During the entire 3 years, 1930, 1931, and 1932, not a single effort was made by the powerful, predatory banking interests or the spineless Hoover administration to soften the blow or arrest the progress of this raging financial storm; but I did not desist. Early in 1930 and 1931 I pleaded with the Federal Reserve Board with the emphasis of hand upon heart to accept for rediscount the Reconstruction Finance Corporation paper, short-term municipal paper, and mortgages on the homes of American citizens; and though the Federal Reserve Board had ample power to rediscount Reconstruction Finance Corporation paper to the extent of two billions, which would have strengthened, if not saved, the credit of the Nation, yet the Federal Reserve Board supinely refused to act, while the indefensible practices on the stock exchanges continued to force the sale of millions upon millions of securities held by the various banks and like institutions, until late in 1932 there was an average loss on all investments of our country of more than 83 percent. Many securities even became absolutely valueless. During these trying and heart-rending times of complete despair the gentleman of the stock exchanges through their hundreds of new branches established in every village and hamlet in the United States continued to reap a harvest by circulating false and misleading rumors through a subsidized press and their own representatives in all parts of the country.

I charge again today that the authors of that great Nation-wide crash were the stock exchanges, the criminal inflation, the unpardonable, shameful manipulation of stocks, the unwarranted issuance of millions and millions of new shares of stocks, the overcapitalization of companies and corporations, the merger of corporations, all for the purpose of giving them additional new worthless issues to unload at 10 times their value upon a gullible and credulous public.

As will be recalled, six, yes, as many as ten million shares a day were traded on the New York Exchange, the curb, and other exchanges throughout the United States. Iniquitous gambling pools to sell short were being organized and everything possible was being done to destroy the last vestige of worth in any of these issues. During these trying days I pleaded and pleaded and urged and urged and appealed and appealed to the New York Stock Exchange to arrest and to stop this damnable procedure, to stop the short selling, to stop the pool operations and many other baneful abuses practiced there, all for the one purpose and it alone, namely, to make profits for themselves regardless of the cost to the country. Instead of complying with my appeals and supplications and exhortations the stock exchanges engaged in publicity directed by the greatest experts in that field. They directed radiobroadcasts and issued thousands and thousands of bulletins and press notices to disparage me and my efforts in opposing their vile machinations.

Naturally, I am gratified, after 4½ years of trial, to see a remedial and just law going upon the statutes, which law, I hope, may forever prevent such panics as those of 1893, 1907, and the archcrime of 1929. When I say crime, Mr. Speaker, I mean crime. That was the greatest crime perpetrated against a nation of 130,000,000 freedmen in the history of the world. True, from time to time the multitudes have suffered from war, from devastation of their country by foreign enemies, by pestilence, by floods, by great conflagrations, but these were understandable acts of Providence. Not so, however, as to the ruthless and indelible destruction of 1929 which caused more suffering, which caused untold deaths among men and women and children through malnutrition, which filled thousands of cemeteries with unmerited suicides, and made thousands upon thousands homeless, and deprived 16,000,000 men of employment with which to earn their bread. These were not providential visitations but were due solely to the unchecked greed of stock gamblers.

Millions upon millions of willing men and women, stalwart American citizens, lost their farms, their homes, their self-respect, their all. Millions of depositors lost the savings that they had calculated to allow them to spend the declining years of life in earned happiness and peace after storm-tossed careers. Not even old men and old women and orphans escaped this scourge. The thirst for the life-blood of society was so strong that nothing could prevail against it. I am told that even blind men and women were robbed without mercy or conscience. Over 16,000,000 men and women, willing workers all, were, through no fault of their own, deprived of the means of livelihood and were reduced to the deplorable necessity of asking their Government, their cities, and their municipalities for aid, which aid has bankrupted many States and municipalities and caused an enormous increase in the public debt of the National Government. These are the unpardonable crimes these shameless racketeers, these flagitious buccaneers, these cold-blooded murderers will have to meet before the bar of history.

All this was brought about by a few designing men who continued to live in luxury in their palatial homes here and abroad and on their expensive yachts, living shamelessly upon the ill-gotten profits garnered from the misery of millions of suffering human beings. And, as if to add insult to injury, these criminals yet have the temerity, the gall, the audacity, the impudence, and the effrontery to say to us representatives of 130,000,000 free people, "You must not go too far to abbreviate our privileges; we have an institution that is needed as a legitimate agency of business, as a legitimate exchange."

Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen, I fully recognize that we need a legitimate exchange, but we should unmistakably put an end to the illegitimate, dishonest, vicious trespasses and excesses of this or any other similar institution in the United States.

Again, I very much deplore that we have in the United States many intelligent, well-meaning men who permit themselves to be used by this dastardly institution, which has admitted, under the compulsion of an official oath, that it has expended more than a billion dollars in propaganda to prevent this wholesome legislation.

I am today more proud of my associates than I have ever been. Undeniably real representatives of a free electorate, you have done a great work for a great people. I have always maintained that the vast majority of public officials, especially of the Congress, are not only honest and of splendid ability, but they desire faithfully to serve the people. The vote on this legislation proves unmistakably that any attempt on the part of the unrighteous to browbeat is always doomed to failure. I admit that here and there we find a man in public life who forgets his duty, his oath of office, and who permits his name, his character, his intellect, to be used by the vested interests behind such as the stock exchanges; but what, I ask, makes men dishonest; who, I ask, is it that is responsible for men going wrong? It is the temptation, it is the bribes, in one way or another, left-handed and right-handed, that are forthcoming from these greedy, avaricious degenerates who have tempted and who will continue to tempt deserving men.

If I personally had the necessary power, I would utilize it all, and the entire remainder of my life, in trying to devise legislation whereby, not those who accept bribes but those who give them would be punished.

In conclusion, I cannot refrain from stating that I am glad that I have been in a position to in some degree bring about this remedial legislation. I hope with all my heart this legislation may prevent a repetition of the unprecedented crime of 1929 by the stock exchanges of the United States; and though the important Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House is entitled to great credit in this connection, yet the real credit for this very good work belongs and must go to that intrepid, splendid, courageous, determined, forward-looking, sincere leader of leaders in the betterment of humankind, who had the best interests of the masses at heart, and whose only aim in the world is to improve the conditions of the masses, the greatest of all the great Presidents, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

I wish to insert for the RECORD a statement of suggestions by Mr. A. N. Ridgley, of Brooklyn, N.Y., a writer and financial expert, who aided me greatly from the beginning of my crusade against the unfair practices of the stock exchange. I feel that Mr. Ridgley's statement carries some very honest and concrete suggestions, and hope they will receive real consideration at the hands of those entrusted with the enforcement of this act:

THE STOCK EXCHANGE BILL—IS IT ENFORCEABLE?

The vicious Wall Street system is finally, after a century of unchallenged domination which it has abused beyond all limits of decency and public safety, at bay. But it has not given up hope of being able to regain, by cunning and sly subterfuge, at least a goodly part of its power and vast spoils.

It is perhaps idle to point out certain omissions that will enable many clauses to be made ineffective, assuming, as is reasonable, that the gentlemen appointed to administer the bill are without personal, practical knowledge of Wall Street's underground methods, and do not understand the intricacies and technicalities of the great racket. A man may have learned how to swim from a book, but to be a lifeguard he needs experience in deep water.

There are some things, however, that the Commission in any case will do well to ponder. One or both sides of manipulative transactions can be taken care of through Canada or London, and even the houses who execute the orders need not know the facts. In the case of ordinary "wash" sales and matched orders, only an expert can or will detect what is going on. Plans already have been almost perfected to get around some clauses of the bill. Toronto houses can establish branches in New York, and through them the financing can be done and the stocks carried right here—flouting the supposed margin rules, for the business will be outside of our laws.

Or the broker as an individual can make a personal loan to a responsible customer, who can indirectly apply this loan to his margin account. It is just a question of credit and understanding. The margin clause is good, however, in that it will tend to restrict over-speculation by the outside public and keep away small people who have no business to be in Wall Street. But in any case, no matter what the original margin may be it should be kept good; otherwise, big margins are playing right into the hands of master manipulators, who can after unloading on the public easily mark down prices 50 percent and thus "trim" the outsider for far more than the former usual 10 or 12 percent.

The three real and efficient remedies, which can and should be enforced, the bill being construed to cover them, if the Commission knows its job, will absolutely protect the public without anything else whatever, and will be helpful rather than harmful to all honest enterprises. They follow:

First. Criminal proceedings with prison sentences against proven pool operators: The clearing-house sheets of the New York Stock and Curb Exchanges to be examined daily by Federal officials, who are shifted frequently to various posts to prevent bribery or collusion, and the entry ledgers of all exchange houses to be completely open to a Federal committee whenever there are crossed purchases and sales appearing on the clearing-house sheets, thus tracing pool operations and operators and brokers therein.

Second. Frequent (if possible, monthly) complete financial statements, intelligible to the layman, from all and every corporation listed on any stock exchange, showing not only earnings, conditions, and prospects, but of what "surplus" consists, whether it be cash, goodwill, frozen assets, or mere junk; showing all income and outlay, including salaries and secret bonuses, fees, commissions, and profits paid to bankers and executives, and secret rebates to favored customers. The statements also should be made positively to show the names of stockholders, especially executives and directors, owning 1,000 shares or more, and the change in their holdings since the previous statement.

Third. A dictum absolutely forbidding overcapitalization and split-ups (as recently done by National Distillers, near top price, of course). This includes all no-par stocks. The millions of no-par-value stuff with nothing back of it except rainbow promises, and unloaded on the public and country banks at 10 to 50 times its worth, with the "split-ups", were what caused the crash and its tragic aftermaths. The sole objective of each and every split-up always is to facilitate "distribution" of stock that has been manipulated to figures so high that it has become much less saleable to the public because of the large outlay involved. Split-ups are simply a sales device, and have always been a most successful one for entrapping the unwary.

All stocks listed should have a definite par value fully covered by cash or its equivalent. If this had been done and companies forced to pay cash for new plants instead of merely using the printing press (with free printings for favored insiders) bank failures would have been infinitely fewer. If done now it will be a deadly blow to manipulation.

These are really adequate remedies that can be enforced and, if enforced, will prove an insurmountable barrier to banksters and pool sharks—far more effective than tinkering with margin requirements, which actually is no remedy at all for the exploitation of the investor, and may indeed prove the reverse. Statesmen who are interested in these matters can obtain further data in my pamphlets: Preventable Panics, Wall Street's Crime, Inflation-Deflation, etc., postfree. (They were quoted in both Houses of Congress.)

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will remember that in the discussion when the bill was under consideration in the House I voiced some apprehension about the small corporate entities whose securities were unregistered, that they might be placed under undue restrictions with respect to the over-the-counter markets. I understand the bill has been amended and an exception has been made in their favor.

Mr. RAYBURN. An exception is made in unregistered securities of companies predominantly intrastate in character.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House a further letter from the secretary of commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania, announcing ratification by the General Assembly of that State of the proposed child-labor amendment.

THE PUERTO RICAN SUGAR QUOTA FIXED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE IS UNFAIR, UNJUST, AND ECONOMICALLY UNSOUND

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, the quota of 803,000 tons fixed by the Department of Agriculture for Puerto Rico is unfair, unjust, and economically unsound in view of its present sugar crop of about 1,100,000 tons. It is a severe and drastic limitation of the amount of sugar they can send to the United States; and it will cause serious disturbances to its economic structure and untold suffering and hardships to its people, more than half of whom are in some way or other wholly dependent upon sugar, its largest and most important industry. In the face of such a large crop, the least that might have been done for Puerto Rico would have been to fix its quota at 875,000 tons, the figure agreed upon at the sugar conference of 1933.

The Sugar Act of May 9, 1934, is an outright discrimination and is unfair and unjust to the 1,600,000 American citizens of Puerto Rico. While it fixes definite quotas for areas in continental United States it leaves the determination of the Puerto Rican quota to the Secretary of Agriculture. Besides, it restricts the production of refined sugar in the island, while it puts no limitation whatsoever on the continental refiners. There is no reason or justice for this distinction between continental citizens and those who inhabit our island possessions. They should and must be accorded the same treatment and consideration.

We must repair this wrong. Senator COPELAND and myself have introduced a bill (S. 3590 and H.R. 9570) which amends the Sugar Act to the extent that it gives Puerto Rico a definite raw-sugar quota of 875,000 tons and removes all restrictions on its refined sugar. Only by the passage of this bill will the people of Puerto Rico receive the consideration and treatment that they rightfully deserve as American citizens.

STREET AND HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I introduced in the House today a resolution to encourage public movement of street and highway safety, and in connection therewith I desire to make a statement.

The manner in which our streets and highways are used by both automobile drivers and pedestrians has been called the "great American gamble." We find that the losses last year in this form of chance-taking amounted to around 30,000 people killed, nearly a million people injured seriously, and an economic waste of $2,000,000,000. Already this year deaths are from 20 to 25 percent greater than they were the same time last year, and unless steps can be taken to rid our streets and highways of the careless, automobile-accident fatalities will reach a total of from 35,000 to 36,000 this year, which would be the high mark thus far in the number of casualties.

The record of the number of persons killed and injured nonfatally in automobile accidents in 1933, as in previous years, resembles a list of war casualties. When it is remembered that since the beginning of 1930 nearly 4,000,000 persons have suffered nonfatal injuries and nearly 125,000 have been killed, it can only be concluded that the American public is willing to take part in a concerted program designed to prevent some of these casualties.

The record of automobile-accident casualties for the remainder of the present decade, on the basis of the experience of the last 4 years, will be nearly 190,000 deaths and approximately 6,000,000 injured—a total for the decade of around 315,000 killed and 10,000,000 injured.

Thus in a 10-year period the number of people killed by automobiles would exceed America's record of soldiers killed during all the history of this country, and would surpass the fatal battle casualties of the American Expeditionary Forces in the World War more than six times. The number of persons injured nonfatally from automobile accidents during the present decade would exceed by more than 50 times the A.E.F.'s record of soldiers wounded nonfatally in action. Thus it is evident that our automobile-accident problem is a most serious one, and that only by arousing a public consciousness as to this terrible loss of life and limb can we hope to safeguard our people as they drive and walk on our streets and highways.

Let us look at the number of deaths in the United States from automobile accidents in the past 10 years. They total around 275,000. In the past 15 years more people have been killed in automobile accidents than the country lost by wounds incurred in battle in the 15 years in which it was engaged in its six major wars—the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, Civil War, Spanish-American War, and World War.

Some people may say that nothing can be done to improve this record of deaths and injuries from automobile accidents. There is just as much defeatism when the automobile accident record is discussed as there is about crime, war, or anything else. But I want to point out that smallpox, yellow fever, and many dread scourges are almost unheard of today. Diphtheria is becoming less frequent and real progress is recorded against tuberculosis. Some of these campaigns have involved scientific research, some merely education, some combinations of the two, and from the results of these efforts to improve health conditions of the country at large, we may be assured that ways can be found, as they must, to prevent death and injury from automobile accidents.

The education of the public in the safe use of streets and highways can do much to safeguard life and limb, and this resolution by the Congress would be a step in that direction, as it would serve to focus public attention on the problem, thereby gaining public support for the many agencies working to prevent automobile accidents. There are some facts available that show what has and what has not been accomplished by education along the lines of automobile-accident prevention. Among all ages there has been an increase of 96 percent in deaths from automobile accidents from 1922 through 1931.

All age groups except one contributed to this increase. The one age group which showed a decrease was that of children between 5 and 9 years old. These children had safety drummed into them in the schools. If the public at large could also be reached with the safety message, might we not assume that the loss of life and limb would grow less instead of greater? That some way of inculcating safe-driving ideas will have to be found is self-evident, and it also is self-evident that something can be done to make our streets and highways safer. The effect of arousing public consciousness of the seriousness of the automobile-accident problem will be apparent, when we realize that every minute of driving an automobile requires the operator to make some decision that often means the difference between life and death, well-being and serious injury, and that every time a pedestrian sets out upon street or highway he is called upon to make some decision that often means the difference between life and death, well-being and serious injury. The driver is called upon to decide whether under the circumstances the car ahead shall be passed, whether to insist on taking the right-of-way at the intersection or crossroad, even though another driver may be bent also on assuming the right-of-way, whether to slow down on a road because of the hazards of traffic, an approaching curve, hill, or crossing. The pedestrian is called upon to decide whether to cross the intersection against the light, whether to hurry across the middle of the block rather than at the crosswalk, whether to risk his life by appearing in the street from behind a parked car; to walk along a country highway after night without a light or some distinguishable object to serve as a warning of his presence.

The consequences of the accidents which happen with too persistent regularity are painful injuries, even death—not only to the drivers themselves but their passengers, occupants of other cars, pedestrians who may or may not have played a part in the incidents. But if people realized the dangers, many automobile accidents would never happen.

The fundamental prerequisite to a reduction in the loss of life and limb and damage to property from automobile accidents is the realization and the exercise of personal responsibility by those using the streets and highways. In the use of the streets and highways, the exercise of personal responsibility serves always as a deterrent of improper actions.

The frequency with which automobile accidents occur at locations presumably under control indicates that neither regulation nor enforcement can supplant personal responsibility. Carelessness in the use of streets and highways on so widespread a scale will cease when people begin to exercise the restraint that comes with an appreciation and exercise of personal responsibility.

Practically two-thirds of the automobile accidents of 1933 were due in some degree to driving errors. Among these, exceeding the speed limit resulted in the greatest number of deaths. To drive fast, or too fast for the conditions, is to increase the probability of death in the event of an accident.

Pedestrians, however, should realize the hazard which they face in the improper use of streets and highways.

As set forth in the title and preamble of this resolution, its adoption by the Congress would result in an annual proclamation by the President of the United States and a concerted public movement of street and highway safety. There are millions of our citizens who are eager to participate in a program of safeguarding life and limb, if only they are called upon for assistance by the proper authorities. I, therefore, urge the adoption of this resolution by the Congress, believing as I do that the well-being of our citizens at large throughout the United States will be enhanced by the movement which its adoption will set in motion.

PROTECTION OF OUR OWN INDUSTRIES

MR. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, your attention and that of my colleagues is challenged to a matter of very serious import in which national policy is concerned. Our country is rich in its agricultural fertility and endowed minerally to the extent that we are almost independent and self-contained regarding essential products, commodities, and minerals. Such of these as we do not produce nor mine we can obtain from more than one other source.

However, there is an agricultural product—grown in my district, I am proud to say—which is essential and moreover vital in its indispensability, which is produced nowhere in the world except in California and Japan.

Hippocrates, known historically as the "Father of Medicine", was not only cognizant of the virtues of menthol but it was the principal drug of his limited materia medica, being used at that day for the alleviation of pain by external application.

Menthol is universally used as a necessary ingredient of many medicines and preparations for the relief and cure of pulmonary disorders and respiratory diseases.

The Veterans' Administration, with the Army and Navy of the United States, are comparatively large purchasers of menthol in periodic replenishment of their supplies. We now arrive at a matter of vital national concern. Menthol being an irreplaceable drug, indicated in the treatment of the most common disorders, it is trite to say that the California industry should have the support of our Government divisions, considering that in the event of an emergency which would deprive us of the Japanese supply that it would require 3 years to propagate sufficient plant supply in California to furnish the domestic needs in our country.

The flooding of our mercantile distributive channels with goods and wares produced and manufactured in countries of low labor cost, aided by a policy of deliberate currency depreciation, resulted in a creeping paralysis of industry and merchandising in our country, with the result that Congress memorialized a national policy in title III, section 2, Public Act 428, Seventy-second Congress, which requires the purchase by governmental subdivisions of products and commodities produced within the United States, unless the price is unreasonable.

It is my contention that the reasonable price determination is to be arrived at from a consideration of the costs of production and manufacture within the United States and not by comparison with the cost of a product produced in an alien clime by workers paid a mere pittance and brought into this country under a depreciated currency, which at times has reached a value of 16 cents a yen, as compared with a parity of 49.75 cents a yen.

Certainly the grand object of Congress is not furthered nor is the law observed when the Veterans' Administration, by a mere comparison of prices with the Japanese product, decides that the price of the California product is unreasonable without consideration, apparently, of the effect of deliberate currency depreciation, or more relevantly, the costs of production within the United States of the domestic product operating under the Blue Eagle in the industrial division of the industry and remunerating native California farm laborers and ranch owners in the agricultural part of the undertaking.

In their competitive bids the California industry has placed before the Veterans' Administration complete cost data showing the price asked for the domestic product is reasonable from the costs incurred, but apparently the Veterans' Administration insist on favoring the Japanese product on the basis of a mere price comparison. The policy of the Veterans' Administration in this respect has proven in the past to have been "penny-wise and pound-foolish."

Japanese menthol is controlled by a trust commonly known as the "Skynt" combination, deriving its name from the initial letters of the five firms who compose it. Whether one buys the product of S, K, Y, N, or T, the price is identical. Until 1922 this monopoly controlled the price of menthol in the world, as the sole source was Japan. As they pleased, the selling price of this essential product was controlled, resulting in an almost vertical rise of several hundred percent in price at various periods.

With the establishment of the industry in California in 1922 menthol was bringing $8 a pound in New York. The year before it had brought $4.50 a pound. While the Japanese earthquake in no way increased costs, it was thought advantageous to increase prices arbitrarily to $13.50 a pound, and we find the Veterans' Administration paying $12 a pound for Japanese menthol in the year 1924.

The first production of California came on the market in 1924, amounting to 600 pounds, which was increased 300 percent in the succeeding year to 1,800 pounds, and continued to increase each successive year, until in 1930 a peak of 15,000 was reached. Now, note the effect of price resulting from the California competition:

Year	Imports of Japanese menthol to United States and average price annually		California production (pounds)
	Pounds	Price at New York
1918	172,000	$5.30	----------
1919	296,000	8.40	----------
1920	206,000	9.00	(1)
1921	165,000	4.50	----------
1922	182,000	8.00	----------
1923	198,000	[2] 13.50	----------
1924	194,000	13.00	600
1925	294,000	11.50	1,800
1926	452,000	6.00	4,000
1927	539,000	4.50	5,500
1928	193,000	5.10	9,000
1929	391,000	5.20	12,000

[1] Propagation of roots in California preparatory to commercial production.
[2] Veterans' Administrator pays $12 a pound.
[3] Not available.

O Mr. Speaker, in the face of these eloquent figures could the most ardent internationalist conscientiously say that the backbone of Japanese monopoly in menthol was not broken by the California industry?

Bear in mind, please, that I have set out average annual data as to prices. As a matter of fact, the United States Department of Agriculture informs us in their Technical Bulletin No. 378, on the "Commercial possibilities of Japanese mint in the United States as a source of natural menthol", that in 1923 menthol reached $20 a pound.

Is there a single apologist of that unnatural clan who deplore our commercial progress and would present to alien industry and commerce our rich domestic markets who will raise his voice to say that the Japanese arbitrarily and artificially skyrocketed to the skies and plummeted to the depths the price of a life-saving product, and that this manipulation is justifiable?

Are the veterans of the various wars lying in our many Government hospitals to depend on the whim and caprice of a foreign nation whose occupation of foreign soil was the occasion of numerous notes from our Department of State involving the violation of solemn treaties while a division of the United States continues to favor an alien monopoly in contravention of the policy expressed by this Congress in the plainly written law of the land?

Mr. Speaker, I have one more anomaly to add to my sorry story. The farmers of menthol in my district have found it necessary to plow up the menthol and replant the same acreage to cotton, as it was impossible to meet the ruinous prices resulting from Japanese yen depreciation. This results, of course, in increased production of a crop which our Department of Agriculture has paid out Government money to reduce.

Thus while one division of our Government stifles an independent and vital industry by favoring an alien product contrary to the expressed national policy enacted into law, another division concerned with agriculture is burdened with an increase in a crop which is already overproduced.

Today the menthol industry in California is tottering to its grave. The splendid distillation plant at Shafter, Calif., and the elaborate refining factory at Burbank may rust and rot, and in time serve as monuments to the efforts of the California farmers and chemists who undertook to relieve their country from the grasping monopoly of an alien folk who exacted an unconscionable and unholy profit from those who were wracked on their sick bed by those dreaded respiratory diseases which only menthol alleviates.

In this year of 1934 there will be no production of California menthol and this industry is again returned to the Japanese monopoly to do with as they will. Someone exercising the responsibility of government is answerable.

RESULTS OF MEASURES ENACTED BY EXTRA SESSION OF SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, records show on the statute books of the several counties, States, and the Nation that the bad management or unjointed set-up of Government procedure for 12 years prior to March 4, 1933, had plunged the Nation into the worst panic or depression this country ever experienced. It was apparent, and it is now magnified to be the truth, that the helter-skelter plan of the Government, or, rather, lack of plan, was the major cause of the crash in November 1929. This condition was brought about by the unsound leadership, or lack of leadership, of the Republican Party of this country.

It is no uncommon thing to make a mistake in judgment. One cannot be criticized for making such a mistake; but the individual, as well as the group, can be criticized for the lack of planning to meet emergencies. Of course, where there is no vision the people perish. Evidently the Nation's Republican leadership during the fat years of 1922–29 had no vision. There was no planning. The crash came in November 1929. Five million, ten million, fifteen million—and in February 1933 it had mounted to some eighteen million men out of employment. That was bad indeed, but the worst part of it was that there was no plan whatever in the Nation's set-up to put them back to work.

Not only were these 18 million out of employment in February 1933, but the women and children that were depending upon this employment added some 35 million more to the group, and we had on March 4, 1933, when the present administration went into power, some 50 million men, women, and children depending on relief from some source.

That there was no plan or set-up of activity is shown by the fact that we had in this Nation hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton in our warehouses without a market, yet tens of thousands of children shivering in the cold because of lack of clothes. We had millions of bushels of wheat in our granaries, yet thousands and thousands of men, women, and children hungry for bread. We had hundreds of thousands of pounds of leather stored up by the producers of leather, and yet multiplied thousands of women and children walking the rough roads and chilly streets without shoes. Surely in this day of scientific management and planning something could have been done to adjust such a situation.

On March 4, 1933, President Roosevelt said in his inaugural address, "We must have action and action now."

The Seventy-third Congress, of which I am proud to be a Member, went into action March 8, 1933. This Congress rolled up their sleeves, as it were, and went to work in behalf of the farmer and the laborer and the business man. They enacted some 15 measures that not only have, and will, take care of these groups socially and economically, but will also make it possible for the operators of our mills and factories and mines to operate at a living profit and at the same time pay men a living wage.

Never before in the history of the United States Congress has there been such careful planning and such thoughtful action taken in behalf of labor. Never before has a set-up provided the machinery by which cutthroat business transactions can be eliminated. Never before has Congress made it possible for the owners and operators of mills and mines and factories to stabilize their business and plan for the future.

We have now arrived at the place where we can say that the set-up of the measures enacted by the first session of the Seventy-third Congress are fundamentally sound and effective. A space of some 8 or 10 months of application to the physical and human needs of the Nation has demonstrated that these measures are at least 80 or 90 percent sound. Those of us who worked for and supported these measures said that if they worked out 66⅔ percent efficiently and effectively, we would be satisfied. President Roosevelt said, after we had passed the measures and put them in his hands to sign, that he did not expect them to work out 100 percent, but if they did not work out satisfactorily he would ask Congress to make adjustments until they did work out. He asked Congress this session to make some adjustments, and we made them.

Once in a while we hear some one individual or see some article decrying the constitutionality of some of the measures that Congress passed. Is it not a fine thing that we have at least 120,000,000 of the people who believe that the Constitution of the United States is, and of right ought to be, broad enough and flexible enough to care for the people of the United States? The framers of the Constitution took care of that. Some self-opinionated judge here and there may hand down a decision about the constitutionality of some measure. Some Darrow may harrow over some codes and give his one-sided opinion about their adaptability to social and economic needs. Some partisan standpatter may yell or howl about the application of these several measures as they are being applied throughout the Nation on farm and in mill and factory. But all they need to do is just to check up the actual social and economic conditions in the country now as compared with March 4, 1933.

Such a check-up tells the story. Of course, our memories are bad at times, and in this case the memory of our Republican leaders is very bad. The Republican layman and the Democratic layman have a vivid picture in front of them of the conditions now as compared with February 1933. You go to any town or city or hamlet on a Saturday evening now, this June 1934, and walk into the drug store or the shoe store or the clothing store and observe the purchases now as compared with 2 years ago June 1.

I know we are not out of this bottomless pit of depression. I know we have just started out. But I know that we have gone up so many steps and we are now on the first landing platform. A good place to be, because the platform is built of such armor plate and durability that the great masses of the American people have this day confidence that this platform will hold until we accumulate enough energy to land on the second level. We will land there just as soon as the measures enacted by this regular session of Congress are put into action and have an opportunity to function over a space of months.

Yes; I know there are thousands and millions of men out of work. I know that there are yet millions to be fed and clothed and sheltered. I know that we must have many more adjustments before we are economically safe. But it is consoling for Congress to know that the farmers and the laborers and the businessmen have patience. They still have before them the picture of the dreary days of 1930, 1931, and 1932. They know that we were some 10 years being plunged into this catastrophe, and they are going to give the Seventy-third Congress and the Seventy-fourth Congress and President Roosevelt an opportunity to build a structure that will care for their business and for their families at all times.

The great masses know that this Nation cannot go back to the old haphazard, dog-eat-dog and big-fellow-gobble-up-little-fellow Government procedure, such as was in operation from 1920 to 1932. They know that the fundamentals underlying this Roosevelt program are sound. They know that the principles of the N.R.A. are here to stay. These principles may go under some other name in the future, or they may be disguised under some other camouflage, but the basic principles embodied will always be the basic principles of operation of the several businesses in the Nation.

This is the first time in the history of the Nation that, for instance, the miners had an opportunity to participate in collective bargaining, and as soon as this code has had an opportunity to adjust itself here and there, both miners and operators will be happy. The farmers are beginning to see that the allotment plan and processing plan will finally stabilize their business. The laborer in general realizes that this is the high-water mark of his efforts to receive due consideration at the hands of those who use his services. And the nice thing about it is that all but a few of the big giant businesses are beginning to see that it is better to have a cooperative procedure in running their businesses than a cutthroat, haphazard procedure.

THE PRISON-LABOR BILL

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us at this time is one demanding our best thought and study. It authorizes the creation of a corporate body to determine the extent to which industrial operations shall be carried on in Federal penal and correctional institutions. It further authorizes the transfer to the corporation of the powers and duties presently vested in the Attorney General with respect to prison industry. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to transfer all balances standing to the credit of the prison industries working capital fund to the newly created corporation. This marks such a complete change in policy and program as to demand most serious attention.

The study of the subject of prison industry is not a new one. The problems connected with this subject have received the careful attention of public-spirited citizens for a number of years. Lawyers, penologists, social-service workers, and many others have applied themselves in an effort to find a solution which will be satisfactory to private industry and still provide a means of employment to the unfortunate individuals making up the population of our penal institutions.

Two distinct factors present themselves for consideration—one the sociological, the other the industrial. Each merits conscientious application. Each has its claims for recognition. Each deserves painstaking study and thought.

The elimination of the treadmill and the shot pile and the introduction of industrial pursuits marked the beginning of the modern prison. No one will dispute the advancement which has resulted from the adoption of industrial endeavors in our penal institutions. The innovation introduced approximately 150 years ago has definitely proved its worth, and the claim can be sustained that no other single factor has contributed more in the transformation of these institutions from places of degradation to institutions of rehabilitation than the introduction of an industrial program.

The retention or rejection of a penal industrial program is not the question before us. We are considering the matter of policies of administration rather than the subject of principles. Our study should include not only a consideration of the experiences gained in the past, since the system of prison industry was introduced, but also with due regard for the conditions which free industry is facing today.

The demand for this legislation comes largely from certain industries who alleged that an unfair proportion of competition has been created by prison industries in their particular field of industrial activity. It has been represented that the measure is endorsed by business and social-welfare agencies interested in the problem. My conviction is that these bodies will regret the enactment of the legislation which I fear will tend to further emphasize the worth of a profitable penal industrial program rather than the value of such a program as a helpful means for the reformation of the individual. The goal in this worthy endeavor should not be profits, it should be the building of lives. Its primary purpose should not be a favorable balance sheet, it should be the investment of effort in character building. The objective should not be the establishment of self-sustaining jails but the formation by the individual of habits of thrift and industry—the recognition of obligations to their dependents—the development of a sense of self-respect and the appreciation of the value of honest work.

The personnel of the contemplated board of directors of the corporation includes a representative of industry, a representative of labor, a representative of agriculture, a representative of the consumer, and a representative of the Attorney General. Certainly it cannot be successfully argued that this body will have as its chief concern the social welfare side of this program. Except for the representative of the Attorney General's Office, the body is completely a body representing business interests. Industry, labor, agriculture, consumers—each anxious for the protection of its own sphere of activity; each chiefly concerned with its own relation to the subject; each hopeful that from the administration of a policy its interests may best be served. I am of the opinion that the Attorney General and his associates should continue to be charged with the obligation of solving this problem. Certainly this Cabinet member and his associates are in a better position to further the objectives of individual benefit to the prisoners than the directors of a corporate entity whose purposes most naturally would tend toward mercenary ends.

From the standpoint of the present industrial condition of the country it is my conviction that no change of policy should be made which might open the door to further competition on the part of prison industries with private business. We should recognize that society and all social welfare endeavors are maintained and sustained by the industrial life of the country. Without industry as a profitable project the social state would inevitably collapse.

I am honored in being one of the Representatives of a great industrial State. I am charged with the duty of protecting the industries of my home county against further possible encroachment by governmental agencies, bureaus, commissions, or boards. In each town in my district, in which industries provide the means of livelihood for her citizens, there are those who depend upon me for their protection. We have definite knowledge that an effort has been made in the past to introduce on a large scale the manufacture of metal furniture in one of the penal institutions in our State. This program was only thwarted by the alertness of the Congress and the fact that this body had retained unto itself a degree of supervision of this subject. If the bill presently before us is enacted, the proposed corporate entity will be a law unto itself. It will have unlimited powers and discretion, and in its hands will be placed the right of sole determination with respect to the further extension of prison industry. In view of the possible dangers it cannot be successfully argued that a bill of this character is either wise or helpful.

I should like to present to the committee having charge of the bill the value of continuing in the hands of the Attorney General with congressional supervision the subject of prison industry with the recommendation that there be assigned by the Attorney General certain of the personnel of his staff to make a further study of the subject and that he be prepared to present his recommendations to the next Congress, embodying a constructive program which would embrace a consideration of both the sociological and the industrial phases of the subject.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader tell us the program for tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. The communications bill will be taken up. I do not know whether we will get through with it tomorrow or not.

Mr. SNELL. That will come up under a special rule?

Mr. BYRNS. It will come up under a special rule. I do not know of anything else to come up especially tomorrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KLEBERG, for today, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. LLOYD (at the request of Mr. WALLGREN), on account of illness.

To Mr. O'MALLEY, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. RICHARDS, for Friday and Saturday, on account of important business.

To Mr. DIES (at the request of Mr. THOMASON), on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 2032. An act for the relief of Richard A. Chavis;

H.R. 3985. An act for the relief of Charles T. Moll; and

H.R. 9061. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1932. An act for the relief of Alfred Hohenlohe, Alexander Hohenlohe, Konrad Hohenlohe, and Viktor Hohenlohe by removing cloud on title;

S. 2623. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended; and

S. 3290. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] to preside as Speaker pro tempore tonight.

RECESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 7:30 o'clock p.m., at which time bills on the Private Calendar will be considered.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p.m.), pursuant to its previous order, the House stood in recess until 7:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 7:30 o'clock p.m., by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. O'CONNOR].

MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INSURANCE CO.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent it was understood that the bill (H.R. 4838) for the relief of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, could be called at the beginning of this evening's session.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, I am not familiar with the bill. May I ask the gentleman whether this bill has been objected to by anyone on this side?

Mr. DOUGLASS. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objected to the bill the last time. He wanted to be sure that the bond was not for a day or so, but was for a permanent time. I have an amendment which will be read directly that the bond shall have no time limit so far as expiration is concerned.

The gentleman will remember this case. It involved the theft of money orders from the Philipsborn's mail order house in Chicago. These mail orders were endorsed by Philipsborn's and were being sent to a national bank in Chicago. In transit to the bank they were stolen. The Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. had insured Philipsborn's, a mail-order company, and became subrogated to their rights. This money will come back from the Treasury Department from the fund of the Post Office Department covering mail orders which have been lost and not paid.

Mr. HOPE. Does the Department approve the bill?

Mr. DOUGLASS. The Department approves the bill. In a report, signed by Ambrose O'Connell, Executive Assistant to the Postmaster General, it is stated: "Although this Department is powerless to grant relief, the claim appears to be a just one."

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman state that the objection which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made is taken care of?

Mr. DOUGLASS. He wanted to be sure a sufficent bond was given, so I have prepared an amendment to the effect there shall be no time limit on the band. It is improbable that these mail orders will ever be recovered. Under the law, after a year and a half mail orders cannot be cashed in any event, so the Government is safe, and the money really belongs to the company. It is not a case of reimbursing the company for a bond given in the case of a prisoner.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SWICK. Will this cost the Government anything?

Mr. DOUGLASS. The amount of the stolen mail orders which belonged to this company was $22,000. The bond will be double that amount in order to protect the Government.

Mr. REED of New York. The Government has the money?

Mr. DOUGLASS. The Government has the money.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, out of the fund credited to unpaid money orders more than 1 year old, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $22,216.47, being the aggregate of 3,418 money orders made payable to Philipsborn's, the Outer Garment House, and endorsed and made payable to the National Bank of the Republic, and stolen from said Philipsborn's on December 11, 1919, and never recovered or paid, which sum the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. paid to said Philipsborn's under its contract of indemnity, and became subrogated to the rights of Philipsborn's as the payee of said money orders: Provided, That the said Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of $44,432.94, with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen postal money orders herein described.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I offer some amendments, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. DOUGLASS: Page 1, line 3, after the word "the", strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Postmaster General."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "old" and the comma, strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated,".

Page 2, line 9, after the word "the", strike out the word "Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Post Office."

Page 2, line 10, after the figures "$44,432.94", insert the words "without limitation on the period of liability,".

Page 2, line 11, after the words "to the", strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Postmaster General."

The amendments were agreed to.

With the following committee amendment: On page 2, line 14, after the word "described", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOSTON STORE CO.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent it was understood that the bill (H.R. 7292) for the relief of the Boston Store Co., a corporation, Chicago, Ill., could be called up at the beginning of this evening's session.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill have a privileged status?

Mr. SABATH. It has. I obtained unanimous consent at the last session to call it up this evening.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is satisfactory to whomever has charge of the bill on this side to let it go through this evening.

Mr. SABATH. The only objection that was raised to the bill was by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN]. The gentleman informs me that he had no real objection to the bill; that it was a personal matter more than anything else.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Who was in charge?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No objection was raised?

Mr. SABATH. No. This bill has passed the House twice before, but always rather late, and no action was taken on it in the session.

Mr. McFARLANE. What does the bill involve?

Mr. SABATH. It is on account of money paid to the Government by the Boston Store Co. on account of certain cots that were not received in proper order. They were damaged and broken up. The Government has the money, and they were ready to return the money and did send a voucher, as I understand, but there was some question about the matter and the voucher was returned. The situation remained this way, and I may say the bill has passed twice before.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much is involved?

Mr. SABATH. Six thousand two hundred and forty-six dollars. There is a favorable report from the Department.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,246 to the Boston Store Co., a corporation of Chicago, Ill., such sum representing a loss incurred because of misrepresentation in the purchase of cots from the quartermaster supply officer of the surplus property branch at Chicago, Ill., August 16, 1921, which claim had at one time been allowed and paid, but subsequently, because of some technicality, now cured, returned to the Treasury upon request.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "request", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HURRICANE LOSSES IN TEXAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6857, to reimburse officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army and their families and dependents, or their legal representatives, for losses sustained as a result of the hurricane which occurred in Texas on August 16, 17, and 18, 1915.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill involves $401,042 for certain claimants and an additional amount of $42,899 for other claimants. I do not think the Government of the United States is an insurer of individuals against losses occasioned by acts of God, and if we are going to begin doing this we ought to go back and pay all the people who may have sustained such losses for the last 100 years.

When we have earthquakes in California we grant relief. When we have floods on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts we grant relief to the people there, but we do not reimburse them for their individual losses; and a bill involving nearly one-half million dollars, taking this money out of the tax-burdened people's already depleted Treasury in the twinkling of an eye, I am against, and I object to the bill.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; if our distinguished colleague from New York desires to be heard.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. Does the gentleman understand that this does not involve any appropriation, as the money is already in the miscellaneous fund?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend that that is the most mistaken idea you could ever undertake to put over on the people. If $443,000 has already been appropriated but not yet spent, and it is then spent for the purposes of this bill, it is money of the people that will be lost.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. These men were sent down there to protect the people.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, we do not have to make a new appropriation, because certain money has already been appropriated, but not to pay these claims. Therefore, in order to get this $443,000 it is necessary to pass this bill.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. These troops were sent there to protect the property of the people and were encamped on a desolate shore instead of in proper quarters.

Mr. BLANTON. I was sent here to represent the people of my district, and when a street car ran into a brand new automobile of mine and damaged me about $1,500 in cash, the Government did not make that good to me. I lost it. We sustain losses every day because of misfortune or accident or bad luck.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. I am sorry the gentleman takes that position. I consider this a just claim.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, because I would like to go along with the distinguished lady from New York, because nothing would give me greater pleasure than to grant her a favor.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. I am not asking it as a favor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

D. F. TYLER CORPORATION AND THE NORFOLK DREDGING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7163, for the relief of the D. F. Tyler Corporation and the Norfolk Dredging Co.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, this dredging was undertaken according to specifications issued by the United States Government. A part of these specifications provided that certain sections of Chesapeake Bay had been set aside for the refuse which had already been surveyed and set aside. In its specifications the Government stated that this dredged material should be deposited on this ground. This company bid on the contract, was awarded the contract, and deposited the material there. It was later found that the ground granted the Government in many instances had been granted by people who had no authority to make such grants. Suits were brought against the dredging companies in the courts of Norfolk and they were held liable to the extent of the amount requested in this bill. There was no negligence or fault on the part of the company involved here.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. While this bill involves $14,000, I shall not object to it because, I may state to my colleague from Texas, the War Department recommends in favor of it. By reason of the favorable recommendation of the War Department I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the D. F. Tyler Corporation and the Norfolk Dredging Co., jointly, $14,727.11, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States by reason of court judgments and claims against them on account of dumping of dredged material on certain oysters, oyster grounds, and marshlands, under a contract dated March 15, 1932, between the United States and the said D. F. Tyler Corporation, for dredging in the Nansemond River, Va.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "dated", strike out "March 15, 1932", and insert in lieu thereof "January 19, 1931."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THEODORE W. BELAND

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 129, H.R. 4952, for the relief of Theodore W. Beland.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any special order on this?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it has a special status.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, how much is involved in this bill?

Mr. DUFFEY. Thirty-two dollars and thirty cents.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $32.30 to Theodore W. Beland, an employee of the Lighthouse Service, in full and final settlement for expenses incurred in the operation of a privately owned automobile on Government business during April 1929.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SARAH SMOLEN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 7367, for the relief of Sarah Smolen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah Smolen, of New York City, N.Y., not to exceed $5,000 in monthly installments of $50 each, to be disbursed through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the death of her husband, the late Joseph Smolen, who was a special employee of the New York City Office of the Bureau of Narcotics, Treasury Department, and who mysteriously disappeared and is believed to have been killed while engaged in official Government business on or about October 4, 1931.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 5, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES SLEVIN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 7728, for the relief of James Slevin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 2636) will be substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James Slevin, Island Park, Long Island, N.Y., $1,425, being the amount found due him as damages to his property at Island Park, N.Y., by reason of an Army airplane crash on September 8, 1933.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, page 1, after the figures "$1,425", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and in line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The similar House bill was laid on the table.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 8077, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this has an adverse report from the War Department.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Secretary of War Hurley says:

Nothing has transpired which would appear to require or justify a change in this Department's attitude toward this claim as indicated above. It is accordingly recommended that the bill transmitted with your letter be not favorably considered.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the three bills, nos. 564, 565, and 566 on the calendar, H.R. 8077, 8078, and 8079, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co., are similar. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MULDOWNEY] is necessarily absent. His office called me up a few moments ago and said that these bills were regarded by Mr. MULDOWNEY as of great personal importance to him, and asked me to request that they be passed without prejudice, so that he might be here to explain them to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that those three bills of the Allegheny Forging Co. be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, and I add to that request that they be called at the head of the next Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JEANNETTE WEIR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8108, for the relief of Jeannette Weir.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, to Jeannette Weir for injuries sustained by being struck by a United States mail truck January 4, 1922.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, at the end of the bill, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAY L. MARSHALL, ADMINISTRATRIX

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8115, for the relief of May L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $5,000 to May L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield, who was killed on the night of December 7, 1925, in a collision between the barge Pine Grove and the highway bridge at Coinjock, N.C., while said bridge was owned and operated by the United States, and by the lowering of the draw of said bridge on the pilot house of the barge Pine Grove, in which said Jerry A. Litchfield was a passenger: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to, or received by, any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive, any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WALTER L. WILSEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8157, for the relief of First Lt. Walter T. Wilsey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this bill explained.

Mr. BLANTON. It involves only $147.50.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is this the same claim that the gentleman from Michigan now has before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. GOODWIN. No; this is a bill that has been passed on by the Secretary of War and favorably reported both by the Senate and the House.

Mr. McFARLANE. Do they approve it?

Mr. GOODWIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is a similar Senate bill, S. 2973, on the Speaker's table, and without objection the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There was no objection, and the Clerk reported the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to First Lt. Walter T. Wilsey the sum of $147.50, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, which amount was stolen from the safe of Company A, Fourth Motor Repair Battalion, Quartermaster Corps, Camp Holabird, Md., on March 6, 1925, and reimbursed to the said company by Lieutenant Wilsey: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 8157) was laid on the table.

HEIRS OF C. K. BOWEN, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8328, for the relief of the heirs of C. K. Bowen, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. Christenson, Houston, Tex.; Mrs. F. N. Heiman, Seabrook, Tex.; Mrs. A. B. Christenson, Burbank, Calif.; and C. K. Bowen, Burbank, Calif., heirs of C. K. Bowen, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $450.50, for damages sustained by the said heirs of the said C. K. Bowen, deceased, who lost his life during the hurricane of September 8, 1900, when the light station at Halfmoon Shoal, Tex., was demolished, and the said C. K. Bowen, deceased, was drowned, as shown by Public Document No. 103 of the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, dated December 7, 1901.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 6, at the end of the bill strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PATRICK HENRY WALSH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 170, for the relief of Patrick Henry Walsh.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The Post Office Department recommends adversely on this bill. Under the circumstances I object.

MRS. ASA CASWELL HAWKINS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 497, S. 1078, for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. What is that bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is a bill to which the gentleman's attention has been called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins, widow of Asa C. Hawkins, of the county of Lenoir and the State of North Carolina, the sum of $5,000 in full compensation for the death of said Asa C. Hawkins, who was killed while employed by and assisting Federal prohibition agents in the enforcement of the National Prohibition Act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CATHERINE WRIGHT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 620, for the relief of Catherine Wright.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Wright, of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for damages arising out of the embezzlement by a former United States commissioner for the northern district of California of a like sum deposited with him as bail on August 2, 1930, by John F. Sullivan.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, at the end of the bill, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SULTZBACH CLOTHING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1191, for the relief of the Sultzbach Clothing Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Sultzbach Clothing Co. the sum of $6,000. Such sum represents the amount of a fine paid by Sultzbach Clothing Co. pursuant to a conviction for violating certain provisions of the Lever Act of August 10, 1917, as amended, prior to the declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States of the unconstitutionality of such provisions.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after "$6,000", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "provisions", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EMMA FERGUSON STARRETT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1401, to pay a gratuity to Emma Ferguson Starrett.

There being no objection, the Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emma Ferguson Starrett, widow of Henry P. Starrett, late American consul general at Algiers, Algeria, the sum of $3,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "husband", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

M. THOMAS PETROY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1430, for the relief of M. Thomas Petroy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. Thomas Petroy (alias Mieczyslaw Piotrowsky), formerly a private, Service Troop, Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, the sum of $193.36 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for loss of personal property in the fire which destroyed the saddle and harness rooms of such troop at the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., on January 1, 1925.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, after the figures "1925", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. R. M'LEOD

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 454, H.R. 5606, for the relief of W. R. McLeod.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, is there a special order on this bill?

Mr. SEARS. This is the bill of my colleague, Mr. WILCOX, of Florida, which about 2 weeks ago got up to final passage. All the Speaker had to do was say that the bill was passed, when a point of no quorum was raised.

Mr. BLANTON. When we act on them, we then forget the issues involved, when we have the file in our office. What was involved?

Mr. SEARS. A post office was robbed.

Mr. BLANTON. How much is involved?

Mr. SEARS. Three hundred and seventy-four dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no objection on my part.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, does this bill have a favorable report from the Post Office Department?

Mr. SEARS. It has a favorable report from the Post Office Department, and it got up to final passage, when a point of no quorum was raised.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Was it objected to on the floor of the House?

Mr. SEARS. The objections were withdrawn. All the Speaker had to do was say the bill was passed when somebody made a point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this bill is the unfinished business from the last call of the Private Calendar, so it is proper to call it up at this time.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, was this bill objected to the last time?

Mr. SEARS. No; it was not.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $374.02, and when appropriated the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay same to W. R. McLeod, postmaster at Apopka, Fla., to reimburse him in the amount of postal funds stolen from the post office by burglars.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "burglars" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: In line 5, on page 1, strike out "$374.02" and insert in lieu thereof "$200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MICHAEL BELLO

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1516, for the relief of Michael Bello.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Michael Bello, as administrator of John Bello, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries resulting in the death of the said John Bello when he was struck by a United States Army truck from Fort Tilden, Borough of Queens, New York City, operated by a private in the United States Army attached to the Seventh Company United States Coast Artillery Corps. Said accident occurred on February 4, 1932, while the deceased was riding a bicycle in a southwesterly direction along Cryders Lane, Whitestone, Borough of Queens, New York City, and the United States Army truck was making a left turn into Cryders Lane from Fifteenth Avenue, Whitestone, Borough of Queens, New York City.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "city", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HEIRS OF JAMES TAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7543, to compensate the heirs of James Taylor, a deceased Cherokee Indian, for all their title, interest, or claim to certain lands in the State of North Carolina, now held by the United States as a part of the forest reserve, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this involves $389,000. That is a large sum. I object.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BILL PASSED OVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8448, for the relief of N. Lester Troast.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the bill of my colleague, Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman could not be here tonight. I ask unanimous consent that this be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman means it is to be at the head of the calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It is to follow the ones that are under special order.

Mr. HOPE. Well, I object to that. I have no objection to the bill's being passed over. I shall object to its being made a special order for the next call of the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. It would serve no purpose to pass it over unless it were to be placed at the foot of the special orders. It is just to give the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN] an opportunity to be here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill will go over without prejudice to the next call of the Private Calendar.

There was no objection.

N. LESTER TROAST

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8448, for the relief of N. Lester Troast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection a similar Senate bill will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $144.28 to N. Lester Troast, of Juneau, Alaska, in full settlement of expenses incurred by him under official orders in connection with the use of his personally owned automobile on official business at Wrangell, Alaska, while supervising the construction of an Indian boarding school at that place.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill were laid on the table.

LAURA B. CRAMPTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 452, for the relief of Laura B. Crampton.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I have an explanation of the bill? I see nothing in the bill limiting the amount or saying anything about the amount that is asked for.

Mr. CARTER of California. The bill merely allows the claimant to present her case to the United States Compensation Commission.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Is not this a case where the statute of limitations has run and it is desired to lift the bar of the statute?

Mr. CARTER of California. I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the report shows that an application was made to but never received by the Employees' Compensation Commission. The claimant states she mailed an application. According to the report, the doctor verifies this statement of the claimant and states that an application was sent to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. Evidently it was not received by the Commission.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Kentucky that we have passed a great many similar bills, not only at this session but also at previous sessions. The bill merely permits the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to adjudicate the claim.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Laura B. Crampton for compensation for an injury sustained in July 1924, said claim having been made out within 1 year from the time of injury and through some error failing to receive the attention of the Commission.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Commission" strike out the balance of line 4 and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is hereby authorized to consider and determine, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of Laura B. Crampton, on account of injuries alleged to have been sustained by her employment in the service of the United States as an oral hygienist at the United States Veterans' Administration Hospital at San Fernando, Calif.: Provided, That she shall file notice of such injury and claim for compensation therefor not later than 60 days from the enactment of this act: And provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM BROOKS SORSBY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7788, for the relief of William Brooks Sorsby.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It got on this calendar by mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

LUCY STEWART

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8589, for the relief of Lucy Stewart.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection a similar Senate bill will be substituted for this House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lucy Cobb Stewart, widow of Nathaniel B. Stewart, late consul general at Barcelona, the sum of $9,000, such sum representing 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill were laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6622, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to lease certain Government land at Woods Hole, Mass.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may the bill be explained to us?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill is absent because of a slight indisposition, but at his request I shall try to answer any questions that may be asked, and I think perhaps I can on a bill of this character, although I would not attempt it for anyone else.

Mr. McFARLANE. What does the bill provide?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The bill provides that the Government may lease the property.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much money is involved?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would not attempt to answer that, but it is to be assumed that the lease will be made on whatever terms are deemed fair to the Government and to the private interests concerned. It is a bill providing for the lease of property the Government is not now using. The Government activity at this point desires to get away from the congested conditions around the Coast Guard station and the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the Department of Commerce want it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes; it is recommended by the Department. I think it is perfectly safe to pass the bill. It is to be used by the yacht club. One of the purposes of the bill is to relieve the congested conditions about the fisheries station and likewise the Coast Guard station as a result of the yachts being around these stations.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to lease—for such period and on such terms as the Secretary shall deem advisable—to the Woods Hole Yacht Club, Inc., of Woods Hole, Mass., that portion of the land owned by the United States Government, at Penzance Point, or Long Neck, Woods Hole, bounded and described as follows, namely: Side A, from boundary mark in direction 224°14'45" true, a distance of 90 feet, which comes to high-water mark; side B, from boundary mark in direction 111°14'45" true, a distance of 215 feet; side C, from easterly end of side B in direction 190°29'15" true, a distance of 74 feet, which comes to the high-water mark; side D, from the southerly end of side C in a westerly direction along the irregular high-water line to the southerly end of side A and including the rocks lying offshore: Provided, however, That the Secretary shall not execute such lease unless and until all persons who have any interest in said premises under the provisions of the deed of gift conveying to the United States the land of which said parcel is a part, and any act relating to the conveyance of such premises to the United States, shall have waived and released for the term of such lease all their right, title, and interest therein, and shall consent that the said lease shall not operate to divest the United States of the title to said property or any part thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "therein", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "and shall consent that the said lease shall not operate to divest the United States of the title to said property or any part thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE A. CARDEN AND ANDERSON T. HERD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8482, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on certain claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GREGORY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I withhold my objection.

Mr. GREGORY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection to this bill. It is one involving a debt which the United States owes to some of its citizens.

The facts in this case are that George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd bought a number of Austrian ships, which were used as merchant ships before our declaration of war against Germany and Austria. After the United States entered the war they found a need for these ships. In the meantime Carden and Herd had sold these ships to a syndicate at a profit of something like six or seven hundred thousand dollars. The President requested that these ships be taken over by the United States. If the Government had to acquire them by going into court and bringing suit, it would have cost the Government many thousands of dollars.

Carden and Herd relinquished their right to sell these ships to the syndicate with the express understanding that they should have the right to operate them as other merchant ships were operated throughout the country. They had no means whatever of getting any recompense for the loss of their contract which they had with the Government.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. This claim, it is stated by the report, grew out of the war period around 1917. My reason for objecting, in the absence of an explanation, was simply the fact that if we start resurrecting claims against the Government as far back as 1917, pretty soon we will be going back to the Civil War and then to the Revolutionary War. But out of respect for the opinion of my colleague from Kentucky, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

CHARLESTOWN SAND & STONE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2790, for the relief of the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co., of Elkton, Md.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold my request.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This is a bill we have been considering for a great many years, and I hope the gentleman will reconsider and allow this bill to be taken up at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. The Department does not make a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They do not make a report either way. May I make an explanation?

Mr. BLANTON. This bill involves $12,000.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This company has been 15 years getting compensation for the destruction of its property by the Government, to my personal knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know this bill is a just one against the Government?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that of his own knowledge?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have personal knowledge of that fact.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request and reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Charlestown Sand and Stone Co., of Elkton, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,385.99 in full settlement of the additional freight charges incurred by said company in the fulfillment of the requirements of the United States engineer office under the contract of August 23, 1917, for furnishing and delivering cement, sand, and gravel (or broken stone) to Fort Saulsbury, Del., for the construction of gun and mortar batteries.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHEROKEE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6275, authorizing and directing that 5 percent of any amount or amounts appropriated to pay claims of the Cherokee Indians against the United States be paid to Frank J. Boudinot, his heirs or personal representatives, in full for his services and expenses for and on behalf of said Indians prior to July 19, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I will be glad to withhold my objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I feel sure I can explain this bill satisfactorily to the gentleman. Not a dollar comes out of the Treasury.

There used to be a Cherokee Government prior to 1898. When the Curtis bill was passed June 28, 1898, it practically destroyed that government. Frank J. Boudinot represented the Cherokee Indians from that time on up until the jurisdictional bill was passed after I came to Congress on March 19, 1924.

This bill has been entirely rewritten. This bill refers the matter to the Court of Claims and permits the Court of Claims to determine the value of these services to be paid out of the amount the Cherokees may recover. None of this money comes out of the Treasury of the United States. If the Court of Claims decides in favor of the Cherokees, and renders judgment in their favor the court will then ascertain the amount that Boudinot ought to be paid for looking after and keeping these claims alive for 25 or 30 years and in finally securing the passage of the jurisdictional bill on March 19, 1924.

The Indians themselves have passed a resolution asking for the enactment of this bill and sent a representative to Washington and who appeared before the subcommittee in support of the bill. The bill was rewritten. It does not pay Boudinot anything, except that it allows the court, if judgment is rendered on any of the claims pending, to take into consideration his services prior to the passage of the jurisdictional bill, and to a date mentioned in the report. I am sure that if the gentleman understood the bill and the services rendered, he would have no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. As the gentleman knows, a very strong report has been written against this bill by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say, and I do this upon my own responsibility, that since this bill has been rewritten, the Bureau of Indian Affairs has no objection to the bill. I am authorized to say that, and I do make that statement as I have been so advised by the Indian Bureau representative.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The statement is made, and I noted this particularly, that this man Boudinot has been paid in full for all services rendered by him to the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is a mistake.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He claims compensation for some excellent work done by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. I know the circumstances in connection with these services. I know that Frank Boudinot has given his entire time for 25 or 30 years to keeping these claims alive.

I know it is due to his efforts from 1898 up to the time I secured the passage of the original jurisdiction bill through Congress that the claims were kept alive and during this time he came each year to Washington.

This bill does not pay him any money. Let me emphasize that to the gentleman. There is a Senate bill that is identical with the reported House bill. It does not pay him any money direct, but it allows the court, if these Indians secure a judgment, to take into consideration his services prior to the date of the passage of the jurisdictional bill and pay him what these services are reasonably worth.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman does not believe that the payment of $21,502 was adequate compensation?

Mr. HASTINGS. That was only an advancement and if he is paid, that will be adjusted.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is possible under this bill for this gentleman to receive a fee of $1,000,000 at the expense of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; under the reported bill it goes to the court, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PEAVEY] and other members of the House Indian Affairs Committee will agree, and the Senate bill, which is identical with the reported House bill, allows the Court of Claims to take his services for this length of time into consideration and render a judgment for whatever they think his services were worth, and not a dollar comes out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It comes out of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. HASTINGS. It comes out of any judgment that may be found due the Cherokee Indians, and they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman is from the Cherokee Nation and is far more interested in the Cherokee Indians than I am, and I therefore take his word for it.

Mr. HASTINGS. I can vouch for the statements I have made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report a similar Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 3117) as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in compliance with request of the Cherokee Indians upon final determination by the Court of Claims of any suit or suits against the United States by the said Indians, sometimes known as the "Cherokee Nation", or by any class, classes, or bands thereof, commenced and prosecuted under the authority of the acts of Congress approved March 19, 1924 (43 Stat.L. 27), and/or April 25, 1932 (47 Stat.L. 137), and in the event judgment or judgments shall be rendered in favor of said Indians, or any of them, the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to include in its decrees allowances to Frank J. Boudinot, a member of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, who has for many years been active in pressing the claims of the Cherokees against the United States by their request and direction and at his own expense, or to his heirs, personal representatives, or assigns, a reasonable percentage, not to exceed 5 percent, of such recoveries: Provided, That such allowances to said Frank J. Boudinot shall be in addition to any and all fees and expenses authorized by said acts of Congress of March 19, 1924, and April 25, 1932; and this act shall not be construed to affect in any way the contracts with attorneys entered into thereunder.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire the committee amendment to the House bill added to the Senate bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill is identical with the reported House bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2696, to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2 and 4 of the act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs", approved March 3, 1901, as amended by an act approved April 28, 1904, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the said corporation is authorized to acquire, by devise, bequest, or otherwise, hold, purchase, and convey such real and personal estate as shall or may be required for the purpose of its incorporation not exceeding $1,500,000, with authority in said corporation, should it be by it deemed necessary so to do, to mortgage or otherwise encumber the real estate which it may hereafter own or acquire and may give therefor such evidences of indebtedness as such corporation may decide upon."

"SEC. 4. That said corporation be, and it is hereby, authorized to hold its meetings at such places outside of Washington, in the District of Columbia, as it from time to time may deem best."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTZ-BIEDERMAN CO., CLEVELAND, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5020, to pay the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40, money paid as duty on merchandise imported under section 308 of the Tariff Act.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOE G. BAKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5109, for the relief of Joe G. Baker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 17 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 17, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of Joe G. Baker, of Gas City, Ind., for disability incurred by him on the 6th day of August 1931 while in the employment of the Veterans' Administration Hospital at Marion, Ind., and to determine said claim upon its merits: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "disability" insert the words "alleged to have been."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DALLAS COUNTY CHAPTER OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7953, for the relief of the Dallas County Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Veterans' Administration claims that this was a case of pure negligence, and recommends against the allowance of the bill, and I object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but as a prelude to what the gentleman will say, let me show you what General Hines has reported.

This is Gen. Frank T. Hines, who has been the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for some years. He says:

Therefore it is not believed that the Government should be held responsible for this negligence on their part. Favorable consideration of this proposed measure on the part of the committee is not recommended.

I should like to favor my colleague and withdraw my objection, but I feel that I should object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not ask the gentleman to withdraw it, but to let me make a statement.

Mr. BLANTON. But when the Department makes an adverse recommendation like this I feel it is my duty to object, but I shall reserve the objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can quite appreciate the force of the gentleman's reasons for objecting. The committee investigating the matter arrived at a different conclusion from General Hines.

These are briefly the facts. I want to state the facts, and then the gentleman from Texas can exercise his own judgment.

A colored soldier was in the hospital at Tuskegee, Ala. While in that hospital, the Dallas Red Cross was contacted. The question is whether the Red Cross was negligent or not.

After the hospital had contacted the Dallas Red Cross in regard to this soldier, the Dallas Red Cross got in contact with the former employer of this soldier. Later on the soldier died and the Red Cross of Dallas was advised of that fact and was asked to attempt to locate the sister of this dead soldier.

The Dallas Red Cross attempted so to do but was unsuccessful.

Later on a man and a woman appeared at the Dallas chapter with a communication from the Veterans' Bureau addressed to the sister of the deceased soldier. This woman claimed to be a sister of the deceased soldier. She asked their assistance in filling out the blank, and the Dallas Red Cross assisted her in filling out the blank.

Later on she appeared with the warrant, or whatever you call it, and the Red Cross endorsed the warrant and aided her in getting the money.

Now, I submit to my colleague that the institution performing this action used due diligence. They were asked to locate the sister of the soldier, and they attempted to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman some questions, but he is so shrewd I fear his answers may overpower me.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do not destroy the witness.

Mr. BLANTON. The Red Cross assisted this woman in getting the money. Where did they get the check?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The colored woman got the check.

Mr. BLANTON. This colored woman brought the check there and the Red Cross identified her as the proper payee, when she was not, and endorsed it, and she got the Government money on that check. Suppose a bank had done that. Would not you say that the bank was responsible?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman want me to reply to that?

Mr. BLANTON. When a bank identifies the gentleman and myself and cashes checks for us, it is responsible to the bank on which those checks are drawn for our proper identification.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I shall take up just 1 minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has already consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. However much I regret to do it, Mr. Speaker, I am forced to object. I object.

WILLIAM THOMAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8587, to extend the benefit of the Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, to William Thomas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have two amendments which I think are in line with the practice here which I would want to have accepted before I would not object. I want to have the words "alleged to have been" after the word "injuries", in line 7, page 1 of the bill and before the word "sustained", and to add at the end of the bill the proviso that no benefits shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this act.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. Of course, it is proper to have the first one inserted.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I should like to have the other proviso inserted.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. That is rather objectionable.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is our universal practice.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. Naturally I shall accept it if I have to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I shall have to insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Department recommends adversely against this, does it not?

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. I think not. You will not find an adverse report, but merely there was no complaint made to the Quartermaster Corps. The sergeant in charge of this man, who employed him and was present at the time the accident occurred, swears to the fact. The Department says that it does not know anything about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is what the Department says about this bill:

> In view of the fact that no record has been found of the injury alleged to have been sustained by the claimant, I am unable to express a favorable opinion of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. That is not an adverse opinion; and we produced evidence, and we produced this injured man, who appeared before the committee himself.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee sent this bill up to the War Department for a favorable report, if they could get it. The War Department investigated, and it says, "We are unable to express a favorable opinion of the proposed legislation." I take it that that is a polite way of making an unfavorable report.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. All that the War Department says is this: "We have examined our records and we do not find any record that this accident was reported." And, to overcome that, we produced the evidence of the sergeant who was in charge of the man, who was present at the time of the accident when this short circuit knocked this man 6 feet and injured him, and we produced the man himself, and he came before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I happen to know, because I have investigated lots of such cases, that when there is an accident the first thing the War Department does is to make a complete investigation and have a complete report made of the accident. In all these papers it says it could not find any report that would show that this is a meritorious claim, and, therefore, did not give a favorable recommendation. I hate to object, but I shall have to do it.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am on the Claims Committee. When the War Department objects to a bill, they tell us about it straight out.

Mr. BLANTON. But Mr. Hurley was a little polite in this instance, and they did not tell the committee he objected to it.

Mr. BURKE of Nebraska. This was away up in North Dakota in an outlying post. The records were not adequately kept for some reason or other. We produced the sergeant in charge of the man, and we brought the man himself before the committee to testify, and they examined him as you would examine a man in court. They made this favorable report, and merely because the War Department have not given their approval of it does not mean that they disapprove of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Wait a minute, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Kentucky is on this committee that reported this bill?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman investigated this case carefully?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The committee investigated it, and from the facts we thought it ought to be favorably reported in the absence of any adverse report from the War Department. We have numerous bills in which the Department reports adversely in view of the fact that they had no information on which to base an unfavorable report.

Mr. BLANTON. What justification has the gentleman for saying that the War Department always specifically recommends against the passage of a bill when they do object to it?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. They say it in every report they make if they have the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman does not consider this an unfavorable report?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No; we do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to William Thomas, a former civilian employee of the United States Quartermaster Corps, on account of injuries sustained by him during October 1927, while he was working in his capacity as a boilermaker at Fort Abraham Lincoln, N.Dak., the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendments offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 1, line 7, after the word "injuries", insert the words "alleged to have been", and at the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no benefits shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DALLAS COUNTY CHAPTER OF AMERICAN RED CROSS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I objected to Calendar No. 590, a bill introduced by my colleague Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It involves $541. From statements made to me by my colleague and several other Members who helped to report the bill, I withdraw my objection.

I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill, H.R. 7953, and to vacate the former action on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $541.33 to the Dallas County Chapter of the American Red Cross as reimbursement of amount paid by virtue of their endorsement of Government check erroneously issued to one Fannie Hilliard.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the figures, insert: "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; and at the end of line 10, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAWRENCE A. JETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8616, for the relief of Lawrence A. Jett.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York and Mr. BROWN of Kentucky objected.

MICK C. COOPER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 90, for the relief of Mick C. Cooper.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HARRY HARSIN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 176, for the relief of Harry Harsin.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is another one of these $28,000 losses in a post office, and while I feel that many of these losses occur through negligence, and carelessness, and indifference on the part of postmasters and postal employees, in view of the fact the Department recommends the passage of this bill, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Harry Harsin, postmaster at Asbury Park, N.J., in his accounts, with the sum of $28,022, the amount of money and postage stamps lost in the burglary of the post office at Asbury Park, N.J., on July 6, 1929.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN BONDING CO. OF BALTIMORE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 252, for the relief of the American Bonding Co. of Baltimore.

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have this bill explained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. That does not make any difference.

Mr. SUTPHIN. The gentleman should read the report.

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not have it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

FRED H. COTTER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 254, for the relief of Fred H. Cotter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the requirements of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in the case of Fred H. Cotter, of Portland, Oreg., formerly employed by the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, who is alleged to have contracted disease on November 17, 1929, while in the performance of his duties as such employee, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed by him under the provisions of such act, as amended, within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, for compensation for disability resulting from such disease; but compensation, if any, shall be paid from and after the date of enactment of this act. Such payments of compensation shall be made out of funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the payment of awards under the provisions of such act, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDITH N. LINDQUIST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 413, for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LUECO R. GOOCH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1077, for the relief of Lueco R. Gooch.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lueco R. Gooch, of Henderson, N.C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $516.28, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of expenditures made by him in the medical treatment of his son, Lueco R. Gooch, Jr., private, Company C, One Hundred and Twentieth Infantry, North Carolina National Guard, who was injured in the line of duty on July 16, 1929, at Camp Glenn, N.C., during the field-training period July 7 to July 21, 1929.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, at the end of the line insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WHITE BROS. & CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1088, authorizing adjustment of the claim of White Bros. & Co.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARION VON BRUNING

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1731, for the relief of Marion Von Bruning (nee Marion Hubbard Treat).

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what his objection is?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The Alien Property Custodian took over custody of this property, and during the time he had that they are asking him to pay rent on it. If you are going to do this, it seems to me the Government will be liable to every alien whose property was seized during the war.

Mr. GOSS. Of course, here is due process by law now, under the Alien Property Custodian, as carried each year in the independent offices appropriation bill. From this year on that is all being handled by the Department of Justice. There is no other way that people can get any relief.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. In this case, if the gentleman will note in reading the report, the Alien Property Custodian himself asked Congress at one time to appropriate the money to pay this rent. There does not seem to have been any question as to the liability of the Government for the rent. It occupied the property and did pay rent for a period of 9 months.

Mr. GOSS. There is no chance to have private lawyers in these cases any more, inasmuch as it has all been turned over to the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,900 to Marion Von Bruning (nee Marion Hubbard Treat), in full settlement of all claims against the Government for balance due her for rent for the use and occupation of the premises known as no. 1758 N Street NW., city of Washington, District of Columbia, as offices by the Alien Property Custodian for the period from July 1, 1918, to December 17, 1920.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the figures, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTELLE JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1994, for the relief of Estelle Johnson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Estelle Johnson, 3¾ percent United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness, series A–1933, no. 1798, in the denomination of $500, issued February 1, 1932, matured February 1, 1933, without interest and without presentation of said certificate, which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificate of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said Estelle Johnson shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said certificate of indebtedness in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAUDIA L. POLSKI

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2023, for the relief of Claudia L. Polski.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the requirements of sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Claudia L. Polski, formerly a nurse in the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim made by her for compensation for injury suffered in the performance of her duties as such nurse under the other provisions of such act as amended.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "injury", insert "alleged to have been."

At the end of line 2, page 2, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES J. WEBB SONS CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2138, for the relief of Charles J. Webb Sons Co., Inc.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this bill involve?

Mr. BLANTON. It involves $18,648 for money that was paid in to the Government as a settlement. This is an attempt to get it back, and I doubt very seriously whether it ought to be paid by the Government.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. That is my doubt also.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, is this a jurisdictional bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it provides for a payment right out of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

T. BROOKS ALFORD

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 452, the bill (H.R.5543) for the relief of T. Brooks Alford.

In explanation I may say that I objected to this bill at the previous call of the Private Calendar. So far as I know, there was no other objection. After giving further study to the bill I think perhaps the claimant is entitled to something; but not as much as the bill asks.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the gentleman propose to do about it?

Mr. HOPE. Compromise across the table.

Mr. BLANTON. With whom is the gentleman proposing to compromise across the table?

Mr. HOPE. I am not compromising with anybody.

Mr. BLANTON. How much does the gentleman propose to reduce the bill?

Mr. HOPE. I suggest an amendment reducing the amount from $4,000 to $2,000, which I think will adequately compensate the claimant.

Mr. BLANTON. With that reduction made, I have no objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. Brooks Alford, of Charleston, S.C., the sum of $4,000, such sum to constitute reimbursement of the said T. Brooks Alford on account of money expended by him from his personal funds, and losses of personal property sustained by him, incident to and as a result of his services as a consular officer of the Department of State in Russia during the World War.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "War", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hope: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. E. SHELLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2377, for the relief of A. E. Shelley.

There being no objection the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to A. E. Shelley, of Heber, Ariz., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $691.20 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages on account of injuries sustained on April 6, 1931, which resulted from running into a United States Forest Service telephone wire near Heber, Ariz., which had been negligently left partially down by employees of such Service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "Service", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COHEN, GOLDMAN & CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2554, for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which provides for the payment of an amount awarded by the Court of Claims, but the statute of limitations has run. The report shows that this man was buffeted around from one department to another. There is no question as to the amount, for the Court of Claims has granted it. The Senate has passed the bill. I feel sure if the gentleman will study the report he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I have not had an opportunity to study the report.

Mr. PEYSER. That is the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill calls for the payment of $19,030 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The amount involved is of no consequence with me, for if the Government is morally obligated to pay $1,000,000 it should pay it just as much as though it were only $1. What I am wondering is whether this is a case where the claimants slept on their rights and allowed the statute of limitations to run, and whether we should revive the claim if they have done that.

Mr. PEYSER. They did not sleep on their rights. There was a counterclaim involved in the case, and in the negotiations involving the claim and the counterclaim the statute of limitations ran by a few days only. The Senate has considered the claim and passed the bill. I have both the Senate report and the House report. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Claims but I do not know whether he was present at the time this bill was presented.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to which I have been objecting for a long time. I have adverse reports on it.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLAUDE A. BROWN AND RUTH M'CURRY BROWN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2750, for the relief of Claude A. Brown and Ruth McCurry Brown, natural guardians of Mamie Ruth Brown.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of Claude A. Brown and Ruth McCurry Brown, natural guardians of Mamie Ruth Brown, 3½ percent United States Treasury note, series A–1930–32, no. A–oo,018,061, in the denomination of $1,000, issued March 15, 1927, called for redemption March 15, 1931, matured March 15, 1932, without interest and without presentation of said note, which is alleged to have been destroyed: Provided, That the said note shall not have been previously presented: And provided further, That the said Claude A. Brown and Ruth McCurry Brown shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said note, in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the note hereinbefore described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

M'NEILL-ALLMAN CONSTRUCTION CO., ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5668, authorizing the relief of the McNeill-Allman Construction Co., Inc., of W. E. McNeill, Lee Allman, and John Allman, stockholders of the McNeill-Allman Construction Co., Inc., and W. E. McNeill, dissolution agent of McNeill-Allman Construction Co., to sue in the United States Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and it is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment upon the claim of McNeill-Allman Construction Co., Inc., of W. E. McNeill, Lee Allman, and John Allman, stockholders of the McNeill-Allman Construction Co., Inc., and W. E. McNeill, dissolution agent of McNeill-Allman Construction Co., for a refund of internal-revenue income and excess-profits taxes paid by said McNeill-Allman Construction Co., Inc., to the collector of internal revenue for the internal-revenue district of North Carolina in the sum of $4,320 for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1922, said Court of Claims being hereby granted jurisdiction to hear and determine the merits of said claim without regard to any statutory limitations with respect to the allowance of a refund thereof should the same be found by said court to be legally or equitably due or refundable, such statute of limitation being hereby expressly waived.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. A. W. PEARSON AND PEABODY HOSPITAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7121, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Dr. A. W. Pearson, of Peever, S.Dak., and the Peabody Hospital, at Webster, S.Dak., for medical services and supplies furnished to Indians.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of this bill a question? The bill states that this shall be in full settlement of all claims and waives all claims and liens which these parties hold against the Indians' property. Is it a fact that these Indians have some property which is subject to payment of these claims?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. No. The bill was amended from covering nonward Indians to indigent Indians. These patients are only the emergency cases and involve a long list of such cases.

Mr. HOPE. Have these Indians any resources at all?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. They have no property whatever.

Mr. HOPE. There are no funds from which these claims can be paid?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. No.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman think this is a fair and reasonable charge for the services performed?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. I do, because of the fact, in the first place the bill was much larger than it is now. This bill has been cut down to the emergency cases only. No ordinary medical cases are incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman has no objection to the usual attorney's fee amendment, limiting the amount which may be paid for attorney's fees?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. I have no objection to such an amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,764.40 to Dr. A. W. Pearson, of Peever, S.Dak., and the sum of $11,675.97 to the Peabody Hospital, at Webster, S.Dak., or as much thereof as is necessary, in full and final settlement, waiving all liens and claims they hold against the Indians' property for medical services and supplies furnished to indigent nonward Indians of the Sisseton Agency in South Dakota during the fiscal years 1920 to 1931, inclusive, such services and supplies having been furnished with the knowledge and approval of the superintendent in charge of the said reservation.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "indigent", strike out the word "nonward."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: On page 2, line 6, after the word "reservation", strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MORRIS SPIRT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 529, for the relief of Morris Spirt.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Morris Spirt, of Waterbury, Conn., the sum of $1,500, plus interest thereon at the rate of 5 percent per annum from July 19, 1920, to the date of the enactment of this act. Such sum is the amount of a fine paid on such date into the Treasury of the United States pursuant to a plea of guilty to an indictment for violation of certain provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel", approved August 10, 1917 (popularly known as the "Lever Act"), prior to the declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States of the invalidity of such provisions.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the figures "$1,500", strike out the remainder of lines 6 and 7 and the words "enactment of this act" in line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

On page 2, after line 8, after the word "provisions", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MICHAEL PETRUCELLI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1792, for the relief of Michael Petrucelli.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask for an explanation?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. The sponsor of the bill is not present. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL], but it so happens that the claimant is a resident of my city. I am entirely familiar with the accident and the history of this case, and I am also familiar with the several people involved, among them prominent physicians in my community and neighborhood who have offered affidavits in connection with this case.

Mr. HOPE. I have no objection to some payment being made in this case, but it seems to me the evidence contained in the report does not indicate a degree of injury which would warrant a payment of $5,000.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to point out the circumstances of the case.

Mr. HOPE. May I request the gentleman to go into the severity of the injuries, and if they are permanent or not? There is nothing in the report to indicate whether or not the injuries are permanent.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What was the total amount of the hospital and doctors' bills?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. The doctors' and hospital bills amounted to approximately $1,500.

This young man was confined to the hospital for months following the accident. There was testimony presented by doctors under oath, including an outstanding physician in my own community, which showed that the young man has not recovered and that he will suffer all his life as a result of this accident. I think this is an exceedingly small amount.

Mr. HOPE. Which doctor is that?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. That is Dr. Otis.

Mr. HOPE. Does Dr. Otis say that this party has suffered a permanent injury?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Yes. That is contained somewhere in the statement of Dr. Otis. I read it just a few moments ago.

Mr. HOPE. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment reducing the amount to $3,000?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I trust the gentleman will not ask for that reduction. Originally this party asked for $10,000 but was prevailed upon to reduce the amount because of the customary practice of Congress. His hospital bill was $1,500, and he is now being treated by a physician.

Mr. HOPE. Is the man at this time so incapacitated that he cannot perform manual labor?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I would not say he cannot perform some manual labor, but the testimony of the doctors indicates he was seriously injured.

Mr. HOPE. Is the gentleman personally acquainted with the claimant?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Is the gentleman willing to state on his own responsibility that he has suffered permanent injuries?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I am of that opinion, and I base that on the testimony of a physician in whom I have absolute confidence. Dr. Otis is one of the noted doctors of Connecticut.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Michael Petrucelli, of Meriden, Conn., the sum of $10,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injury received on July 20, 1931, near Newington, Conn., by reason of an accident in which an airplane of the United States Army was involved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000 in full payment" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000 in full settlement."

At the end of line 10 insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES P. SHIPLEY SADDLERY & MERCANTILE CO.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 505, the bill (H.R. 4573) for the relief of Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. GUYER. This is a bill that reimburses a man who had a saddlery shop at Fort Funston. All of the rest of the claimants have been paid except Shipley.

Mr. BLANTON. To what extent were they cut down?

Mr. GUYER. They were cut down just like this one has been.

Mr. BLANTON. How much has this claim been cut?

Mr. GUYER. To $11,000. His claim was $17,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask my friend this question: Does he think it fair to ask to go back to bills that we have left in our offices?

Mr. GUYER. Hardly; but I was away that night on Government business and could not be here.

I am reading this testimony from the report. Mr. Kerr asked:

We want to know what would be the reaction up there in the War Department if we were to allow him (Shipley) the cost of the conduct of that business up there?

He had built a $14,000 building and made about $10,000, and they said that he had made $10,000 and therefore he comes out even.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Department recommend the bill?

Mr. GUYER. That is what I am telling the gentleman. Major Keith represented the War Department, and Mr. Kerr asked him:

Do you think that would be the right thing to do?

Major Keith said:

As I said a moment ago, that is a matter for you gentlemen.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the Secretary of War say about it?

Mr. GUYER. Then Mr. Kerr said:

You absolutely cut him out of every cent of cost incidental to the conduct of that business there?

Major KEITH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the Secretary of War say about it?

Mr. GUYER. He said it was previously considered by the Secretary of War, who took no favorable action.

Mr. BLANTON. You certainly have a report there from the Secretary of War.

Mr. GUYER. Yes; he states it was considered, and the former Secretary took no favorable action, and, therefore, he says that favorable action is not considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Then he recommends against it?

Mr. GUYER. Not exactly against it. He hedges a little on that, but the representative of the War Department said, "It is all right if you gentlemen say so."

Here is a man who spent $14,000 for a building, and they took his lease away.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall interpose no objection if the gentleman will ask that this bill take its place following the special-order bills at the next call of the Private Calendar, so as to give us a chance to look over our reports in our office.

Mr. GUYER. That is fair, and I make that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be considered at the next call of the Private Calendar following the other special orders.

R. A. CHAMBERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2671, for the relief of R. A. Chambers.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York and Mr. BROWN of Kentucky objected.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will both of the gentlemen reserve their objections?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This is too old a claim, I will say to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. I want to find out the basis of the objection.

Of course, the gentleman from Kentucky will realize that from one standpoint, at least, this is a very meritorious case, this man having been kicked by a Kentucky mule recently transported to Georgia, which was the cause of his injury.

I realize there has been quite a lot of discussion here about going back of the act of September 7, 1916. If gentlemen have agreed on a policy by which they do not intend to permit going back of that date in any case, I have no objection to the application of the same rule to this claim as to the others; but if there are to be cases considered that originated prior to September 7, 1916, the date of the passage of the Employees' Compensation Act, then I insist this case is just as meritorious as any that might be presented of this character. Have you or have you not fixed upon a rule not to go back of September 7, 1916?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes; so far as I am concerned, every bill assigned to me asking for adjudication of claims prior to the passage of the act of 1916 has been objected to.

Mr. TARVER. And is that the policy on this side of the House?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that this is the first occasion I have sat at this table, and this is only by sufferance of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX], who is necessarily absent. Since I have been here tonight, it has been my present policy to object to each one of these bills that goes back of that act.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, that is a policy of very short standing if it only goes back to the time the gentleman came in tonight.

Mr. DUFFEY. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object.

ESTATE OF AMBROSE R. TRACY AND HIS CHILDREN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 2674, for the relief of the estate of Ambrose R. Tracy and his children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I will.

Mr. TARVER. I hope the gentleman from New York will read the report of the committee carefully. I will not impose on the patience of the House to state it in detail, but this man's claim for compensation was rejected by the Employees' Compensation Commission, as you will see, on account of this fact.

He went to a hospital at Fort Bayard, N.Mex., for the purpose of attending his brother, who was a veteran of the World War, and who was receiving treatment for tuberculosis.

He accepted employment for the purpose of being near his brother. In the course of his employment he was thrown in continual contact with tubercular patients, and as a result he contracted tuberculosis.

The Employees' Commission took the attitude, as shown by the report, that the compensation ought not to be allowed, because he went there for the purpose of being near his brother, and that probably he contracted the tuberculosis from his brother.

Certainly he had a better opportunity to contract it from other people, but even if he did contract it from his brother, he was entitled clearly to compensation.

Two or three years ago Congress allowed compensation to a man in the Agricultural Department who had tuberculosis 2 years after he ceased his employment. Now, why should you not give this man's widow and his little children some compensation?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This man was an electrician, and it did not bring him in contact with the patients at all. The only contact he had with the patients was with his brother, who was suffering from tuberculosis. There is no evidence in the case that it was contracted from the patients, no evidence to sustain the claim.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman has not read the report. Let me quote from one of the specialists who says that Mr. Tracy was in constant attendance and had ample opportunity by exposure to contract pulmonary tuberculosis.

Mr. LESINSKI. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. Will not the gentleman reserve his call for the regular order for a little while? I think this is a deserving case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. Two of these children have died with tuberculosis since the claim was filed. Would not the gentleman be willing to allow a lump sum, say, of $1,000, in full settlement of this claim on account of the circumstances that I have undertaken to go into? It certainly would not be an injustice to the Government.

Mr. FOULKES. What is the amount asked for now?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Two thousand six hundred dollars. Of course, it is a pitiful case. We have the utmost sympathy for the widow and children, but there are no facts on which to base the award.

Mr. TARVER. There is the testimony of several officials in which they strongly support the contention. Allow these two tubercular children to get treatment, let them have $1,000, and let them try to save their lives. They are poverty stricken.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman would melt the heart of stone, but there are a great many unfortunate people who are suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. TARVER. Not where their trouble came about under these circumstances.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Whose misfortunes are not connected with the Government.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HARRY E. GOOD, ADMINISTRATOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3243, for the relief of Harry E. Good, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Harry E. Good, of Winamac, Ind., administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased, United States registered notes numbered 650051, 650052, for $100 each, and 122336, for $1,000, of third Liberty loan 4½ percent convertible gold notes of 1928, inscribed "Ephraim N. Good", said notes having been stolen in the robbery of the First State Bank of Star City, Ind., after having been assigned in blank but not acknowledged before any officer as required by the regulations of the Treasury Department: Provided, That said notes shall not have been presented to the Treasury Department for payment: Provided further, That said Harry E. Good shall first file with the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said notes and payable in such form and with such surety of sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the notes herein described.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "notes nos. 650051, 650052, for $100 each, and 122336 for $1,000, of third Liberty Loan 4½ percent convertible gold notes of 1928, inscribed 'Ephraim N. Good', said notes having been stolen in the robbery of the First National Bank of Star City, Ind., after having been assigned in blank but not acknowledged before any officer as required by the regulations of the Treasury Department" and insert in lieu thereof "bonds nos. 650051, 650052, in the denomination of $100 each, and no. 122336, in the denomination of $1,000, of the third Liberty Loan 4¼ percent bonds of 1928, inscribed 'Ephraim N. Good', with interest from March 15, 1928, to September 15, 1928, without presentation of the bonds, said bonds having been assigned in blank by the heirs of the payee, and subsequently stolen from the First State Bank, Star City, Ind.":

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "notes" and insert "bonds."

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "notes" and insert "bonds" and strike out the word "payable" and insert "the final interest thereon payable September 15, 1928."

Page 2, line 17, after the word "such", insert "corporate."

Line 18, page 2, strike out the words "of surety."

Page 2, line 21, strike out the word "notes" and insert the word "bonds."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GLADDING, M'BEAN & CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3782, for the relief of Gladding, McBean & Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of these subcontractors who suffered a loss, all of whom have been paid except this one concern. It was left out of the bill through an oversight.

Mr. BLANTON. The Secretary of the Treasury says that he could not favorably recommend the bill.

Mr. CARTER of California. That may be true, but that has nothing to do with the justice of this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. The author of the bill is not here.

Mr. CARTER of California. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought we should pass it over until he could be here. I insist upon my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice, so that the author may be here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be a special order on the call after the last special order.

E. E. HALL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4446, for the relief of E. E. Hall.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to E. E. Hall, Richmond, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 in full settlement for personal injuries caused by a United States Army truck.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "settlement", insert "of all claims against the Government of the United States", and at the end of the bill strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PURCHASERS OF LANDS, BROOKLAWN, N.J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4672, for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought not to expect a bill of this magnitude to be passed here without reading in the twinkling of an eye. He is too good a lawyer and he has spent too many days in a courthouse trying a case of this magnitude.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Has the gentleman read the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I have read it, I guess, as many times as the gentleman has.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Does the gentleman realize that there are many municipalities in this country where houses were bought from the Government under false and misleading misrepresentation? I have one in my district now where the Government guaranteed the title and the poor people have now to pay taxes for 10 years. What does the Department say? They say, "We are helpless; we thought we were doing right." The case has been carried to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANTON. This is no way to try it.

Mr. SUTPHIN. It is not a question of money; it is a matter of principle.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, I think our friend from Kentucky did a good work when he objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. In answer to the gentleman from Texas who has made reference to the fact that I am too good a lawyer to ask for a trial and favorable consideration of a claim of this kind, I should say that if the gentleman has as favorable opinion of my legal ability as his remarks would indicate, I am hopeful he will agree with me as to the justice of this claim when I have stated the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman is one of the ablest lawyers in the House. I think he has a splendid record as a prosecuting attorney, and I have absolute confidence in him.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I thank the gentleman. I shall cherish the kind words he has just spoken.

I should like to call to the gentleman's attention that this bill, now before the House, will not require the payment of the amount indicated by him.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend, I saw him tested on a committee hearing once where he did such splendid work for this Government, where, in my judgment, he helped save not hundreds of thousands of dollars but millions of dollars, and because of that splendid service of the gentleman I shall not stand in his way if he can get by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. WOLVERTON. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment? Will not the gentleman from Kentucky give me an opportunity to call to his attention the fact, that this claim has the favorable opinion of the United States Shipping Board, and in that connection will the gentleman permit me to read a resolution which the Board passed with reference to this claim, which appears on page 10 of the report? The concluding paragraph of the resolution reads as follows:

Further resolved, That the said the Brooklawn Real Estate Tax Payer's Association be further advised that the Board expresses its sympathy with the object of the petition filed and will favorably recommend the passage by Congress of a proper bill to cover the situation.

Now, if the gentleman will look at the last page of the report he will find that under the title "recommendation", and signed by H. I. Cone, Chairman of the Board, these words, "the present Board concurs in that resolution and recommends the passage by Congress of a proper bill to cover the situation." I assure the gentleman the claim upon which this bill is founded was carefully investigated by the Shipping Board, also by the Claims Committee of the House, and by the Claims Committee of the Senate. Each has given the bill its unqualified approval. In fact, everybody who has examined or investigated the subject matter of this claim, including the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD], than whom there is no more conscientious Member of the House, who made a most careful investigation, has recommended its payment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman that I happen to be a member of the Claims Committee. However, I was not present at the time when this bill was considered, but on the face of it, it seems to me that since these individuals entered into this contract, a number of them have fulfilled their contracts and a number of them have defaulted, and they are now asking the Government to make good.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The gentleman is mistaken, if he will permit me to read just a very brief editorial from the Philadelphia Bulletin——

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that I dislike to be influenced myself, even by my own home newspapers, and I would rather the gentleman would give me some other reason than an editorial.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I suggested the reading of that editorial for the reason: It states the case so briefly that I thought the gentleman would appreciate it if I did it in that way. The editorial is from the Philadelphia Bulletin, which is one of the outstanding independent newspapers of the East. It reads as follows:

BROOKLAWN REFUND CLAIM

Favorable report of the House Committee on Claims on the Wolverton bill making refunds totaling $93,000 to 106 individuals who purchased homes at Brooklawn, N.J., built by the Government to house shipyard workers during the war, is amply warranted by the facts.

The beneficiaries of the proposed refund lived up to the letter of their agreements with the Federal agency, meeting their obligations in full, keeping up interest, taxes, installments on second mortgages, and finally refinancing first liens. When the Government disposed of its remaining interest in the wartime village to a private corporation, those who had not settled on the original terms were tendered all sorts of inducements to take title to occupied premises.

Defaulted interest payments and unpaid taxes were remitted, and outstanding mortgages were shaved by as much as 40 percent, thus putting a premium upon delinquency. This procedure worked double harm to first purchasers by depreciating real-estate values throughout the community, carrying them below existing mortgage levels, thus interposing a bar to refinancing operations which even the home-loan banks have been unable to overcome.

Justice is due those who bought from the Government in good faith and have done their part.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection and permit the bill to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes; I will do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over, to follow the special orders heretofore entered.

There was no objection.

LAWRENCE S. COPELAND

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5409, for the relief of Lawrence S. Copeland.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice to the next call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM J. KENELY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5584, for the relief of William J. Kenely.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the author of the bill if he will accept an amendment reducing the amount to $300, the sum recommended by the Navy Department?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the sum of $600 is a very reasonable amount in this case. The gentleman will find in the report a very clear acknowledgment of negligence on the part of the Government in the matter.

The claim grows out of the following circumstances: The claimant was a member of a fishing party on a boat off Sandy Hook. On the day in question a detachment of Marines were at target practice on the proving ground on Sandy Hook; and there is a clear acknowledgment on the part of the Navy Department that the usual precautions were not taken that day.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to concede that there is the possibility of some liability on the part of the Government but I would not be willing to withdraw my objection unless the gentleman would agree to an amendment reducing the amount to $300, because that, clearly, is all the claimant is shown to have suffered in the way of damages, as shown in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The thing that makes me suspicious of the bill is that it was introduced for $25,000; then it has been cut down to $600; and the Department now says $300 is about right.

Mr. HOPE. That is the Department's recommendation. If the gentleman is willing to accept $300 as recommended by the Department I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would be willing to accept the amount of $600 recommended in the bill as amended; would he not?

Mr. McLEAN. Six hundred dollars? Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That was reduced from $25,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to explain that? This is my first term in Congress. This bill was introduced by two of my predecessors. When it first came to my attention, my experience at the bar taught me that the amount was absolutely beyond all reason. At the urgent request of the claimant I introduced the bill, but I told him there was absolutely no chance of that amount being allowed and urged him to accept an amount which would be reasonable and fair under all of the circumstances. I told him that there was no doubt that the liability of the Government was easily established and the only question was the measure of damages.

Now, let us as reasonable men consider this case. Here is a man sitting in a boat who gets a bullet in his back unexpectedly and spends $300 for medical services, which the Navy Department is willing to admit; and then it was proved before the committee that he was deprived of his ability to work as a roofer, not being able to use his arm for a considerable time afterward.

Mr. HOPE. The Department says that the maximum damage is $300.

Mr. McLEAN. For medical services and expenses.

Mr. HOPE. For medical expenses and loss of time.

Mr. McLEAN. As I read the report, the Department does not take into consideration the loss of earning power and the element of pain and suffering in its $300 estimate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was so conscientious in telling his constituent that he was not going to let him get $25,000, and would approve only $600, that I think we ought to reward him and pass his bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I should agree to permit this bill to pass even for $600 unless the gentleman is willing to agree to an amendment reducing the amount.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, is it possible that a man can be hit by a projectile and be allowed only costs of medical attention and be allowed nothing in the way of damages for pain, suffering, loss of time and earning capacity?

Mr. HOPE. But the $300 includes medical expenses and loss of time.

Mr. SUTPHIN. But it does not include loss of earning capacity, which should be taken into consideration, of course.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman agree to an amendment limiting the amount to $500?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I will accept an amendment reducing the amount to $500.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and there is hereby appropriated for such payment, to William J. Kenely the sum of $25,000 for personal injuries caused through being struck by a bullet fired by one of a detachment of United States marines engaged in target practice, no warning of which was given, as is usual for the safety of passenger and other vessels plying the waters adjacent to Fort Hancock and Sandy Hook, N.Y.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$600, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE to the committee amendment: "Strike out '$600' and insert in lieu thereof '$500.'"

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 2, at the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WARD J. LAWTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5835, for the relief of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce, the sum of $204 paid to the Liberty Brush Co., Philadelphia, Pa., May 17, 1932, which was later disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COHEN, GOLDMAN & CO.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to 605 on the Private Calendar, the bill S. 2554, for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., not for the purpose of reconsideration but to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill was passed over without prejudice.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5947, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Western Union Telegraph Co. Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Western Union Telegraph Co. for refund of certain overpayment of rent in 1931, amounting to $512.22, under its license numbered miscellaneous 12293, dated February 17, 1923, for the use of certain War Department submarine telegraph cables nos. 336 and 462, between Fort Stevens, Oreg., Fort Columbia and Fort Canby, Wash., and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim not to exceed the sum of $512.22. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $512.22, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, at the end of line 5, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARTHUR SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6350, for the relief of Arthur Smith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur Smith, of Bangor, Maine, the sum of $210.35 as reimbursement for the loss of private property on August 27, 1919, in connection with the operation and maintenance of the United States Army.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 6, after the figures "$210.35", strike out the words "as reimbursement" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

On page 1, line 10, after the word "Army", strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. GRAYSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6945, for the relief of John B. Grayson.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I withhold the objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I inquire what the gentleman's objection is?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. From this report this is a case where a postmaster put his son on the pay roll and the Civil Service furnished another list of employees which did not contain the name of this man's son. I do not think the postmaster or any other public official ought to load the pay roll up with members of their own families.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I just wanted the gentleman's point of view.

In the first place, may I say that this was not the postmaster's son, although the report I believe shows that to be a fact. There is a statement in the report he was the postmaster's son, but I believe that is incorrect. I know his family personally, and I know that he is not the postmaster's son.

The postmaster was authorized and directed to employ a temporary clerk. He had authority under the Civil Service regulations to do that for 3 months, which he did. In the meantime the Civil Service list was made up. Then it became the postmaster's duty to take a name off the Civil Service list. A discussion arose with the Post Office Department as to whether he could keep this man until he could qualify on another list. What happened was that the Post Office Department, as you will see by the report, recommends that he be paid this sum of money which he had to pay in order to settle his account with the Comptroller. The Comptroller says in the report, as will be noticed, that he paid this because the Post Office Department asked him to hold this matter up.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. May I say to the gentleman from Kentucky that we went into this matter very carefully. The Department says they do not think this was a willful violation by the postmaster but was a mistake, and the Department recommends the bill. It involves $400, and I hope the gentleman will allow it to pass.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned, if it involved $400,000 it would not make any difference. If it ought to be paid, the Government should pay it. May I ask, what is the relationship between the postmaster and this individual?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. He is a nephew.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CAPT. FRANK J. M'CORMACK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6998, for the relief of Capt. Frank J. McCormack.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,813.79 to Capt. Frank J. McCormack, said sum representing deduction in pay while in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

On page 1, line 9, after the word "Army", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROCCO D'AMATO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7736, for the relief of Rocco D'Amato.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell us something about this bill?

Mr. LANZETTA. Yes; this is a bill to reimburse Rocco D'Amato in the sum of $1,000 to cover bond which he posted to guarantee the return of an alien. The alien escaped and failed to report, and it was through the efforts of D'Amato that the alien was finally apprehended and deported. The bill is recommended by the Department of Labor, as the gentleman will notice if he will read the last paragraph of the report.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. On this type of bill I think we are wrong in allowing them to go through, but we let the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], pay an insurance company $20,000 and I guess we might as well let this man have $1,000. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Rocco D'Amato the sum of $1,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, being the amount of bonds deposited as security to guarantee the production of an alien and filed with the inspector in charge of immigration at New York and later forfeited because of the failure of the bondsman to produce the alien on the date of appearance in compliance with the terms of the delivery bond.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

B. J. SAMPLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8650, for the relief of B. J. Sample.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman that this bill passed the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress, and the facts connected with the claim are as follows:

The Post Office Department advertised for bids based on a mileage of 104 miles. After the bid had been accepted and the contractor had entered the service he found there were 130.6 miles. He reported this to the Post Office Department and asked either to be given additional pay or released from his contract. They refused to do either. The Department at the time they asked for it knew that the route was 130.6 miles.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, since there has been a controversy over this bill, and next time we take up private bills we will have plenty of time to consider the calendar, and in view of the fact we have passed on 65 bills tonight, and this is our second night session, why not adjourn?

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman wait a moment, because I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky will object to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am willing to wait.

Mr. FULMER. This is clearly due this party, because he wanted to resign and they said they would hold his bondsman responsible.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Was not this man a native of the section and did he not know the distance involved?

Mr. FULMER. No; for the reason he based his bid on the advertisement and found out later the exact mileage and then asked to be released.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Is he still carrying the mail?

Mr. FULMER. No; they later canceled the route.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Department report favorably on this bill?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No; they do not.

Mr. FULMER. They did not report unfavorably, but stated that the other administration did not make a favorable report. However, they did not report against it.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much was this man getting?

Mr. FULMER. The route was 130.6 miles instead of 104 miles, and for the time he served the difference amounted to a little over $1,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is the amount involved?

Mr. FULMER. A little over $1,000; yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to B. J. Sample the sum of $1,324.14 for carrying the mail upon star route no. 20183, between Allendale and Augusta, the said sum representing pay for mileage on said route in excess of the mileage advertised by the Post Office Department as a correct mileage of the route.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the amount "$1,324.14", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; and at the end of line 11 insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STELLA E. WHITMORE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 8688, for the relief of Stella E. Whitmore,

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Stella E. Whitmore, of Bloomington, Ill., temporary coupon bonds nos. 2951251 to 2951254, inclusive, in the denomination of $50 each, of the third Liberty Loan 4¼-percent bond maturing September 15, 1928, without presentation of said bonds: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said Stella E. Whitmore shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum equal to the amount of the principal of said bonds, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen and destroyed bonds hereinbefore described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST STATE BANK & TRUST CO., OF MISSION, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 8727, for the relief of the First State Bank & Trust Co., of Mission, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I object until I find out something about this.

Mr. WEST of Texas. This bond was deposited in 1928, a registered bond. It matured September 15, 1928. It disappeared, fell off into the wastebasket and burned, and never has been presented.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill requires an indemnity bond. And it is in the form the Department requested. We have passed a lot of these cases.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. The Treasurer says that it may turn up after awhile.

Mr. WEST of Texas. Yes; but that was in 1928.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. What have you learned about it since?

Mr. WEST of Texas. It was recommended by the committee. It was reported out in 1928. Three years have expired.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I have no objection to it except that I do not want the Government to pay it twice.

Mr. WEST of Texas. There is no chance for that, for the 3 years have expired.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is now drawn exactly in the form that the Treasury Department recommended, and the bill requires a proper indemnity bond to be given.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. If they are going to give bond so that the Government will not pay it twice, I have no objection.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of the First State Bank & Trust Co. of Mission, Tex., United States registered bond no. 89539 for $1,000 of the third Liberty Loan 4½-percent-per-annum bonds of 1928, registered in the name of Alpha G. Decker, with interest from March 15, 1928, to September 15, 1928, without presentation of the bond, said bond having been assigned in blank by the registered payee and alleged to have been lost, stolen, or destroyed in the First State Bank & Trust Co. of Mission, Tex.: Provided, That the said bond shall not have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said First State Bank & Trust Co. shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said bond and the final interest payable thereon September 15, 1928, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the bond hereinbefore described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Obviously there is not a quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, June 2, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.
